If, on the other hand, she is one of those rare girls who still value the advice of their parents, and if the parents have the sense and sensitivity to understand the problem, then they too may be able to help her to find the answer. I know of one remarkable case in which a shrewd father saved his daughter from making a crazy choice, and it is worth telling despite the fact that the father broke all the rules and lied and cheated and bluffed in a manner that neither you nor I would wish to emulate. His daughter was fiercely in love with a handsome young man. The father had no objection to the boy, but at the same time he was convinced that his daughter's love was based upon 100 per cent sex attraction and that otherwise her feelings were not particularly deep. It happened that the young man was called away for a while; and when he had been absent for about a month, the father, coming home one evening and finding his daughter in the living room, sat down, pretended for a while to be reading the evening paper, then suddenly looked up and spoke.

Father: I saw old Archie Swanson today. He said he'd just spent a week up in Manchester and he'd seen your Johnny. Said the boy wasn't any too well at the moment.

Daughter: Why, daddy, what's wrong? He isn't ill, is he?

Father: Apparently he's got a rather bad attack of boils, on his face and neck and down his back.

Daughter: Daddy, it isn't true!

Father: I'm afraid it is. The doctors don't seem to be able to find the reason for it. First they thought it was his teeth and they sent him to a dentist. They extracted about a dozen, including three front ones, but even that hasn't helped the boils. Archie told me he felt very sorry for the lad, he looked such a sight.

Daughter (horrified): His teeth—you mean they took them out?

Father: Oh, yes. He's got false ones now. You'll see them when you get married. He'll

The GOLD STRIPE tells the story!

You always know it identifies the finest nylon stockings it is possible to produce. Insist on Gotham Gold Stripe for enduring beauty, wonderful new colors and flattering fit.

For lovely legs . . . VERVE . . . vibrant, vital light brown to wear with fashion's blond and toast tones. In Friv-O-Lace, with a ring of decorative lace below the Gold Stripe. 45 gauge, 30 denier. If not obtainable at a local store, use coupon.

GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY, INC.
200 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.
GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY OF CANADA, LTD.
DOMINION SQUARE BUILDING, MONTREAL

GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY, INC., DEPT. LHJ5
200 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.
I would like 45 gauge Gotham Gold Stripe Friv-O-Lace* Nylons, illustrated "On A Pedestal." Please send me, through a store in my locality, ... pairs Gotham Gold Stripe Nylons in 45 gauge, 30 denier VERVE, Style 4304, at $1.65 a pair. My size is ..... I enclose Check ☐ or Money Order ☐. (Don't send stamps.)

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

(Coupon orders filled only in the U.S.A.)

*TRADE MARK

Pearl* Lariats

by Trifari

Add an exclamation point to Spring and Summer's deep-diving necklines with Trifari's newest fashion-essential, the lariat of pearls*.

The 24-inch Lariat $12.50, Button Earrings $7.50, Clasp Pin $3.00, Tax extra.

Wear the longer lariat doubled and knotted at the throat. Or choose the shorter lariat, caught with glittering baguette pin.

40-inch Lariat $15.00, Eardrops $12.50, Tax extra.

So typical of Trifari art—the creamy, lustrous pearls* ending in rhinestone-crowned pendant drop. So perfect for gifts, with matching earrings. Found in all fine stores that feature

Jewels by TRIFARI

*simulated

put them in a glass on the washstand every night before he goes to bed—at least he will if he wants to keep them properly clean.

It is a fact that the daughter cried a lot that evening, and it is also a fact that her love for Johnny began to cool from then on. The father, seeing this, and knowing that Johnny would soon be coming back with a spotless complexion and with his own good teeth, confessed all to his daughter and finally managed with great difficulty to convince her that although he was a liar and a cheat, he had nevertheless demonstrated a most important truth; namely, that his daughter's love was of the wrong type. Had it been the kind of love that makes good marriages then it would have taken a great deal more than boils and artificial teeth to shake it.

I personally think that the father's treatment was somewhat dangerous and drastic and not to be recommended, but it does prove a point.

Of course, as everybody knows, there is another way in which two young people can test their love for each other and check their chances of a successful partnership: that is for them to live together for a period before finally deciding to marry. But this is dangerous ground. The method itself, though seemingly sensible and reliable, is not nearly so simple in practice as it looks. Many factors, particularly those of morality and responsibility, are involved. But the question merits serious discussion.

Already, I can almost see the millions of readers of this magazine throwing up their hands in righteous horror at the very mention of the idea; but do not be too quick to denounce it altogether. You, who nowadays hardly raise an eyebrow at the mention of divorce; you, who accept twice-married men and women into your society without a murmur; you, who would have a fit if your daughter were casually to announce that she intended to live for six months with her fiancé to see how it worked out—do you realize that from a strictly moral standpoint there is no difference between this last proposal and that of divorce and remarriage? The difference is a legal and an ethical one. In the case of divorce and remarriage, the person, having obtained legal permission to live with someone, finds it doesn't work out, obtains legal permission to break it up, then obtains legal permission to try again a second time—and a third and a fourth if necessary. In the case of 'trial before marriage,' the person lives with someone else without a legal contract (though it is not necessarily illegal) for a while and then either finds that it works and gets married or finds that it doesn't work and so goes away.

You may drive out human nature with a pitchfork; she will always come back. —LATIN PROVERB.

In marriage, and in marriage only, one is expected to be guided almost entirely by that most mercurial, unreliable, deceptive and powerful thing called love, and by little else, not even by one's parents these days, not even by one's own common sense, for one hasn't got any of that when one's properly and violently in love.

Hence the divorce rate.

Hence the millions of struggling, just surviving, terribly unhappy couples.

Hence, also, the cynicism of some people who know that love exists, who are glad that it exists, but who have learned that it is a wayward and a devilish thing which is not always to be trusted.

Don't be guided by it too much. Don't let it take hold of you completely and carry you away in a rosy swirl of sugary vapor. Don't admire the film stars, either in their public or their private lives. And remember always that it is the quiet little people, the calm ones, the cool ones, the gentle ones, the thoughtful ones, the slow-moving ones, it is they who always seem somehow to succeed in choosing right. THE END

Fashions...yes!

but we never lose sight of COMFORT

Palm Springs $7.95

Dinah $9.95

Bernice $9.95

Just see these fashion-following shoes—now. Better yet . . . try them, and you'll realize how carefully they've been adapted to the foot-following lines which mean wonderful comfort in ENNA JETTICKS always.

ENNA JETTICK SHOES, INC.
Auburn, N. Y.

Some ENNA JETTICK Styles are made in an unusual range of sizes and widths

$7.95 to $9.95

Enna Jettick's

America's Smartest Walking Shoes

Mrs. Anderson in her favorite grays and yellows: flannel skirt, velveteen vest, cashmere sweater

Patio supper: a baby-blue angora sweater with her orange piqué skirt, two-color kid sandals.

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT HER . . .

she makes a fashion of simplicity

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

She's Mrs. Robert W. Anderson, of Bel-Air, California, native in every way to the friendly West Coast state. She was born there, married and had her three blond, blue-eyed children there, lives the enviable outdoor kind of life indigenous to that part of the country. Her name is Gloria, her mother is Gloria Swanson, but she has never had a thought of screen or stage for herself.

Her clothes are effortless, uncomplicated, keyed to the climate and her life. She loves flannel skirts and sweaters, cottons that are simple and easy to care for, suits in shantung or light tweeds because there is so much suit weather in California. She markets twice a week in her jerseys or cottons, spends hours with the children, plays tennis and golf, vacations a week or two at a time with her husband in Carmel. She almost never wears a long evening dress, slips into a cotton or an organdy skirt with a blouse or an angora sweater for terrace parties at home or supper at the club.

Her colors are gray and yellow, worn together, and soft blues. A yellow tweed suit was an all-time favorite, put away now only because it is too short. Gloria Anderson has never been a gadget collector, never "tricks up" her clothes, likes a good dress or suit for its simplicity, makes her changes with blouses, now and then a fresh camellia "out of the yard," pinned to a bag or at her neckline. She has taken a course in millinery, wants to make her own hats when she "can find the time."

Coats are casual, tossed in the car, needed the year around. Mrs. Anderson's is usually wrist length, bright red, because it goes with everything. Her wardrobe follows a consistent pattern: skirts, a two-piece jersey, a silk suit and a wool one, a shantung or crepe dress often in a small print, shorts, tennis dresses, cottons for every hour.

Mrs. Anderson and baby, Gloria Brooke (third generation Gloria), called "Brooke."

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOHN ENGSTEAD

Chris, 6½, and Larry, 4, wear navy shorts and white sweaters to a party. Mrs. Anderson's print is beige silk shantung.

White piqué for tennis, with striped wool blazer, and her husband's monogrammed handkerchief.

The short red coat that goes with everything, the indispensable two-piece wool-jersey dress.

Shopping or marketing in Westwood: blue button-front chambray, cotton gloves, straw bag.

Her town suit is oyster-white shantung, worn with a cherry-trimmed straw cloche, straw bag.

Guard the underarms of every dress and blouse with Kleinert's guaranteed† Dress Shields!

Famous shields in all types, colors and sizes—regular and crescent shape. Try the new cap sleeve shields and those for deeper armholes. From 35¢ to 75¢ at your favorite notion counter.

†Read the guarantee on the package

Kleinert's DRESS SHIELDS

Prices slightly higher on the West Coast ®

MENTAL ILLNESS BEGINS AT HOME

(Continued from Page 40)

On woman, by heritage and by her very nature, falls big responsibility for the emotional climate of the home. Many of the onetime roles of women have been lost to her; society has taken over much of the responsibility for the education, the health, the nutrition, even the entertainment of the family. But the job of making the home a place of warmth and encouragement, of love and understanding, is still hers—and because of its far-reaching effects, it remains one of the most important jobs in the world. The tributes to successful mothers and wives are so often repeated as to be trite-sounding in our ears, or are so sweetly coined as to verge on the saccharine. But even as we wince at their repetitive, sugary sentimentality (or sometimes their cynicism), we should not forget that their basic revelation—the importance of woman's influence for better or for worse—remains unchanged.

This does not mean that either marriage or family building is a job women can work at alone. The best equipment for good mental health which a family can get is still two loving partners. A home deprived of the companionship, the interest or the warmth of either of them is only half a home.

Students of human nature vary in their estimate of whether the pattern of behavior is set at five years of age or fifteen, but they all agree that scratch an adult, and you'll find the child. Knowledge, self-control, scope of mind and perspective may come with increasing age, but the ability to acquire them, the attitude toward them, and the acceptance of such growth are formed in the nursery and the living room.

Here, then, is the main arena for the prevention of mental illness—the chief problem facing all of us today. All the laws and treaties we can think of will do us no good if we cannot guide aggressiveness and ambition into constructive channels instead of destructive ones. Peace and civilization must begin at home, with the individual—and the capacity for love begins in the cradle.

The circle between love and mental health, however, is an unbreakable one. The strong and emotionally healthy person loves freely, gives of himself generously, is not possessive—or, in the words of the world's best seller: "Love suffereth long, and is kind." Unsuccessful parents do not purposefully rear their children to unhappiness and frustration; they themselves are the result of confused upbringing with its stresses and strains. It will do little good to lay down rules for any mother to apply to her children, unless she also is helped to conquer her own problems. Children, as is often noted, are inclined to do as we do—not as we say.

MOREOVER, so many rules have been laid down already as musts for mothers that they defeat themselves. A mother today must perforce be a cross between St. Francis of Assisi and Emily Post—or suffer from guilt at her own limitations. Since guilt is hardly a handy thing to have around a houseful of children, it would be far better if mothers whose talents lie in being their own healthy, happy selves would relax and enjoy their children their own way. If this seems continually beyond reach, if the children continually irritate and harass her, she'd better act—but not on her children. She would not willingly expose them to measles—why expose them to neurotic emotions? She must take action to "bring up" herself. Engaged in a civil war with her own emotions, she can be of small service to a child, for anyone who is fighting a battle with himself has little energy left for the happier pursuits of living and loving. If there is a psychiatric or child-guidance or family clinic in her neighborhood, she w do better to take her problems to it r than to involve her children in them there isn't, the nearest psychiatrist, progressive family doctor, may be of

A certain amount of annoyance with children is no matter for alarm, howeve would be unrealistic to suggest that chil are nothing but pure blessings. They i fere with a mother's and a father's pr sional life, as well as with some of their a pleasures, and each additional child adds more strain to the budget. A love which i equal to a degree of annoyance when S goes on a rampage or Johnny picks your night out in weeks to run a tempera would not only be asking too much—it w be unreal and thus, in its own way, unheal

HONEST annoyance, simply and directly pressed and easily gotten over, is one th however; persistent irritation, hostility rejection are another. The emotionally adjusted are made, not born. We enter world dependent on the kindness and lo others, not only physically but emotion From our parents we receive our first kn edge of what people are like, how they how they get along with others, how to pl them, how to get attention from them. even when we are not capable of tying own shoelaces we are already reaching ward and out tow strength and indep ence. It is the pare problem to find middle way betw these two conflict pulls of dependence independence.

The parents wh own needs have n been met, howev will have a troubleso time finding this m dle ground. If a mot takes out on her ch her own need to loved, to be depende her child will be prived, insecure and possibly abnormal. I love-starved widow holds her daughters t close to herself, their ability to branch o and form normal relationships will be stunt Similarly, many sons are encouraged to velop such a close attachment to their mot ers that they are incapable of being husban or of leaving their mothers' sides until one the other of them dies.

Sometimes it seems as if some pare "spoil" their children with coddling and pr ents and dare not thwart them in anythi Such emotion is more likely to be mixed-u uncertain feelings, and even fear, than to love, however. For instance, a mother w stuffed her child with sweets and cook was found to be covering up a basic la of interest by giving food instead of love.

Such extremes in child rearing are the e ceptions rather than the rule, however. F most of us, loving our children swings b tween give and take—and the beast lurkin in the bushes is not complete failure, b rather incomplete success. Here is where knowledge of the way the mind and emotio function can be helpful; here is where pr ventive psychiatry enters the home. Wome have made great strides in bringing up th health standards of the country through be ter physical care of children, better nutr tion, regular medical and dental checkup and through demanding the best there is doctors, hospitals and medicine. This inte est and thought must be extended to emo tional and mental hygiene if we can hope t lower the mental-illness rate.

The greatest single cause of adult emo tional illness is rejection in childhood. Th reasons why parents reject their children consciously or unconsciously, are usuall quite understandable. Sometimes the parent do not love each other enough to accept the ti that a child makes between them; sometime

(Continued on Page 104)

One day President Lincoln was driving in a carriage with a gentleman when they passed an old colored man who bowed low and doffed his ragged hat. Lincoln smiled in acknowledgment of the greeting and tipped his own hat in return. "Why," asked his companion, "should you tip your hat to a nigger?" "Because," answered Lincoln quietly, "I prefer not to be outdone in courtesy by anyone."

—PAUL W. KEARNEY: Toasts and Anecdotes.

t Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trademark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trademark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

Royal Blue

fit for a Queen

...on MOTHER'S DAY!

A—Doric—A distinguished slipper with V-cut flared vamp. In widths AAA to B. $6.00.

B—Joli—Beloved flat with trim bow treatment on vamp. $6.00.

C—Juno—Delicate lattice work vamp lends daintiness to this Cuban heel sling. $6.00.

All slippers come in Heaven Blue, Pink, Royal Blue, Wine, Scarlet, Black, White shimmering satin.

AT BETTER STORES EVERYWHERE

Daniel Green

COMFY SLIPPERS

Made by Master Craftsmen since 1882

(Continued from Page 102)

they are so dependent on each other that a child separates them. Sometimes the child brings too great a financial burden, and the confidence of the parents in their marriage, their home and their family life is undermined. Sometimes there are already so many children that one more seems like too much of a good thing; sometimes a new baby comes along and receives more attention. Sometimes the parents are too immature emotionally to accept the responsibility of children.

Regardless of rhyme or reason, however, when a child feels rejected, the first foundations of anxiety, depression, insecurity and inferiority feelings are laid. Mary K. was a girl whose father left home while she was still an infant; in adult life, she was incapable of trusting any man's love or loyalty. In her anxiety, she gravitated toward the thing she dreaded most—like a beginning cyclist steering in fearful fascination toward a rock. She sought out men who would reject her, or, when she met a man who might truly care for her, she picked fights and provoked him into leaving her. She broke down after she had driven away her second husband; it took two years of psychotherapy to cure her neurosis sufficiently so that she could handle the normal life she desired.

The case histories of most schizophrenic patients in mental institutions today show they never learned to love, which means they never got loved. This type of mental illness is characterized by retreat.

Sexually maladjusted patients also tell a story of lack of love. It is normal for boys to identify themselves with their fathers, and girls with their mothers, as they grow. When they are deprived of the companionship of one parent or the other, their natural tendency is deflected. Sometimes a child loses a parent through death or divorce; many more children, however, lose one parent or the other through his or her lack of interest.

Other examples of inferiority feelings which grow out of rejection may be found among unmarried mothers, whose desire for mother love may take the form of imitation; in promiscuous girls, who may seek attention they never had; or in boy criminals who may crave revenge for the hostility of fathers or mothers who didn't want them.

The need for accepting, outgoing love and respect is believed to be born with us. Even during the first year, children are likely to suffer from frustration and insecurity if their needs for food, sleep and attention are not met. A few hospitals have even gone so far now as to experiment with placing children with their mothers from the day they are born, to see if it builds up a feeling of be ingness even during the first few days o As children grow, the ability they sh meeting new situations, new people an responsibilities will reflect the amount ceptance that they have had at home. is why child psychiatrists look at ch failures in adjustment—temper tant lying, thievery, daydreaming, shyness, ing and fighting—as symptoms of poor tional health, rather than moral defect

Sometimes rejection appears to a ch exist where actually a rather fearful an sessive love holds sway. This is true in where parents are strict and demandi their children in a belief that only by disciplining can they do their best for t One man who ran his office staff like a chine attempted to run his family the way. He laid down rigid rules of beh and punished those who did not obey t As the eldest son grew older, he began a revolt which culminated finally in his ning away. For years he was steadily cessful, but when an important business failed, he was demoted. His desire for p and independence was so deep-seate couldn't take it, however, and he flew i rage. A breakdown followed.

Persistent harshness, rigidity, con whippings and other physical punishm serve as emotional outlets for parents rarely achieve anything but immedia pression and future revolt in the child. of us who revolt against authority a volting against the first authority we kn and the degree of irrationality in our will be in direct proportion to the unre ableness of that first authority.

We have sketched briefly the three st est causes of emotional instability as it out of childhood experience: overprote ness, rejection, and domination. Basi this evidence comes, not from the file o psychiatrist but from many: from Dr. neth Appel, at the Philadelphia Insti and Dr. Leon Saul, at Temple Univer from Dr. Dallas Pratt, of the National M Health Foundation; from Dr. Willia Menninger, of the Menninger Founda But finding precise rules of thumb for a ing such attitudes is a much more dif task. The difficulties of parents in han their own children go back to their childhoods, and the difficulties their pa had in rearing them. Each situation is i idual; each problem worthy of deep st

Moreover, parenthood is particularly ficult today because of the complexity o general strata of life. Once children we

(Continued on Page 106)

"He has twenty-four grapes and I have only twenty."

Dreams of plenty to wear come true...with White "Magic"

There's no need now to deny yourself the exciting new round-the-clock wardrobe you've been wanting. The magic of the White Rotary makes fine sewing unbelievably easy! You can create glamorous new evening gowns, style-smart street wear and gorgeous play clothes—all with the professional touch that will amaze your friends. Best of all, your White Rotary will point to new ways to save on children's clothes, on draperies and slip covers. You'll even do tedious mending and darning by machine, in a fraction of the usual time! See this new sewing magic, in decorator-styled cabinets that blend with your loveliest room, at leading department stores and White dealers.

SEW—EASY WITH THESE FAMOUS WHITE FEATURES

Speed and accuracy come easy with White's exclusive feed. Stitches are held smooth and straight on all four sides of needle. Stitch length and tension are instantly set by easy-to-read dials—no guesswork, no puckering, no snapped threads. Exclusive reverse lever action instantly reverses sewing direction without stopping. For back-tacking seam ends, for mending and darning. Dresses shown are made from following patterns: Formal, Simplicity Pattern 2814; Dress, McCall Pattern 7531; Blouse, Butterick Pattern 4616; Skirt, Butterick Pattern 4792; Play Dress, Advance Pattern 4820.

White
ROTARY SEWING MACHINES
Since 1876

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

CABINET MODELS AVAILABLE IN MAHOGANY, WALNUT, MAPLE AND BLOND

Darling, we'd like to put our charms around you

You'll have a lovely feeling about your Warner's bra—for the lovely feeling it has about you. With Warner's magical 3-Way-Sizes you can choose your cup size, your band and just the uplift you want.

While you're being "pick-ticular," you'll be amazed at Warner's many styles. They come in everything from soft-sturdy broadcloths to light-lovely nylons in the most luscious colors this side of the sun. Whether your purse is penny-wise or princess-size, you'll find a Warner's price to fit.

Among 300 styles and sizes: Warner's nylon Alphabet bra #2287, white, blue, pink, black, $2.50

1 Your choice of cup size

Ever have a skimpy "B" flatten you back into the "binder look" of the flapper 20's? Or maybe you're an in-betweenie and the "C" that comes closest is wrinkled and unsmooth. In Warner's ABC sizing you choose from not 3 but 6 cup sizes—one just right for you.

2 Your choice of band.....

Whether you like your bras with no bands, narrow bands, deep bands or elastic bands, your Warner's will fit smoothly, comfortably all 'round—with none of the binding or under-the-arm spread you find in standard sizing.

3 Your choice of uplift..

You'll find a Warner's bra that cups your curves to perfection. From their dazzling array of beautiful bras you have your choice of fabrics and designs in styles that lift-a-little to those that lift-a-lot. At finer stores everywhere.

WARNER'S
3-Way-Sized
Foundations and Bras

WORLD FAMOUS FOR LE GASE* • WARNERETTE* "STAY-UP TOP" • ABC* ALPHABET* • "FREE LIFT" A LURE* • REDEEM* *Registered, The Warner Bros. Co., New York 16, Chicago 6, San Francisco 8

(Continued from Page 104)

welcome as money in the bank; they were free extra hands on the farm, an apprentice in the shop, a man Friday in the business. During recent centuries, slowly the individual, in groups and alone, has broken the bonds of tradition which said women should be chattels; negroes, slaves; and children should be seen and not heard. While this sweeping sociological change has its difficulties in adjustment, it also has its rewards. A free individual is a more creative being, a more eager companion, a friendlier person and a more joyous being. Parents, as thinking people, know when they look around them that they cannot raise their children in the old patterns; that they must find new knowledge and new skills to meet new needs.

But there are few places to turn to find such knowledge and skill. For the most part even a woman's education is planned to make a good business success or cultured scholar of her—with little preparation for parenthood. In earlier times, this was not so important: we learned as we grew to care for our brothers and sisters, to look out for the children next door, to help with the drudgery of housework as a matter of course. Today the big family is passing. The easy give and take of a community swarming with kids is on the wane. Most mothers today are shut up with their only child or their two children with no adult around to lend a hand, or an ear, or to give aid and comfort suited to the strictures of family life as we live it today.

One ancient rule, however, holds good. It is the Golden Rule slightly paraphrased: "Do unto others, including your own children, as you would have them do unto you." Honestly adhered to by healthy parents, it is the only infallible guide to bringing up children. It is also a good guide to helping your own health when it is paraphrased to say, "Do unto yourself as you would have others do unto you." Keep up your own mental health by being kind to yourself, by planning for some relaxation, some new interests, some satisfying outlets for your emotional steam, by enough sleep, and finding time to do the things—like loving your children—that you really want to do.

At every step, the child needs understanding. In infancy, this usually means physical care, given generously when the child wants and needs it. As he grows, protection must be tempered with encouragement toward independence: life must be presented to him in real terms—fables like that of the birds and the bees may help you out, but they'll be of little help to him in his learning to adjust his animal needs with the social mores of the time and place he lives in. In adolescence, he still needs understanding, but not so much protection; the greater his independence at this period, the greater his strength.

And when in trouble do not be afraid to seek help, either for yourself or for others. If Junior breaks a bone, you'll take him speedily to a doctor without any guilty feelings that you ought to be able to set it yourself, or that his accident reflects on you. If he flunks out of his group, lies, steals, turns hoodlum, mopes continually, can't make friends, or shows other signs of maladjustment, try to get help for him. Go to a psychiatrist yourself first to find out what you can do, but don't neglect his small problems now, or they may be big ones before you know it.

There are two other spheres in which a woman plays an important role in the mental health of others. One is with her husband, whose emotional health must be considered in part a responsibility of a wife. It is she who forms the focal point of his personal life—or fails to. It is she who sends him forth into the world each day cheerful or disgruntled, as the case may be—and brings him back in the evenings with willing or lagging steps. It is she who, more often than not, determines how he will spend his leisure hours; she who decides the amount of beauty, of comfort, of pleasure and relaxation in his life. A wife today, in our free society, has immense control over the home, and it is part of the burden of such privilege that she should

FEET HURT?

Ask for BLUE-JAY FOOT AIDS and get quick, sure relief

RELIEVE CALLUSES!
BLUE-JAY Callus Plast relieve painful pressu medication quickly hel remove callus.

SOOTHE TIRED FEET!
BLUE-JAY Foot Powder duces perspiration and odorizes, is soothing, co ing.

RELIEVE BUNION PAIN!
BLUE-JAY Protect-O-Pa for bunions are soft, cu ioning, reduce pressure, f tion.

EASE PINCHING SHOES!
Cut BLUE-JAY Cushi Moleskin to fit over tend spots. Extra soft, adhesi flesh-colored.

RELIEVE ARCH STRAIN, FATIG
Get BLUE-JAY all-elas Arch Lift! 100% more eff tive than ordinary ban

GET GREATER CORN RELIEF!
BLUE-JAY Corn Plasters instantly relie shoe pressure pain. Nupercaine*, excl sive with BLUE-JAY, curbs surface pai Gentle medication loosens hard "core"- you just lift it out in a few days. G BLUE-JAY Corn Plasters today—on sale drug counters everywhere.

NATIONAL FOOT HEALTH WEEK MAY 21-2

Sponsored by National Association of Chiropodist

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Ciba's Brand of Dibucaine

For more serious foot ailments, see your chiropodist

BAUER & BLACK
Division of The Kendall Company
Chicago 16

BLUE JAY FOOT AIDS

Elizabeth Arden introduces Eye-Stopper

the only eye make-up pencil with the perpetual point!

ELIZABETH ARDEN—perfectionist that she is—gives you the perfect eye make-up pencil... EYE-STOPPER!

Beautiful... everlasting as a jeweler's piece, with its golden-banded case.

Maintains a pin-point tip... the real secret of perfect eye make-up.

Trouble-proof... for Eye-Stopper has its own sharpener cunningly concealed yet mechanically simple.

The Result: for the first time, your eyebrows can be shaped or etched in perfectly, yet softly. And lashes underscored almost imperceptibly.

The crayons come in black, dark brown, light brown, and a beautiful blue.

Start using EYE-STOPPER today. Ask for it at your favorite store $2.25

2 refills for .75 (plus taxes)

Elizabeth Arden

learn to use this power wisely for her family's total good. It is also to her advantage. Even those who rail against the disadvantages of marriage do not look forward to widowhood—yet at sixty every other wife is a widow.

Sleeplessness, digestive difficulties, hives and jumpiness are a few of the physical symptoms of emotional strain. If it's temporary or mild, a listening ear or a change of pace may be helpful. Nightmares, deep depression or continued periods of anxiety may demand more expert help. To get a husband to go to a psychiatrist, however, requires some finesse; usually the only way to manage it, if he does not suggest it himself, is for the wife to go first, and then appeal to the husband to go simply to aid in giving the doctor some information.

The other emotional responsibility which often falls upon women is the mental hygiene of older members of the family. The errors in this field usually are the result of the extremes of neglect and too much coddling—just as they are with children. Both extremes, of course, stem from a lack of understanding. Old people do have certain frailties which must be taken into consideration: their reactions are slower; their bones break more easily; they may acquire a certain tightening of the muscles and skin which

When Thoreau, the naturalist, was close to death, he was visited by a very pious aunt who asked, "Henry, have you made your peace with God?"

"I didn't know," was Thoreau's reply, "that we had ever quarreled."

makes them look withdrawn and often ill-tempered. But far more lose their grip on the world because they are pushed in a corner, than do simply because of old age. They retreat to the past because no future is considered possible for them; they fuss about their own comforts because no one seems to need them. Yet there are countless ways in which their experience can be of help, their gentle, patient hands of use. To encourage them to look to a tomorrow, to find friends, to be of help, to take care of their health, to fortify themselves spiritually—these will make for better mental health for both of you.

We have spoken of the obligation to others, of the need for knowledge and work, but we have spoken only a little about the rewards which lie in broadened understanding and an expanding capacity for love. The goal of all mental hygiene is emotional maturity. It can be sought; it is not a gift bestowed at birth, but is the end product of good living. We all recognize its characteristics when we meet them in others, yet too few of us seek them consciously for ourselves. They include that quality of serene vitality that comes out to us now and again from the people whom we think of as being great, or wonderful, or wise. It is hard to capture in words, but we know emotional security comes not from a life of careless pleasure, or painless contentment, but from the successful harmonizing of the mind, the heart and the body with reality—and the growth of a steady faith in intrinsic life values.

It is finding greater satisfaction in giving than in receiving; it is creating and contributing one's best; it is freedom from fear, and true serenity—and the accepting, adjusting to, and finding some enjoyment in things as they are, not things as they might be. It is peace of mind, joie de vivre—and the true fountain of youth.

And for women there are particular rewards in the steady pursuit of these goals. While men must work with cold, mechanical things, women's greatest challenge is with the stuff of life itself. And as a woman grows, she will find that the things that really count for both her and her husband . . . are the things they can't count.

This is the third in a series of articles on mental health. The fourth and last on what you can do to help the mentally and emotionally ill, will appear in the June JOURNAL.

The holiday
you've waited for...

Rio harbor . . . with Sugar Loaf rising in the distance a glorious luxury cruise to the wonders of South America

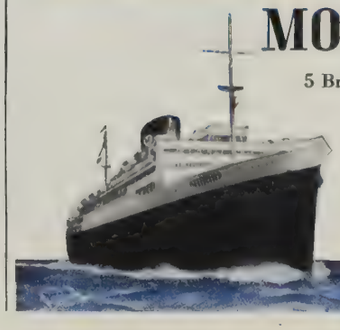
Treat yourself to zestful travel experiences . . . to shore excursions to the excitingly beautiful cities of South America . . . to the superb shipboard comforts and gala cruise activities that await you on the 33,000-ton luxury liners of Moore-McCormack Lines' Good Neighbor Fleet. Whatever the season the South Atlantic is delightful.



Styled in the brilliant modern manner, delighting you with superb American cuisine . . . flattering you with perfect service . . . these ships offer every feature the most demanding traveler could ask for. Complete entertainment and activities programs combine with lazy hours to make this the cruise of a lifetime.

S. S. BRAZIL
S. S. URUGUAY
S. S. ARGENTINA
Sailing Fortnightly from New York
38-day Cruises to RIO · SANTOS
SAO PAULO
MONTEVIDEO
BUENOS AIRES
and TRINIDAD

For Information Consult our Authorized Travel Agents or

MOORE-McCORMACK Lines
5 Broadway New York 4

Offices in:
BALTIMORE • BOSTON • CHICAGO
DETROIT • LOS ANGELES
PHILADELPHIA • PITTSBURGH • SEATTLE
PORTLAND, ORE. • SAN FRANCISCO
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Pretty Summer Sleeper also in Blush, Powder Blue, White. Sizes 32-36. About $11. Pantie also in all Blo all White or Blush or Powder Blue with White lace inset. Sizes 4-7. About Tailored chemise also in Blush,

Powder Blue, White or Black
Sizes 32-42. About $5

Fresh as a Buttercup

TEXTRON SLEEPER OF SHEER NYLON TRICOT

Now Textron brings you summer sunshine—a happy, yellow sleeper in magic nylon tricot. Sheer and light as a butterfly's wing... with all-nylon Val lace edging the yoke, the Peter Pan collar and dainty puffed sleeves. On the brief pantie a misty nylon lace fan forms a dainty inset. Textron tricot of nylon is easy to wash as your nylon stockings... never needs ironing, never clings, bags, sags or shrinks. There's nothing that isn't nylon on Textron tricot lingerie. At leading stores throughout the country.

TEXTRON INC., Textron Building, 401 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

TEXTRO

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

MENSWEAR • BLOUSES • HOSTESS COATS • WOVEN LINGERIE • TRICOT LINGERI

New Career for College Girls

"I would advise my daughter to choose paid housework as a career," says the writer.

Housework is becoming one of the highest-paid, most-privileged occupations for girls with intelligence and taste.

By DOROTHY ENTWISTLE SWENSON

IF I HAD A DAUGHTER with a college degree and no intellectual talents, I would advise her to go into domestic work today. Why? Because two-and-a-half-million students will soon get degrees from American universities and colleges and I, for one, feel concerned about how they are all going to make a living unless they strike out in new paths. The pay for resident housekeepers compares favorably today with what college graduates expect. I can see a new generation of domestic assistants eventually replacing the present servant order; one with a good esprit de corps.

There are not enough openings for teachers, executives, radio and television personalities, journalists, doctors, lawyers and scientists to absorb all the new college graduates. But there are in American homes countless thousands of well-paid jobs for sleep-in domestic workers who have a professional attitude. There are actually 433,000 fewer servants in America today than in 1940, a drop of 19.3 per cent, in the face of an increase in population of 8.9 per cent. Over eight-and-a-half-million families have yearly incomes of $5000 and up, or 21 per cent of all American families, as against 1.6 per cent in 1938. A very large number of these families can afford full-time domestic help, and want and need it.

Best Room is Hers

Discouraged about getting domestic assistance, they are buying new laborsaving household machinery and taking all steps possible to reduce household labor, even eliminating many of the accustomed niceties. They use place mats instead of tablecloths, and often use paper towels and paper napkins. Sometimes they have no curtains at the windows. They sleep on unironed sheets, and put the silver hollow ware into storage. They take their guests and family parties out to restaurants and hotels for dinner, even at Thanksgiving and Christmas. Well-to-do couples are building $40,000 ranch-type houses with only two bedrooms, to keep the housework within the capacity of the lady of the house, who isn't getting any younger. The acquisition of more laborsaving devices and the resulting enormous decrease in heavy, dirty, disagreeable work are all to the good. People are in a mood to simplify and civilize housework.

Times have changed for the servant girl, and changed with a bang. Long years ago her room was cold in winter, stifling in summer. Her work was once really hard and dirty, with brass and copper to be polished by the salt-and-vinegar method, kerosene lamps to be cleaned and filled daily, coal and ashes to lug, fires to make; clumsy ice chests, sinks and washtubs to clean the hard way; no gas stoves, no electricity, no telephone, no year-round hot water, no automobiles, no radio, no thermostats, no frozen foods or packaged mixes partially prepared.

Year after year the tradition of the down-trodden servant girl was building up. Helpless women were exploited because housework was the only work available to them. They were driven beyond their strength, underpaid and pushed around—those Irish, German and Swedish immigrants, colored girls, penniless elderly women, widows with no business experience, and, as farm machinery began to appear, farmers' daughters.

But the job changed for the better some time ago. To keep a good domestic worker nowadays means walking on eggs. The missus isn't half as careful how she talks to her husband as to the girl in the kitchen (the best room in the house). Madam is usually more thoughtful of her than of salespeople or secretaries. She has to be and she knows it.

The maid has discovered that employers of household help are catching on to what makes good labor relations. Employers have learned a household worker likes many things more than money or luxury, such as kindnesses when she is ill. The worker likes to know where she stands; likes to receive an unsolicited pay increase once in a while so she can feel she is getting somewhere, or a bonus if there has been extra responsibility, or a present if there has been extra prosperity around the place to which she may have indirectly contributed. She wants some sort of system in the household, and respect for her time off and paydays. She likes to create. She does well under genuine authority, like students under a "hard" teacher who insists on getting good work out of them. She likes to be trusted, and not immediately suspected if somebody mislays something and thinks it has been stolen. She doesn't like to be driven. She wants to plan in advance and have time to think, even to "sleep on" things, just like the rest of us. Women in the home are becoming more professional as employers and will be able to meet the expectations of the new professional generation of domestic workers.

In case it horrifies the reader to think of a lovely, cherished college girl going of her own choice into domestic work as a financially good and eminently sound career, it is well to note that the transition from campus belle to paid domestic worker has already come about with the emergence of the student baby sitter. Even when she was in high school the college girl probably made as much as $10 a week baby sitting during the summer, from one neighboring family alone. And a fair sum during the school year, for she found she could do her homework while the baby slept. Sometimes, when she suddenly received an invitation to the Princeton game or something equally compelling and glamorous, her own mother substituted for her. And mother enjoyed the television or radio program and nobody lost caste, even though baby-sitting is certainly a form of paid domestic service.

She Can Pick Her Boss

Since the myth persists that domestic work is not desirable, let me give the reasons why I say I would advise even a near and dear college graduate without marked intellectual talents to go into it. The first purpose of a job is to make an honorable living. Domestic work is a very good living today. The high cost of living means little to the sleep-in housekeeper. Food costs may rise higher than a kite, but the missus worries, not the maid. Household wages, which have increased without organized pressure, are completely over and above ordinary living costs. Somebody else has been paying for the maid's milk, bread, meat and eggs, for her soap and sheets, as these have doubled in price. It has meant nothing to the maid that the cost of fuel oil, too, has doubled in the past few years, and that its price jumped so suddenly in the cold early months of 1948 that the employer's budget received a severe and terrible jolt. For another thing, the housing shortage is so acute that many people would be glad to pay an extortionate sum for the paid housekeeper's furnished room and bath, with kitchen privileges, which she gets free.

Because everybody wants her, a maid is in the fortunate position of being able to choose her employer and the type or condition of her work. Does she want a childless business couple, an older couple? Dogs—yes or no? Dachshunds or boxers? The country or the city? The North Side or the South Side,

(Continued on Page 111)

Berkshire's Nylace Kantruns featuring Color Harmonics in Summer Stocking Fashions

Costume by Adele Simpson for Filene's, Boston

Like a lovely mirage, Berkshire's Nylace Kantruns are the sheerest, most fragile looking things you've ever seen on your legs. And yet so satisfyingly strong . . . knitted with the special lockstitch run-resistant loop that makes them last so long. Featured in Faint Echo, the Berkshire Color Harmonic that's cued to both the vivid shades and new pale hues of summer. $1.65 and $1.95.

sheer sheer Berkshire Stockings

© 1943 Berkshire Knitting Mills Reading Pa. For the loveliest legs in the world . . . by the world's largest manufacturers of full-fashioned stockings. Nylace Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

(Continued from Page 109)

Island or Westchester, Park Avenue or illage, or their equivalents throughout ountry? The choice is hers. What is , she can usually confine herself to her specialties. If she is unhandy as a laun-, the laundry may be sent out. If she is to dirt which isn't disturbed by pushing rpet sweeper, a cleaning woman is ght in or the missus gets after the dirt lf.

"he first step in engaging an employee," America's Housekeeping Book, "is to nize that even the best will not do all equally well in the beginning and to de- which jobs you feel are the most impor- in your home. . . . Perhaps clean corners more to you than skillful cooking. . . . aps you need above all other considera- intelligent supervision of your children. u can afford only one helper, select her ding to her ability or training in things matter most to you. You can take over of the responsibilities yourself."

ch is the philosophy of domestic service nerica as we approach the latter half of wentieth century.

is interesting to compare the career of lomestic worker and that of the shop- because the girl who worked in a depart- store a generation ago used to be con- ed a sort of slavey also. Only heaven expected to "protect the working girl." till college girls began to go into depart- -store work, to the great annoyance and liation of their parents, did the social a disappear from jobs in the retail busi-

And though beginner's pay was small a week to the first college contin- in stores), the hours were long, and the got sore, an alert, ed- d girl found so many to make herself valu- as a go-getter that she given more and more nsibility and pay.

ne maid's job is as , or better. It simply 't been "sold" so well as retail and other The maids have been sitting pretty e others have struggled with high costs bad housing. The maid eats the same as the family, and they respect her gies. Often she plans the meals and eat what she likes. If she'd rather not uniforms, her employer doesn't insist; if she wears them, they are usually sup- l free of charge. Sometimes, when the she meets ask her what she does for a g, she tells them she scrubs floors and don't believe her. She is well dressed, ingernails are long and polished, she has nanents in good beauty salons, and has air styled often. She looks carefree. She n't show her age. Her main expense is lothes to wear on dates. If she is handy, as time to alter, mend, clean and even e many of these herself. Sleeping in, she n't spend hours and energy in commut- She doesn't have to do her marketing linner eaten at home after a long day at office, and do her personal laundry and housework at night or on Sunday.

money earnings of the domestic ker have changed miraculously for the er, the same as her living and working litions. A hired girl got only $1 or $2 a the year the sewing machine was in- ed, in 1846. In the memory of middle- l people today her pay was once only $3 ek. As recently as 1935 and 1936 a fam- n New York City or its suburbs could loy experienced help, male or female, for a week, although $75 a month was con- red standard. During the war years, in petition with high wages in war-produc- plants, any family lucky enough to keep r domestic helper had to give her an in- se, and $25 to $30 a week became cus- ary pay in or near cities. It is since the that the wages of household help have ly soared. For a sleep-in houseworker in v York City and the fashionable suburbs, money earnings now vary from $25 or a week, which is rare, to $40, which is mon, and keep on climbing to $50 a k, depending on the demands of the job and the desperation of the employer. And this money is over and above living expenses, which are included in the job.

How does pay for domestic work compare with that for other jobs—secretaries' jobs, for instance? Secretaries for important people are sometimes not paid as much nowadays as their bosses pay their housemaids. This is true particularly when the executive is a woman, as so often happens these days; a woman with children, who has no choice, if her home is to run smoothly, but to pay whatever she is asked for maids, nurses and governesses. Baby nurses? Ah, there's a job! This field is so far from crowded that a good baby nurse is courted, pampered, cherished and remunerated accordingly. There has been an increase of 28 per cent since 1940 in the number of families in which both husband and wife work for a living.

WHAT about factory pay? In December, 1948, factory pay set a new high of $55.10 a week. This was the average for a 40-hour work week. But the amount which could be saved by the industrial worker, in view of high prices, may very well have been nothing at all. What about teachers? The minimum salary for teachers in the state of New York, for instance, is $2000 a year, which for purposes of bill paying is $38.46 a week. And in New York City, where teachers enjoy one of their highest pay scales, the starting salary is $2500 a year, or $2700 if the teacher has a Master's degree, usually representing five years of college preparation.

No wonder so many educated people are advertising for domestic work these days. In Canada it is common practice for schoolteachers to take household jobs during their summer vacations. In the "Household Situations Wanted—Female" columns of the New York Times, Sunday, September 26, 1948, an "ex-kindergartner" advertised for a job as a baby-sitter, a "college student" for room and board and a small salary for after-school care of children, a "college-trained, experienced cook and housekeeper" to do the marketing and get the dinners. On October 22, a young woman of 28, with a daughter 8, advertised for a job as housekeeper in a motherless home. She offered a "college education" and was "cultured and competent." Another ad read: "Widow, aged 31, daughter 3; can't combat inflation; seeks secretarial, nursemaid or housekeeper position anywhere with family. Offer full benefit of my experience and intelligence." Such applications are doing much right now to raise the social status of paid domestic work. And since the percentage of older people in this country is on the increase, a number of ads like the following mean hope for a woman as she grows older: "Wanted, a young woman under 40, care 6-year old boy attending school 9 to 3. Other help kept." A woman is "young" for a long time when it comes to housekeeping. And 40 is by no means the limit. As women grow older and become widowed, as their children set up their own homes, housekeeping for pay may offer a real opportunity for a well-paid late career.

The new generation of college-trained domestic assistants would not have to go it alone in maintaining and improving today's standards. Household-employment committees working on standards in 19 cities throughout the country recommend all or most of such modern labor benefits for the maid as paid vacations, pay according to skill and responsibility, ample and definite time off scrupulously observed, and definite hours of work limited by agreement. Also a private room attractively furnished more as a sitting room than as sleeping quarters, with adequate heat, light, ventilation and bathroom facilities. Some provision is to be made for the entertainment of her friends in a dignified way. There is to be access to a well-lighted entrance. On four nights a week, including those nights which go with her afternoons off, she is to be free to go out. Time off is recommended, too, for four of the eight main holidays—Thanksgiving,

A modest man is usually admired—if people ever hear of him.
—ED HOWE.

LOUIS FAURER—HAT BY MR. JOHN

At one store in your city . . . or write for name of nearest retailer AND FREE fashion folder in color. Handmacher-Vogel, Inc., Dept. HJ 1, 512 7th Ave., New York City

Only Real Mayonnaise is good so many ways!

So rich and pure, you can thin it, vary it, serve it as a spread, or a sauce. It's so good, so many ways. Unlike "salad dressing," Best Foods or Hellmann's contains no starchy filler . . . doesn't turn watery when thinned or varied. It's rich as only real mayonnaise can be.

HELLMANN'S Real Mayonnaise BEST FOODS

Christmas, New Year's Day, Easter, Lincoln's or Washington's Birthday, Memorial Day, the Fourth of July and Labor Day. Time on call is defined as time when the worker is not free to leave the house, but may rest or follow her own pursuits on the premises, remaining available for emergencies. Overtime is to be compensated for with time off, or paid for at the rate of time and a half. Sick leave of one working day a month is considered reasonable, without deduction in pay or vacation.

Some employers may still find it difficult to adjust their thinking to the shorter, easier work week for household helpers. Such ideas may shock some of them. Reading the Department of Labor Bulletin N. 221, however, would restore their composure and possibly save them a worse shock when they find themselves looking for another maid.

For this is the lay of the land today. The head of a household must now accept the fact that even a well-paid, skilled worker should not be expected to do all the work the family can think up, if this means unduly long hours. The employer's employer—the man the man of the house works for—found out long ago that tomorrow is another day.

The reasons in favor of domestic work may be summed up as excellent pay, good housing, good food, opportunity to save a lot of money, and intangible but real satisfactions which come from doing useful work in pleasant surroundings under good working conditions, and learning valuable skills.

These advantages can apply to the part-time, live-out domestic worker too. Provided with a crisp, pastel uniform as trim and pretty as those worn by the waitresses in the town's leading restaurant or drug-store, she can set her own pace as to earnings and working hours.

> A diehard is a man who worships the ground his head's in. —BILL STERM.

Of course there are disadvantages to domestic work. Before a college graduate makes this choice of a profession, these should be weighed against the disadvantages of other kinds of work. The first thing that comes to mind is that a social stigma has somehow become attached to the housekeeper's job. It is certainly disappearing. During the war paid houseworkers, formerly regarded from a point somewhere down the nose, were received in the best shops like duchesses. Loss of prestige has already been found to be an illusion as college girls have gone into other jobs which were considered to have this taint.

Can a girl be as independent as she likes when she lives in another woman's house? Perhaps not entirely. But she will probably find she has more freedom than if she lived in a rooming house, and much more than she had in her college dormitory. As a self-supporting person in work which has no adequate supply of applicants, she can make her own terms if they are reasonable. In many homes the paid housekeeper has a feeling of complete independence fully comparable to that of the business girl. If she comes home now and then at five in the morning, no questions are asked.

Are the hours too long? This is a matter on which she can and should have a complete understanding. There is a lot of hopeful talk about the 40-hour week for sleep-in domestic workers, talk seldom accompanied by set schedules with a realistic approach, though in a few cases 40-hour jobs are already available. It is well the subject of the work week is being thoroughly explored, because housework is never finished, any more than most work, and it is a good thing for an employer to know when it is time to call it a day. Certainly a longer-than-40-hour work week is a fair return for the high rate of pay.

Many of the popular ideas of the disadvantages of domestic work are simply myths. It is largely an exaggeration to assert that domestic work means intolerably long hours, financial insecurity and disagreeable chores; to say that servants "live in" for the convenience of employers; and to claim that industrial jobs offer without question higher status, shorter hours, better pay and better opportunities for advancement. It is that employment in industry is some better regulated and duties more de than in household employment. But industrial jobs do not whiz along like gr pigs. It is true that domestic work i covered by Social Security or by the workmen's-compensation laws as indu employment. Pressure on Congress an state legislatures can fix this.

A complaint often made about don work is the lonesomeness. A girl may the companionable lunch hours of the crowd. The office crowd, on the other may yearn for the warm, generous hu relationship which can be developed bet the housekeeper and the family she work

There is one bad catch in the m setup. She has no place for entertainin friends. The house in which she works i home, and at the same time it isn't. Her comfortable, attractive, completely pri bedroom and bath still do not constitu private apartment. Most houses have one living room, and when the daughte the house have their beaus and parties, the family have to make themselves sc Perhaps the answer to the paid housek er's entertaining problems lies outside home. If pioneering college girls eve go in numbers into domestic work, they probably join clubs or organize new as they did when they first went into partment-store work. The Women's Club of Boston, for example, had mar that first crop as charter members, girls enjoyed extending the hospitality of beautiful old Bulfinch house on Beacon at luncheon and dinner to their men fri

The complaints about loneliness of dome service could be reme if a houseworker were limited in her social tacts to other housekee and the boy friend alon college girl would not

Are women good bosses? Not all. Nei are all men in business. Being a good bo something that has to be learned. But tod danger is that household help may be m spoiled and overindulged than scolded criticized, or treated to displays of ne and temper. As paid housework improve social status—as it is bound to do—and attracts more independent and socially people, the job will be defined more more clearly and there will be little tende for the boss to try to get away with anyth An unpleasant, selfish woman can't kee household worker right now. In fact, lady of the house is the only one left o seven-day work week with no limits to hours or her responsibility. As the housekeeper nears the desirable 40- or hour week it is the "lady" who gets u 6:30 and fixes breakfast.

Talented, beautiful girls will tell you right man would make them forget any reer; meaning, of course, that for him t would do housework without wages for rest of their lives. Given the motivation, ple love housework. When their hearts ar it, they have it well under control, ne seem pressed for time, and exude cheer ness. And nowhere is cheerfulness more portant.

If I had a daughter whom I was advis to go into domestic work as a career, I sho encourage her to do postgraduate work domestic science. I'd feel as proud of as though she had become a teacher o reporter. I should want her to feel glad her job, grateful for its opportunities to le and to give back to society something return for all she had received. She wo find she had acquired in college the men discipline necessary to make for herself a b ter life under all conditions, and to deve her inner resources. Her college educat would be something which never could taken away from her. She would not need feel she was wasting it, for she would fi she needs brains and managerial ability be a good housekeeper, and she would able to develop many of her latent abiliti leave you, Davey—I wish you could come too."

SUMMER'S END

(Continued from Page 37)

She had been his girl almost as long as he could remember, all through high school. People sometimes took them for brother and sister, because they were both tall and dark and lanky, but they did not really look alike at all. Lorrie had soft brown eyes and dimples and a turn-up nose; she was cute, tall as she was.

There was nothing cute about Dave. He had grown too fast, almost to six feet before he was fourteen, and more since, and his features were still too big for his face. On the basketball court he was fast and graceful and beautiful to watch, but away from it he had an unrelated look, as though he had picked the wrong arms and legs out of a grab bag. Only when he smiled you forgot all that. He had the same smile he'd had when he was seven, or before—warm, shy, sweet, the kind of smile that could twist a woman's heart, or a girl's, if she was that perceptive.

He assembled himself now and got up and walked home, down the other side of the hill. Lorrie would be back in a couple of hours. He would know when, because he could see her window from his when her light was on, though their houses were several blocks apart. She would signal to him in the code they had made up a long time ago, and he would signal back, and everything would be all right again; everything would be fun again, the way it had been before this summer.

His mother and dad and Bill, his brother, were sitting on the porch drinking Boston coolers. He looked at them enviously and got himself a glass of water. Sweets made his face break out, and with Lorrie coming home he couldn't take any chances.

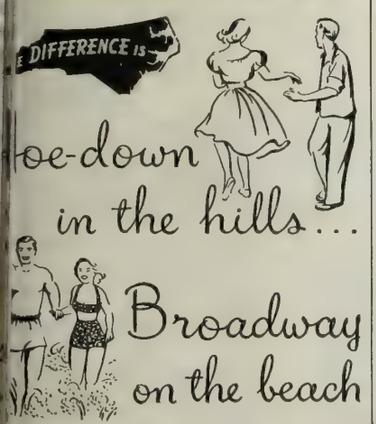
"How was the swim?" his father asked him.

"Swell. Only by the time you climb the hill you're all hot again."

"I don't like the pond at this hour," his mother said. "It's treacherous."

Nobody said anything. There was a time when Dave would have argued with her, told her that he'd been going to the pond at all hours since he was ten, the same as all the other boys, and that nothing had ever happened to any of them. But he knew better now. He knew she wasn't really worried about the pond, that she was just using that to let him see she still watched over him and he couldn't do anything he pleased, even if he was six feet two and graduated from high school.

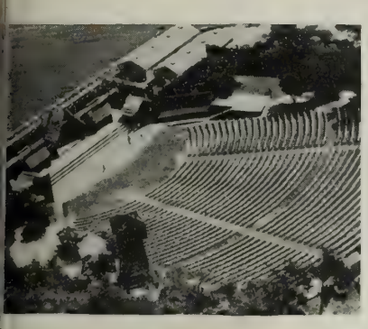
He smiled at her, and she bent briskly to her drink, and his dad winked over her head. Sometimes Dave wished his parents were younger. He was the baby of the family, with a married sister twenty-seven, and his mother and father were gray-haired and settled, so terribly far removed from youth that it was hard for him to think that they could ever have been his age, ever have felt the things he felt. But tonight, at this moment, he thought they were just right. Lorrie was coming home, and everything was fine.



He watched Bill add more ice cream to his ginger ale, and his mouth began to water, but he swallowed hard and looked resolutely away. Bill could eat anything and it didn't matter. He could wear anything, any sloppy old clothes, and girls would turn around and look at him. He was four years older than Dave and three inches shorter, with everything about him in proportion, everything balanced. Dave thought he was wonderful, and would have died rather than let him know it.

"What's the matter, big shot?" he asked him. "How come you're sitting on the family hearth? Don't tell me all the girls got wise to you at once."

Bill grinned. He had one of those deep, even tans that never completely faded, and his teeth were very white in contrast, so his grin was almost spectacular, but it had nothing like Dave's in it any more, nothing from back when he was seven. Four years made a big difference.



E DIFFERENCE IS—

Hoe-down in the hills...

Broadway on the beach

The LOST COLONY by Paul Green
America's First Mystery Romance
Roanoke Island, July-August

ın comes naturally in North Carolina . . .
ɔm banjo-and-ballad "play parties" at ountain inns and ranches to world fam-ıs theatre down in "Raleigh's Eden."
'onderful highways and handy accom-odations through the East's highest and olest Mountains . . . and along 300 n-packed miles of Coastland. Hike, ride, ance . . . fish, swim, sail—and no props eeded. It's easy to get what you need nd do what you please in North Carolina.
or your guides to more fun for less oney, in casual Carolina, Mail Coupon oday.

Come to North Carolina

WHERE NATURE MAKES THE DIFFERENCE

D-5 Dept. of Conservation and Development, Raleigh, North Carolina
Please send me free color booklet and vacation guides.
prefer ☐ Mountains ☐ Coast
Name_____
Address_____

FROM THE SKY TO THE SEA

SPRING BLOSSOM CAKE

Make a quick 'n easy budget cake with an instant cake mix (like Swans Down's, for example). Then give it blossom beauty with this luscious Baker's Coconut frosting!

2 egg whites, unbeaten
1½ cups sugar
⅓ cup water
2 teaspoons light corn syrup
1 teaspoon vanilla
1½ cups Baker's Shredded Coconut

Prepare according to frosting directions on your Baker's Coconut package (either style) and tint it cherry-blossom pink with vegetable coloring. Spread on cake and drift with tender-fresh, blossom-white Baker's Coconut. Arrange spring blossoms on top of cake.

Turn a budget cake into a luscious beauty with BAKER'S COCONUT

SPRING FEVER on a budget? Baker's Coconut can help you splurge for a song.

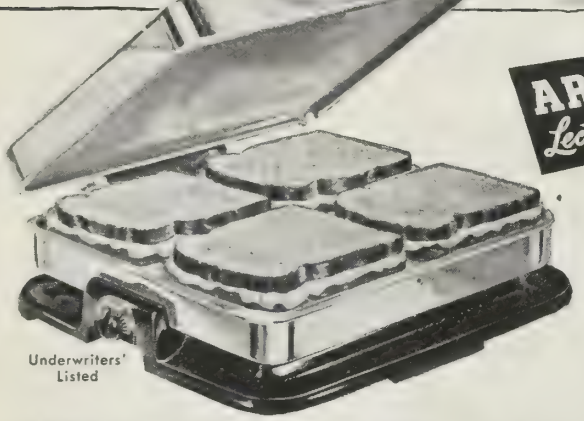
Make a budget cake—with a mix, or with only one egg, or with layers you buy. Then spread it with pink icing—shower it with lacy, blossom-white Baker's Coconut—and parade the most luscious, most glamorous cake ever!

Tender-moist, flavor-fresh Baker's Coconut also glamorizes thrifty puddings, cookies, fruits. Buy coconut goodies, too—in bakeries and food shops.

• New Recipe Book! Get "Coconut Glamour Desserts." Send 10¢ to Baker's Coconut, Box B59, Battle Creek, Mich.

Products of General Foods

COCONUT BANANA PIE. Prepare your favorite coconut cream pie filling. Cool. Cover bottom of baked pie shell with banana slices; add filling. Top with whipped cream. Sprinkle with Baker's Coconut and garnish with banana.



STRAWBERRY ORANGE AMBROSIA. Arrange alternate layers of orange sections and whole strawberries in sherbet glasses or serving bowl, sprinkling each layer with Baker's Coconut; add sugar to taste. Chill well before serving.

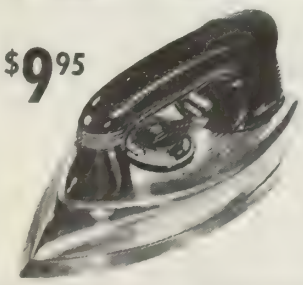
Arvin gifts

Proudly given!
Joyously received!

ARVIN Electric Cook *

Grills! Fries! Bakes! Toasts!

Underwriters' Listed



ARVIN LECTRIC COOK $22.95
America's most versatile cooking appliance!

Brides and mothers and wives thrill to the beauty and convenience of Arvin Lectric Cook! The perfect choice for any gift occasion! Cooking area equals three 10-inch skillets—big enough for 16 hamburgers; 8 pancakes, or 4 full size toasted sandwiches! Quickly converts to automatic waffle-baker making 4 generous waffles at a time! *Arvin Grids for converting into waffler, $5.

AMAZING NEW ARVIN DUAL-CONTROL $12.95
Ends guesswork ironing!

Arvin Magic Watchman tells you when heat is right. No more risk of scorching with a too-hot iron! No more effort wasted with a too-cool iron! Extra long 8-foot cord, easily reversible for right or left-hand ironing; double thumb rest. Light weight; fast heat; bevel-edge soleplate for "buttons and bows." Underwriters' listed for your safety.

$9.95

ARVIN AUTOMATIC ELECTRIC IRON
Cuts ironing time!

Light weight, less effort; even heat does the work! Dependable plain-view heat control for all fabrics. Fast heating, fast step-down, saves ironing time. Cool, comfort-grip handle. Safety-locked cord. Underwriters' listed. A truly modern iron at a money-saving price.

Noblitt-Sparks Industries, Inc., COLUMBUS, INDIANA
• Also Makers of Famous Arvin Radios and Heaters

"I'll bet you won't believe it, shrimp," he said, "but when you've been around as long as I have, you'll appreciate a nice quiet evening at home with the folks now and then." He looked at his mother and father in the way of the older son laughing with them a little at the younger. "You'd be surprised at the things they know."

Dave rearranged his long legs and stared at the tips of his outsize shoes. The dullness, the heaviness of the summer was settling down on him again—the feeling of nothing to do and no place to go. Even here on his own porch, among his own folks, he did not really fit. There were the three of them together, understanding one another, and he was the other one, the young one. Once that had given him the benefit of special consideration and tenderness, but he was too big now.

"Well," he said. "Well, I got things to do."

He wanted to be alone, to think of Lorrie and try to regain the sense of eagerness and excitement that had felt so good to him after the long time without it. Bill would just have gone, quickly and yet with ease and grace, but Dave always talked to people longer than he meant to, and stayed places longer than he wanted to, because he hadn't the knack of breaking away.

By the time he got up to his room, he was in a panic for fear she was already home and he had missed her signal, but all the windows of her house were still dark. He sat down to watch without turning on his light, and almost at once his heart began to pound again.

Tomorrow he and Lorrie would go for a swim in the pond, and it would be the way it used to be. She would splash water in his face and he would duck her and they would race to the dock, with him holding back a little so as not to beat her by too much, and if nobody were around he would kiss her before they climbed out of the water.

He could close his eyes and know just how it was to kiss Lorrie in the pond, her lips cold and wet for a second and then warm, her shoulders cool and slippery and firm as a boy's under his hands, and the clean smell of her hair with the hot sun on it. He had kissed a few other girls, usually at times when he and Lorrie had quarreled about something and weren't speaking, but it had never been the same. Other girls got silly, or angry, or too mushy, but Lorrie was just right.

He watched her house, and he saw all the lights blaze at once, in her room and in all the other rooms. He waited a long time, but she did not signal. Then he blinked his own light on and off, saying "Hello," and waited again, and presently her light went off and stayed off.

She was too busy, of course, just coming home from all summer away, having to get settled and everything. She couldn't rush up to her room and start sending him messages right away. He was a dope not to have realized that. He would wait a little while and then he'd drop over for a minute, say hello and make a date for swimming tomorrow, and leave. He wouldn't intrude, her first evening home. They'd have all day tomorrow.

He was crazy to see her, and yet he didn't go for some time. He sat there in the dark, listening to the steady, monotonous humming of the crickets. That meant it was going to be hot again tomorrow, but there wouldn't be many more hot days.

The summer was almost over. In another week, school would open. And all the dumb freshmen at Gaynor High, gleefully misdirected by the upper classmen, would be turning up in all the wrong classrooms. And in Latin V there would be some guy who'd had that phony interlinear of Cicero palmed off on him, and when he got up to recite some very free and flowery translation, everybody in the back of the room would yell, "Ride him, cowboy!" And after a while the basketball season would start, with practice every afternoon, the shouting voices sounding strange and hollow in the big gym, and the rhythmic ping of the ball dribbled down the floor, the crack of it against the backboard and the swish through the net, and the smell of the locker room, the damp cement under the showers and the sweat.

FOR EXTRA RICH BROWN DELICIOUS GRAVY

Use KITCHEN Bouquet

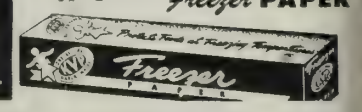
Here's the gravy secret good cooks have known for over 70 years—Kitchen Bouquet offers the easy, never-fail way to get extra rich, brown, delicious gravy! Kitchen Bouquet adds no artificial flavor — simply steps up true, rich meat taste. Helpful recipe folder with every bottle.

KITCHEN BOUQUET



KVP Paper Meats
Shelf Wax Dusting
Freezer
Cookery
Parchment
Pie Tops
Kaleidoscope
Fancy Waxed
Baking Cups Pressing Parchment
Plate Mats
PARCHMENT, MICHIGAN

Juicier, Tastier FROZEN MEAT

Wrap meat for freezing with KVP Freezer Paper . . . and retain the juicy flavor for keeps! Prevents freezer-burn and mottling. No. 1 choice of frozen food locker plants. Put KVP Freezer Paper on your shopping list.

KVP Freezer PAPER

SUZIE . . . MOMMY'S RIGHT! 3-IN-ONE STOPPED THE SQUEAKS!

1 or 3 Oz. Cans

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

3-IN-ONE OIL

TM REG U.S. PAT. OFF.

KEEP BABY SNUG AND SAFE with Ducky Blanket Fasteners

IN NEW GIFT BOX FOR HOME USE

Ducky clips lock securely; will not tear sheet or blanket. Safe, practical; made of sanitary plastic. Packaged one pair in smart, clear-plastic gift box that does double-duty at home as handy little container for baby's pins, rattle, etc. At dealers everywhere . . .

$1.1

FEDERAL TOOL CORP.
CHICAGO 12, U.S.A.

ot up, finally, and turned on the light nbed his hair. He'd had a crew cut for nmer, but now he was letting the top because Lorrie didn't like it short—d it made him look like a tough guy. mined his skin for pimples, and rubbed after-shaving talc over a couple of ed spots, and then scowled briefly into rror at the jutting bones of cheek and d nose in the narrow face.

on the street, he walked slowly, not g why he did not run. When his r Bill overtook him, a short distance he house, he was somehow relieved. ing anyplace special, shrimp?"

ah. Over Lorrie's. Come on along." laughed. "What's the matter? Can't ndle your own women?"

re, but she just got home and I only o stay a minute. If you're along it will etter, like I just stopped in on my way lace with you."

rimp, you have an intricate mind," id. "No matter how long I try, I can't to it."

e could see what he meant, because imes he couldn't get on to it himself. dn't know why, for instance, he wanted ith him now when he was going to see for the first time in two months. He know why he felt the way he did, un-rtable, almost afraid, though it was orrie, his girl from way back, and he'd looking forward like anything to her g home. It didn't make sense.

kay, come on," Bill said. "I want to o you anyway."

hat about?"

y walked together, the sound of brisk eps punctuated by the shuffle of loafers y slapping the pavement.

out what you're going to do this year," aid. "Go to college or to work or what. olks are wondering."

don't know," Dave said.

ell, you've got to know, kid. It's Sep-er. You've had all summer to think t it."

don't know," Dave said again. "Leave lone, can't you?"

I kept quiet and walked along, and after nute or two Dave said in a less sullen . "There just doesn't seem to be any-: I want to do." He kicked at a pebble ent it skittering into the gutter. "I wish s last fall and I was just going into senior at Gaynor."

Don't talk like a baby," Bill said. "You're guy now. You have to make up your about the future, not moon around it last year. Heck, I thought you were ed to get out of that place."

ell, he had been. "Gaynor Galleys," 'd called it, and graduation night they'd all gone back after the last party and yelled things at the empty building about being free at last, and sung a parody of the school song, something about, "four long years of slavery within thy nauseous walls." It wasn't that. He didn't really want to go back.

"I'll be okay," he muttered. "You don't need to crowd me. I'll be okay."

"Sure you will," Bill said.

"Aw, stop sounding like grandpa, humoring the little kid. You're only four years older, you know, not forty."

"That's right," Bill said. "Well, I guess I'll shove off."

Dave grabbed for his arm. "No, wait, Bill, I'm sorry. I just get like this sometimes, you know." He gave his gentle, appealing smile. "Don't walk out on me now. We're almost there."

Bill shook his head a little, but he went along. He couldn't figure out why Dave wanted him. Dave couldn't figure it out himself, except that now that it was so nearly time to see Lorrie he felt strange and shy. Maybe if she had signaled to him when she got home it would have made a difference—it would have been more like old times. He knew she must be terribly busy. Still, he wished she had signaled.

Her mother opened the door. She shook hands with both of them and smiled and asked them in. Usually she just said, "Oh, hello," and called to Lorrie, "It's Dave," and went about her business, leaving him to get inside and close the door behind himself. Of course this formality was because Bill was along, but it added to his sense of strangeness.

They went in and sat down on the sofa, and Lorrie's mother left to tell her they were there.

"This is crazy," Bill whispered. "Why don't I get out of here?"

Before Dave could answer, Lorrie's heels clicked on the stairs and she came into the room, holding out a hand to each of them. "Dave—Bill—how good to see you again!"

Most summers she got almost black, because she had dark skin to begin with, and her hair got wild and curly from all the sun and water. In the faded jeans that were her usual costume, she looked like a boy, her arms full of bramble scratches and her shins bruised. When she dressed up for a party or something, she seemed a little unnatural and self-conscious, and Dave had always liked her better in jeans or shorts or a bathing suit.

But she was dressed up now, and it suited her. She had on something white and soft and her skin was not too dark against it, just a deep, glowing tan, and her hair was smooth and shining and close to her head, with reddish lights in it that he had never noticed before. He had always thought of her ". . . beat up a half dozen eggs and now—oh! I'm sorry, my time's up."

Fresh-Shucked Flavor

LOOK FOR THE GREEN GIANT ON THE LABEL

It's months away from shucking time and miles away from the old home farm, yet Niblets Brand whole kernel corn always holds that right-out-of-the-garden flavor. Breed of seed and packing speed—there's your answer. Off the ear and into vacuum cans while still fresh, tender, sweet and young. Fresh-shucked flavor without the shucks; corn-on-the-cob without the cob. Speak out for golden Niblets Brand whole kernel corn and don't take less for an answer.

Listen to the Fred Waring Show on NBC every Friday morning for the Green Giant

Niblets BRAND WHOLE KERNEL Corn

Minnesota Valley Canning Company, headquarters, LeSueur, Minnesota; Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ont. Also packers of Green Giant Brand peas.

© MVCCo. "Niblets" and "Green Giant" Brands Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Make Evening in Paris a part of you...

YOUR PERFUME is as important to your charm as your perfect make-up, your shining hair, your exquisite clothes. Make Evening in Paris an always-present part of your loveliness. Remember, daytime, evenings and always, Evening in Paris weaves a magic spell . . . and life can be much more exciting when you wear it!

SCENT SECRET: Put a drop of perfume on your palm . . . smooth it over your hairbrush . . . then brush the fragrance through your hair.

GIFT SECRET FOR MEN: The most gracious gift of all is Evening in Paris. She will love it!

Evening in Paris

BOURJOIS

Perfume . . . 75¢ to $12.50
Eau de Cologne 65¢ to $1.50
Bath Powder $1.25
All Prices Plus Tax

as lanky, but the term did not fit any more. She was tall and slender, and when she moved toward them and held out her hands like that she looked . . . beautiful.

"It's good to see you," Bill said, giving her his brilliant smile, "and I can't say again, because I've never seen you before in my life."

She laughed, not a breathless, shrieking giggle, but softly. "What are you talking about, Bill? Is it a riddle? You saw me last in June, when Dave and I graduated."

"Not you. Some long-legged little girl with your name, but not you."

She laughed again and turned to Dave, tilting her head at him in a way he remembered, and yet differently. "You haven't said a word, Dave. What's the matter?"

He answered, "Nothing," and though his voice had changed a long time ago, it cracked now exactly as it had when it was changing. He wanted to say something smooth and clever, like Bill, and all he could say was "Nothing," in a cracking voice.

He felt Bill squeeze his arm. "I have to run along now, Lorrie—I was just walking by with Dave and I thought I'd drop in and say hello. Be seeing you!" And he was gone with a little salute, easily, the way he knew how.

Dave stood in the middle of the room, looking at Lorrie. "Well," he said. "Well——"

"Don't you want to sit down, Dave?" she asked him, smiling a little.

He sat, arranging his long legs neatly, only to have them slide away from him, sprawling across the floor. She took the chair opposite, and the folds of her dress fell gracefully as she sat, and her hands were quiet in her lap.

"You've changed," he said.

"Oh, Dave, it's only been two months."

"But you're different. You heard what Bill said."

"Bill doesn't know. He's hardly ever looked at me. I'm just wearing my hair a new way, that's all."

"Maybe," Dave said. "Maybe that's it." He shifted his legs and flexed his arms, looking down at his big-jointed fingers. "I waited in my room for your signal. I saw when you came home, but you never ——"

She made a soft little sound of distress. "Oh, Dave, I forgot—I never thought—with the excitement of coming home and everything; I just never realized you'd be waiting, expecting—well, you know, it was something we did when we were kids and I didn't think you'd still ——"

"That's all right," he said. "You don't have to get upset about it. I just had an idea you might think of it—sort of as a joke, the way people do sometimes with kid stuff." He sat forward now, letting his arms dangle between his knees, staring at the floor. "Want to go swimming in the pond tomorro asked. "The water's better now t been all summer."

"I'd love to," she said.

All at once he felt better, easier. T Lorrie, just Lorrie, his girl, and to they were going swimming togethe pond the way they'd been doing eve mer since the year they started high Nothing was changed. It was only th hadn't seen each other for two mont she was wearing her hair a new w looked prettier. There certainly wasn thing wrong in having your girl look p

"Gosh, I've missed you, Lorrie," h "Nothing's been the same around h summer."

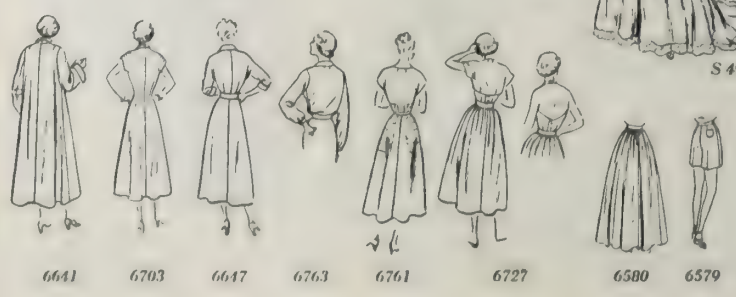
"It looks just the same to me," sh "It looks wonderful." Her brown eye large and bright. "That's a good thing going away. When you come back, seems so swell."

He wanted to ask her about the pe home, whether they seemed swell, to looked wonderful. He wanted to as she'd know he meant himself. But he c get it out. Bill would have known just say it, making it sound natural and r mushy, but he didn't know how. The that were so fine in his head, almo poetry sometimes, would sound silly said them. Even that about missing h sounded silly.

"Well," he said, "I guess I'd bett

He didn't go, though. He got up an there. He walked across the room and out the window and muttered som about how quiet the street was, and t came back and said he hoped it would b day for swimming tomorrow, and he t ten in the morning was about the best before too many kids came. He wante gone—he wanted to go home and sl that tomorrow morning would come soo but he couldn't go. Other people did simply, just saying good-by and leavin for him the business of breaking away a seemed to become tremendously compli

But Lorrie finally released him. "I glad you dropped by," she said, "and looking forward to tomorrow."



He walked home without elation, f dissatisfied with the visit, dissatisfied himself. He had not thought that a se tion of only two months could make h strange with Lorrie, so awkward. But i morning, down at the pond, everything w be all right again. He had improved his a lot this summer, with nothing to d work on it, and he would be at his best way he always was in the water or o basketball court. He would be strong swiftly moving and at ease, and Lorrie w

---

Back and Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Vogue Patterns on Pages 52 and 53.

Vogue Design No. 6641. "Easy-to-Make" coat; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 6703. One-piece dress; 12 to 18, 30 to 36. 60c.
Vogue Design No. 6647. One-piece dress and scarf; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 6763. Blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 42. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6761. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 6727. Halter, skirt and bolero; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 6580. "Easy-to-Make" skirt; 24 to 32 waist. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6579. "Easy-to-Make" shorts; 24 to 32 waist. 40c.
Vogue Design No. S-4993. Bride's or bridesmaid's dress (poke brim included in the pattern); 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.00.

S 4993

6641 6703 6647 6763 6761 6727 6580 6579

DENTISTS SAY:

Colgate Tooth Powder with the 2-minute routine
Gets Teeth Sparkling And Super-Clean

OVER 4,000 DENTISTS APPROVE THIS EASY WAY TO GET TEETH NATURALLY BRIGHT

1. Simply brush teeth for two minutes, morning and night, with Colgate Tooth Powder.
2. Brush all three surfaces—front, back, and biting edges.
3. Always brush away from the gums.

REMOVES DULL FILM—THAT IMPROPER CLEANING MISSES!

Watch dingy film disappear quick, from between and behind teeth, with this easy routine. Your teeth get naturally shining clean—and breath is "romance-clean", too. Colgate Tooth Powder's tangy flavor refreshes the whole mouth.

SWEETENS the breath! Colgate Tooth Powder keeps you "kissable".

No dentifrice can get Teeth and Breath cleaner!

let him kiss her, and it would be the same as ever.

Bill was up reading in the room they shared, and when Dave came in he put the book down and asked, "Well, how did you make out?"

"All right," Dave said. He had no inclination to discuss it with Bill, the way he had once discussed almost everything with him. "What are you reading?"

Bill ignored the question. "She's turned out mighty nicely," he said. "How old is she now, anyway?"

"Who, Lorrie?" Dave was a little startled at Bill's interest, and rather pleased. Bill had always made fun of Lorrie and him before, called Lorrie "that kid with all the legs," and asked him why he didn't pick something that looked more like a girl. "She's eighteen," Dave said, "the same as me."

Bill smiled. "Oh, no, shrimp, not the same as you," he said, and yawned. "Well, let's turn in."

The day was one of those terribly hot ones you can get in September, the last fierce blast of a dying summer. Dave's shirt was sticking to him before he got halfway down the hill, and he thought with pleasure of how good the water would feel, and that the heat would be an excuse for staying a long time. Maybe Lorrie would even bring lunch, the way she sometimes did, and they would go back into the grove in their wet suits and eat in the shade—peanut-butter-and-catchup sandwiches and hard-boiled eggs, chocolate-marshmallow cookies and bottles of pop that had been cooling in the pond.

We may not be always rewarded for our deeds, but we are usually sure to be judged by our misdeeds.
—MAURICE SWITZER:
Meditations of Marcus O'Ralius
(Kelly-Springfield).

All at once he felt so good that he let out a yip and began running down the hill, hot as it was. Everything was perfect. There wasn't anybody in their part of the pond, just a few small boys swimming without suits in the cove—he could hear their shrill voices and get a glimpse of a pair of skinny legs now and then when one of them dove from the big rock. It didn't seem so long ago that he had been swimming there himself, dog-paddling breathlessly and belly-whacking from the rock—and yet in another way it seemed forever since then, like a dream that had never really happened.

He got undressed in the bushes, and had just emerged in his trunks when Lorrie came down the path. She was already in her suit, a suit he had never seen before, just two brief pieces, bright red, with a short white terry-cloth coat over it, and he saw that she was swinging a white bathing cap in her hand, though he had never known her to wear a cap before. Her hair was as smooth, as perfectly groomed as it had been the night before when she was dressed up, and she was the same even golden tan all over, without a scratch or a bruise.

"Hello," Dave said, and then turned away and yelled over his shoulder, "I'll race you into the water!"

He ran and plunged in, without waiting for her to catch up to him the way he usually did, and when he came up, gasping and shaking the water out of his ears, she was in too. She had the cap on, imprisoning her hair, and she was swimming almost lazily, without her customary strenuous pulling and kicking.

He swam in front of her, showing off his crawl, and when he had finished she clapped her hands a little and said, "That's good, Dave—that's fine—much better than last summer."

He came back toward her slowly, the happiness draining out of him. What more could she have said? He hadn't expected that much. He had thought she would kid him. "Well, aren't you something, Johnny Weismuller? Keep on practicing and one of these days

(Continued on Page 119)

IF YOUR HAIR LOOKS LIKE THIS →

WHEN IT SHOULD LOOK LIKE THIS ←

don't use greasy pomades, brittle lacquer or sticky hair oil...

"Suave" your hair

Your beautician will tell you there's nothing else like Suave to make hair miraculously obedient . . . whisper-soft, kissable . . . starry-bright . . . Keeps every tress perfectly in place, and safe from parching sunlight. Rinses out instantly. It's the amazing, new cosmetic for hair that outsells ALL women's hairdressings! Greaseless—not a hair oil. No alcohol! For the whole family. At beauty shops, drug and department stores. 50c and $1

"The cosmetic for hair"

Helene Curtis Suave

COOL, COLORFUL JEWELS!

LUXURY FRUIT WHIP . . . A dash of imagination and the rich sunny flavor of wonderful, wonderful Orange Jell-O transform a thrifty bit of canned fruit into this lavish lovely!

1 package Orange Jell-O
2 cups hot water
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ cup drained canned fruit salad or fruit cocktail

Just dissolve Jell-O in hot water. Add lemon juice. Chill 1¼ cups of the mixture until slightly thickened. Place in bowl of cracked ice and water and whip with rotary egg beater until fluffy and thick like whipped cream. Pile in serving bowl and place in refrigerator.

Chill remaining Jell-O mixture in the bowl of ice and water, stirring occasionally. When slightly thickened, add fruit. Pile lightly on top of whipped Jell-O. Chill until firm. Makes 6 servings.

TANGY SUMMER SALAD . . . Excite lazy appetites on a warm day with this cool, green dream of a jellied salad. Lime Jell-O's "locked-in" flavor assures a tart and tantalizing tang!

2 packages Lime Jell-O
3¾ cups hot water
2 tablespoons vinegar
2 teaspoons grated onion
1 teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
½ cup sliced scored cucumber
1 cup cottage cheese
¼ cup finely diced green pepper
¼ cup finely diced carrot
¼ cup finely diced cucumber

Dissolve Jell-O in hot water. Add vinegar, grated onion, salt, and pepper. Turn 1 cup of mixture into 10 x 5 x 3-inch loaf pan and chill until slightly thickened. Arrange cucumber slices in mixture. Chill until firm.

Chill remaining Jell-O mixture until slightly thickened. To 1½ cups, add cottage cheese and diced vegetables. Turn onto firm Jell-O in mold. Chill until firm. Then pour remaining 1¼ cups of Jell-O over cheese and vegetable layer. Chill until firm. Slice and serve on crisp lettuce with mayonnaise. Makes 8 to 10 servings.

TOT'S PARTY TREAT . . . High spot of a youngster's party: shimmering, ruby-red Jell-O, each serving topped with a cooky . . . each cooky topped with a young guest's name!

1 package Raspberry, Strawberry, or Cherry Jell-O
2 cups hot liquid (fruit juice and water, or all water)
Decorated cookies

Just dissolve Jell-O in hot liquid. Turn into sherbet glasses and chill until firm.

Make icing by creaming 1½ teaspoons butter with ½ cup sifted confectioners' sugar, 1 tablespoon cream, ¼ teaspoon vanilla, and dash of salt. To spell out children's names on cookies, force icing through a paper cornucopia. Place a cooky on each serving of Jell-O. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

JELL-O IS A REGISTERED TRADE-MARK OF GENERAL FOODS CORPORATION

(Continued from Page 117)

really be able to do that crawl." In- she had applauded him and told him it ne, and he wasn't satisfied. What was atter with him, anyway?

hen he got up to her he reached out ly, before he could think about it, and d her head under. She hated to be d. She would come up spluttering mad plash water at him furiously, and he l grab her wrists and kiss her.

t she only rubbed the water out of her and shook her head a little and said y, "You know I don't like to be ducked, ," and there was nothing to do but tell e was sorry, feeling dumb and clumsy wful.

ey swam around a little more, and then climbed up on the dock and lay in the She hadn't brought lunch, so he knew ould be going home before very long, hey still hadn't really said anything to other at all. He tried to think of the s they had talked about before she went , but he couldn't remember.

hool starts next week. Won't it seem not to be going back to Gaynor?"

r eyes were l and her thick smade long shad- on her cheeks. anted to kiss her than he ever had ore, but he n't, and he didn't why.

couldn't imag- ing back now," said. "It's like thing that hap- l ages ago, in an- life."

at was the way ad felt about ming in the cove, t had been years e then. High ol had been only past year, a le of months ago. 'd like to go ," he said, and ed, because it 't anything to and besides, he ght strangely his voice was go- to shake. "It d be fun," he added after a minute, "to what the old place looks like when you you don't have to go any more."

e sat up and clasped her arms around egs and looked off across the pond. "I t want to go back," she said. "I don't to go back to anything. There's too ahead."

ere was the sound of footsteps on the behind them, and Bill appeared on the in his bathing trunks. Dave had for- n that his brother had been stopping here for a quick swim on these hot , when he came home for lunch from . He couldn't have known Dave and ie were here—yet Dave felt an unreason- nger at sight of him.

Well, hello, you two!" Bill said. "How's water?"

RIE smiled up at him, pushing the hair from her forehead. "Wonderful," she "It will make a new man of you."

don't know," Bill said. "That might ppoint some people who like the old one."

e grinned and gave that little salute of and dove into the water, without any icular skill yet easily and cleanly. He n a few strokes and then climbed out stood with the water glistening on his n, compact, well-knit body, letting the dry him. And Dave hated him. It was final touch of awfulness, that he should his own brother.

How's the advertising business, Bill?" ie asked him.

Well, it's very broadening. Yesterday I a piece on neckties, and today I'm ex- ng the virtues of a stacker hood for ers."

"What on earth is a stacker hood?"

Bill looked at her. "You wouldn't really want to know, would you?"

"Yes," she said. "Yes, I would. I want to know all sorts of things."

Dave closed his eyes. He pretended to go to sleep, and after a couple of minutes they lowered their voices. He could not hear what they were saying, but he could hear that they talked on and on, and laughed, and that there seemed to be no end to it.

FINALLY he could stand it no longer, and it was as though a wound-up spring inside of him uncoiled and propelled him away from there, sent him, hastily dressed again, running along the path. When Bill caught up with him, Dave's breath was coming in long sobs, as though he had been running for hours, though it was only a minute or two.

"What's the matter?" Bill asked him, and then used his name for the first time in years. "What's the matter, Dave?"

"You!" Dave gasped. "Haven't you got enough girls of your own?"

Bill stared at him. He put out his hand to touch Dave's shoulder, but Dave jerked away. "Listen," Bill said softly. "Listen, what's the matter with you? Do you think I'd—— I'm your brother, Dave." He frowned and shook his head, as though trying to clear it. "I was just talking to her, that's all—just talking to her."

Dave stood there, and the anger and the hatred faded and all he felt was loneliness.

"Sure," he said. "I know. I was only kidding."

"Well then," Bill said, grinning, "go on back there and talk to her yourself."

Dave shook his head. "No," he said. "You go. I haven't anything to say to her."

He went on up the hill without looking back. He stood at the top, in front of the high school, for a long time, until two girls came from the back of the building and began pointing to the windows and arguing about something. After a minute one of them called out to him.

"Isn't that the library, where those two tall windows are?" He said it was, and the girl said, "See?" to her friend, and then turned and looked at him.

She was a redhead, with bright blue eyes and a button nose and legs that were too long for her.

"We're freshmen," she said. "At least we will be when school starts next week. Do you go here?"

"No, not any more," he said, and then added, before he knew the words were in his mind, "I'm starting at State College the end of the month."

"Oh!" the girl breathed. "You're a college man!" She turned to hear something her friend was whispering, and then looked at him again, harder, and said, "Aren't you Dave Bannon?"

When he smiled and said he was, she said, "Oh!" again, in that same awed voice, and then her face flamed as red as her hair and she and her friend ran giggling across the lawn to the path.

Dave looked after her for a minute. She was a funny little kid, but when she grew out of the gawky stage she'd probably be all right. In about four years, when she was eighteen or so, she'd probably be quite a dish.

Oh, he thought, you're a college man!

He settled his shoulders back a little and went briskly toward home, not shuffling his feet, whistling softly to himself. THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Garments

By Laura E. Detwiler

Music and moonlight and flowers;
these three Were robes that you wore with such fluid grace
That their lovely witchery dazzled me
And lent a radiance to your face,

Till I watched you stand one day in the rain,
From music and moonlight and flowers apart;
Then I saw at last you were thin and plain,
And I knew that I loved you with all my heart.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

There's no finer tuna in all the world!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

SCALLOPED TUNA
only 15c a serving!

Star-Kist packs only the smaller, milder tuna fish. These smaller tuna are tender, finer-textured and naturally make your recipes taste better. Try Star-Kist Scalloped Tuna. Once you taste the difference, you'll choose Star-Kist every time!

STAR-KIST SCALLOPED TUNA

4 cups thinly sliced potatoes
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
¼ cup flour
2 tablespoons prepared mustard
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
2 cups milk
1 7-oz. can Star-Kist Fancy Solid Pack (or New Chunk Style Grated) Tuna
1 cup thinly sliced onions

Boil potatoes in salted water for ten minutes. Drain. Meanwhile, melt butter in saucepan, blend in flour and seasonings, add milk gradually and cook over low heat, stirring until smooth and thickened. Arrange potatoes, tuna and onions in alternate layers in greased 2-quart casserole or individual casseroles. Pour sauce over all and bake in 375° F. oven 45 minutes. Serves 6 to 8.

Buy Solid Pack or Chunk Style Grated
. . . Star-Kist quality is the same!

FREE TUNA RECIPE BOOK: Mail coupon below for 24-page booklet filled with exciting, kitchen-tested tuna recipes. Illustrated in color. You'll want to try these new ideas soon!

Star-Kist Tuna, Dept. 45
Terminal Island, Calif.
Please send me FREE, a copy of the Star-Kist Tuna Recipe Booklet.

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ Zone____ State_____

Make him happy

Make it Lemon!

Easy, Quick...with the new

Pillsbury PIE CRUST MIX

and Fresh Lemons

Here's homemade lemon pie that's sure to make you the light of his life. You can't miss when you make it with the new Pillsbury Pie Crust Mix. (Recipe on package.) Light, flaky, rich-flavored crust plus the delicious tang of Sunkist lemons in the filling . . . and so easy. Nine full ounces in the package makes two big pie shells, or one big two-crust pie.

Pillsbury BEST Mixes

Tender, "short" crust—the light, flaky kind
Rich flavor of fine shortening
Mixes quickly. Soft, pliable—rolls out easily
Fast—fix while oven heats
Just add water, mix, roll out

© P. M. I.

You and Ann Pillsbury can make a great team

Ann Pillsbury has developed a new pie crust mix in her kitchen to save you time in your kitchen, and give you perfect results every time.

SAVE PILLSBURY EXTRA-VALUE COUPONS

Get valuable articles at real savings on Pillsbury coupon plan. Each Pillsbury package gives you extra value coupons. Write for free booklet to PILLSBURY, Box 150, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Quick & Easys For Two

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

HATS off to those of you doing double duty and doing it well—career girls by day, kitchen Jills after six. It isn't easy, but it's fun. Producing for very little money in very little time a dinner that your partner rates good, if not a minor miracle, is as thrilling as a compliment from your boss at the office. Tie on your apron! Here are more meals as crisp as piqué.

Keepers of the House

Chipped-Beef Casserole
Cucumber Coleslaw
Butterscotch Rice Pudding

A homemaker is a housekeeper plus. Though the plus is most important, every woman knows she has to be a housekeeper before she can call herself a homemaker. An intelligently stocked cupboard shelf is one of the prerequisites. If you're just beginning to learn to make a home, don't leave this very important aid to a meal in a hurry out of your general plan. Always have some "keepers" in the house. You never know when you're going to be called upon to produce a good meal quickly.

CHIPPED-BEEF CASSEROLE

Shred ¼ pound chipped beef, pulling it apart with your fingers. Sauté with 1 onion, chopped, and 1 cup diced, cooked potatoes in 3 tablespoons bacon fat. When potatoes are brown and beef is well frizzled, add 1 can condensed mushroom soup and ½ can water. Simmer until sauce smooths and blends well with beef and potatoes. Pour into casserole. Top with buttered crumbs and bake 15–20 minutes in moderate oven, 350° F.

BUTTERSCOTCH PUDDING

Prepare rice pudding made from 1 package rice pudding and milk, following directions on package. Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine in small skillet. Blend in 2 tablespoons brown sugar and cook over low heat until thick and sirupy. Pour into the rice pudding while hot. Mix and cool. Add chopped nuts or dates if you happen to have them.

Alfresco

Avocado Chiliburgers
Tomato Salad—
Blue Cheese Dressing
Fresh Pineapple

It isn't too early to have a meal on the porch—the portable type you can toss off in a hurry in the kitchen and eat leisurely from trays. You're both fond of hamburgers. You do like to experiment with new ways to fix them. Here's one I can guarantee you'll like if you are at all fond of chile con carne.

AVOCADO CHILIBURGERS

Half pound ground beef will make 2 fat hamburgers. If you can eat two apiece, of course, buy a pound. To ½ pound ground beef, add ¼ teaspoon chili powder, 1 small onion, chopped, ¼ teaspoon salt and a little freshly ground pepper. Mix well and shape and flatten into patties. Whether you broil or pan-broil the patties is up to you, but if you broil them, do try this. Cut a square of aluminum foil large enough to hold the two patties. Ground meat has a way of sticking to the broiler rack, making it hard to turn. Broil it on foil—no muss, no fuss—and you won't have to wash the broiler or a pan.

When hamburgers are about ready for the buns, peel half an avocado. Cut into thin slices, cut slices in half. Split and toast buns. Arrange sliced avocado on one half of each bun. Salt and top with the ground-beef patty and the other half bun. Avocado takes place of butter or margarine. Add a dollop of chili sauce, if that's the way you like it.

Bound by the Budget

Quick Boiled Dinner
Sour-Cream Mustard Dressing
Gingerbread
Apple Topping

You do want some new spring clothes. The sofa really does need a new slip cover badly. You make up your mind to cut corners wherever you can. You start on the grocery bills. Though prices are lower than last year at this time, you could still set your table more economically than you do. You think of the things your mother used to cook when she was in an economy mood. You remember her good boiled dinner, the fragrant hot gingerbread and green-apple sauce. These good things took time that you do not have. But with today's mixes, canned foods and ingenuity, you can have a similar meal and much more quickly.

QUICK BOILED DINNER

Scrub 2–3 small new potatoes. Leave whole. Clean and remove root ends of ½ dozen scallions, scrape and quarter 2–3 carrots and cut ½ head young green cabbage into quarters. Open and slice one 12-ounce can corned beef. Cook carrots and potatoes in boiling salted water until half tender. This will take about 10 minutes. Next, lay the cabbage quarters over potatoes and carrots; next, the green onions; and last, the sliced corned beef. Cover and steam until cabbage is tender. The corned beef, onions and cabbage shouldn't be down in vegetable liquid, but should steam on top of the other vegetables. Serve on a platter, dressed with salt, pepper and a little melted butter or margarine.

Combine 2 parts thick sour cream with 1 part prepared mustard. Serve as a spread for corned beef and the vegetables—wonderful with either.

GINGERBREAD WITH APPLE TOPPING

Bake gingerbread from a mix, following directions on package. Serve warm or cold with apple topping:

Beat 1 egg white till stiff. Add 2 tablespoons sugar gradually—beating well after each addition. Add ½ cup canned or thawed frozen applesauce, 1½ teaspoons lemon juice, a little grated lemon rind. Serve on squares of gingerbread.

Southern Custom

Louisiana Chicken With Rice
Green Salad
Banana Fingers
With Strawberry Sauce

Broilers are more your meal-for-two size than fryers. You needn't consistently broil a broiler or fry a fryer. Here's a way a Southern friend treats either one. It's good, and you can count on this dish as a dinner special all summer long. It's like smothered chicken with a creole accent.

LOUISIANA CHICKEN

Have a broiler or small fryer cut into 4 sections. Wash, and remove tail. Drain. Fry in 3 tablespoons bacon fat until golden brown. Remove from fat and make a roux by blending in 2 tablespoons flour and cooking until dark brown but not burned—stir constantly. Add ¼ green pepper, diced, a little chopped parsley, ¼ cup chopped onion, 2 green onion tops, chopped. Season with 1 teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper and 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce. Add 1½ cups water, a dash of cayenne, a dash of Tabasco sauce and a pinch of thyme. A little more salt may be needed, so taste. Cover and simmer until chicken is tender, about 25 minutes. Broilers won't take long, as they are just about done when you finish frying them. Serve with fluffy rice.

BANANA FINGERS WITH STRAWBERRY SAUCE

Peel 1 banana. Cut in half lengthwise and in half again crosswise. Cream ½ package cream cheese with 1 tablespoon cream until soft and smooth. Put banana pieces together with cheese, sandwich-fashion. Roll in crushed corn flakes or chopped nuts. Serve with sugared, sliced, fresh or frozen strawberries poured over them. Omit the cheese, if you like, just rolling the banana strips in nuts or crushed corn flakes.

Second Appearance

Fish Puff
Asparagus — Browned Butter
Fruit Salad

A saucer of cold leftover fish is never very inspiring. You could cream it—but no, you've done that so many times before. You haven't any mushrooms, or any other elegancies to transform it into a fancy dish. But you do have potatoes and seasonings—the old standbys. You evolve a fish puff—a dish to be remembered when there's cold fish in the refrigerator or a can of tuna on the shelf.

FISH PUFF

Flake enough cooked, drained or canned tuna fish to make 1 cupful. Add 1 tablespoon minced onion, 1 tablespoon minced parsley and a little pepper. Combine with 2 cups mashed potatoes. For speed, use the new potato powder for making mashed potatoes quickly by adding ½ teaspoon salt and ½ cup milk to 1½ cups boiling water. Stir in ½ cup quick mashed-potato powder and beat with a fork or wooden spoon like mad until smooth. To the fish-and-potato mixture add 1 egg beaten light. Reseason to taste. Add 1 tablespoon butter or margarine. Pour into 2 individual or 1 larger greased casserole and bake in a hot oven, 450° F., 15 minutes or until brown.

Since baking-powder biscuits take same time and temperature, you could stir up a batch from a mix and bake along with the fish. The dropped-biscuit recipe on the package is the quickest and easiest.

Broiler Business

Barbecued Ham and Beans
Green Salad
Strawberries in Orange Juice

The next time you're going to have broiled ham and green beans on the menu at the same time, try this:

BARBECUED HAM AND BEANS

Precook 1 package frozen green beans in small amount of salted water until just tender. Drain. Do not add butter or margarine. Slash the fat of a thick slice of raw ham. Place on broiler rack. Brush with 1 tablespoon barbecue sauce (you can buy this ready prepared). Broil until golden brown. Drain off fat in broiler pan. Put green beans underneath ham in broiler pan. Turn over ham slice. Brush with barbecue sauce again and broil on second side. The juices of ham will flavor the beans deliciously.

CANDLEWICK

IS SO ENGAGING!

Candlewick and Candlewick only has that ever visible, round-the-edge pattern that catches the colors of your table setting and reflects all its beauty so brilliantly! A pattern in hand-crafted table crystal as sparkling as an engagement ring . . . and significant of pleasant dining.

When she says "I do . . . I do want Candlewick" buy it for her in fine stores everywhere. Open-stock. Patent-protected pattern.

HAND-CRAFTED BY IMPERIAL GLASS CORP., BELLAIRE, OHIO

THE THREAD THAT RUNS SO TRUE

(Continued from Page 46)

how old I was. I didn't tell him in eighteen more days I would be seventeen. One had to be eighteen before he was old enough to teach school. Don Conway knew the fate of my sister when she was employed to teach the Lonesome Valley school. He knew how Guy Hawkins had blacked her eyes with his fists, had whipped her before the Lonesome Valley pupils. She was a fair-haired, beautiful girl of nineteen when she had come to Lonesome Valley. She went home, a nervous wreck, long before her school year was finished. After I'd seen the way my sister was beaten up, I begged to go to Lonesome Valley. My parents would have none of it. They thought if I went hunting trouble I would get more than my share.

But I made the mistake at Landsburgh High School of going to the wrong room. I'd forgotten the Greenwood County rural teachers were having "teachers' examination" in our American Literature room. And when Superintendent Harley Staggers mistook me for a rural teacher, an idea came to me. I knew the school I wanted if I passed the examination. I made a Second Class certificate. Then I had John Hampton, a rural teacher and friend, contact John Conway and get the school for me. Superintendent Staggers didn't want me to go to Lonesome Valley. But there wasn't anything he could do about it, after John Conway, Lonesome Valley district-school trustee, recommended me. That was why I was here to teach school.

When Don and I reached the schoolhouse, at least thirty-five pupils were waiting outside. Guy Hawkins and Ova Salyers were standing together near the coalhouse with their torn-and-tattered first-grade books. They were larger than either Don or I. They were older than I. They looked at me when I said "Good morning" to them. Many of the pupils turned shyly away and did not speak. They were waiting for the schoolhouse to be unlocked so they could rush in and select their seats. Each had his dinner basket or bucket in his hand. The majority carried tattered-edged and backless books.

The girls wore pigtails down their backs, tied with all colors of ribbons. They wore clean print dresses and they were barefooted. Not one pupil in my school, large or small, boy or girl, wore a pair of shoes. Wearing gloves on their hands in summer was the same to them as wearing shoes on their feet. They just didn't do it.

"Well, I'm opening the door," I said, to break the silence of my pupils.

When I opened the door, they laughed, screamed and raced for the schoolhouse. Their shyness was gone now. There was a mad scramble to get inside the schoolhouse for seats. Often two pupils wanted to sit by the same person. No trouble with Guy and Ova. They walked inside reluctantly and sat down on the boys' side farthest from my desk.

"Let me make an announcement to you," I said, after walking up to my desk. "There will no longer be a girls' side and a boys' side. Sit anyplace you want to."

They looked strangely at one another. Not one boy would cross to the girls' side. Not one girl would cross to the boys' side. In Lonesome Valley it was hard to break a teaching tradition more than a century old. But after I had been to high school, where there were no such things as a girls' side and a boys' side in a schoolroom, I didn't see why it wouldn't work in Lonesome Valley. Little did I dream that what I had said would make news in Lonesome Valley, that it would be talked about by everybody and that many would criticize me and call my school "a courting school." Boys and girls sitting together? Who had ever heard tell of it?

The schedules were not made out for the teachers at the superintendent's office. No one had ever heard of such routine. Each teacher had to make his own schedule. And that was what I had done long before I left home. I knew what I had to teach and I went to work, dividing my time as accurately as possible for my six hours of actual work. I had to conduct fifty-four classes in this time for I had pupils from the chart class to and including the eighth grade.

When I walked down the broad center aisle and pulled on the bell rope, the soft tones sounded over the tobacco, corn and cane fields and the lush green valley; with the ringing of this bell, school had begun. I knew that not half the pupils in the school census were here. There were 104 in the school census, of school age, for whom the state sent per-capita money to pay for their schooling. I had thirty-five pupils. I thought the soft tones of this school bell through the rising mists and over warm cultivated fields where parents and their children were trying to eke out a bare subsistence from the soil might bring back warm memories of happy school days. For I remembered the tones of the Plum Grove school bell, and how I had longed to be back in school, after I had quit at the age of nine to work for twenty-five cents a day to help support my family. If I could have, I would have returned to school when I heard the Plum Grove bell. So I rang the bell and called the Lonesome Valley pupils back to school, back to books and play.

During my first day, all I did was enroll pupils in their classes, call them up front to the recitation seat and give them assignments in the few textbooks they possessed.

(Continued on Page 124)

"Gee, men are all alike . . . each one is different."

It's still the thing to do...

Many a ship returned from China, in 1847, with bolts of snow-white satin to be fashioned into bridal gowns.

It's still the thing to wear white satin on your wedding day. A tradition, right and beautiful, like another observed for a century...

It's still the thing to own...

For over 100 years, American brides have cherished 1847 Rogers Bros. above all other silverplate.

Today the patterns with the yearmark "1847" have an extra high, deep ornament and a perfection of finish usually found only in solid silver.

52-piece service for eight, $64.75, with chest. No Federal tax. Same price as in 1945!

COPYRIGHT 1948, THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER COMPANY, MERIDEN, CONN.

TUNE IN: "THE ADVENTURES OF OZZIE AND HARRIET," SUNDAY, 6:30 P.M., E.S.T., CBS.

1847 ROGERS BROS.

for 101 years
America's Finest Silverplate

Doing over a room?

1. Choose your paint color scheme from the rooms featured in the current month's magazines . . .

2. Ask your Kyanize Paint dealer for a free Kyanize Color Recipe packet.* Each month, it contains easy directions for matching the paint color schemes of the most interesting rooms.

3. Decorate with Kyanize Paints. They do it better . . . easier. Kyanize Paints are self-smoothing, flow on easily, leaving a surface without brush marks. Walls, ceilings, trim and furniture fairly sparkle . . . look just like new. And remember, there is a Kyanize Paint for every surface.

DECORATING'S EASIER WITH Kyanize
Self-Smoothing PAINTS
from Color Schemes to Finished Rooms!

If your dealer is out of Kyanize Color Recipe packets, send 10¢ in stamps or coin with your name and address (please print) to Dept. G-5, Boston Varnish Company, Everett Station, Boston 49, Massachusetts.*

© 1949, Boston Varnish Company

Locked-in-Comfort! adds Years to the life of your mattress

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

The Only mattress with these PADLOK fasteners

They lock cotton layers to the springs, eliminate annoying tufts, keep cotton from shifting into lumps and hollows. No tufting cords to restrict coil action. Here's wonderful comfort that lasts. Ask your dealer. Restonic Corp., Chicago 11.

RESTONIC Triple Cushion Mattress

Also see Restonic Decorator-Styled Sofa Beds and Restonic Flexiform Mattress

(Continued from Page 122)

At that time the textbooks were not furnished by the state. I knew that many would buy books after the tobacco crops had been sold or the cane had been made into sorghum and sold. These were the money crops in Lonesome Valley.

While enrolling my pupils, I made some temporary changes in seating. I often put a pupil without books beside a pupil with books, if they were in the same grade. As I enrolled the pupils, I tried to remember each name. I tried to get acquainted with my pupils. I found them very shy. I was a stranger among them, though I had grown up under similar circumstances with equivalent opportunities. There were approximately thirty miles separating their Lonesome Valley from my W-Hollow. But I was a stranger here.

When I dismissed my pupils for recess, a fifteen-minute period between the beginning of the school day and the noon hour, I was amazed to see them all jump up from their seats at the same time and try to be the first out of the house. Big pupils pushed past the little ones, and there was so much confusion and disorder I knew they would never leave the room like this again. Why were they running? I had a few minutes' work to do before I could join them on the playground. Before I had finished this work, I heard their uneven voices singing these familiar words:

The needle's eye that does supply
The thread that runs so true,
Many a beau have I let go,
Because I wanted you.

Many a dark and stormy night
When I went home with you,
I stumped my toe and down I go,
Because I wanted you.

I walked to the door and watched them. They had formed a circle, hand in hand, and around and around they walked and sang while two pupils held their locked hands high for the circle to pass under. Suddenly the two standing, one inside the circle and one outside, let their arms drop down to take a pupil from the line. Then the circle continued to march and sing while the two took the pupil aside and asked whether he would rather be a train or an automobile. If the pupil said he'd rather be an automobile, he stood on one side; if a train, he stood on the other of the two who held hands. When they had finished taking everybody from the circle, the two groups faced each other, lined up behind their captains. Each put his arms around the pupil in front and locked his hands. The lines began to tug; the first to break apart or to be pulled forward lost the game.

Fifteen minutes were all too short for them to play The Needle's Eye. I let recess extend five minutes so they could finish their second game. It had been a long time since I had played this game at Plum Grove. The words brought back pleasant memories. They fascinated me. And my Lonesome Valley pupils played this game with all the enthusiasm and spirit they had! Not one stood by to watch. Because they were having the time of their lives, I hated to ring the bell for "books." I lined them up, smaller pupils in front and larger ones behind, and had them march back into the schoolroom.

GUY HAWKINS and Ova Salyers were the last on the line. When they came inside the door, Guy asked permission to go with Ova after a bucket of water. We didn't have a well or a cistern at the schoolhouse. We had to get water from some home in the district. I told them they could go, but not to be gone too long, for the pupils, after running and playing, were thirsty. The July sun beat down on the galvanized-tin roof. This made the pine boards so hot inside they oozed rosin. We raised all the windows, but still the place was hot.

I knew the reason that all the rural schools had to begin in July, though the farmers had objected, because they needed their chil at home to help with farm work. R schools began early because coal was added expense for winter months. The co schools all over the state had barely en funds to keep going, and if they could school during the hot months it sheared a great expense from their budgets. B was hard on the children and the teacher

The first bucket of water Guy and brought didn't last five minutes. The ma ity of the pupils were still thirsty. I sent and Ova back for more, telling them to row another bucket. I sent them in a hu And I knew I had to do something about dipper problem. At Plum Grove, too, we all drunk from the same dipper, but wh went to Landsburgh High School I was tau something different.

So I made "an important announceme to my pupils. I told them each had to b his own drinking cup the next day. It co be a glass, teacup, gourd, dipper, just s was his own and no one else drank fro My pupils looked at one another and laug as if my announcement were funny.

On Tuesday they brought their dipp tin cups and glasses. Only a few had for ten and I stopped classwork long enoug teach them how to make paper drinking c I showed them how to take a clean shee paper from a tablet and fold it to hold wa I had my pupils use the dipper to dip w from the bucket into their cups. I also rowed another water bucket from Be Conway and brought it to school.

Tuesday when I stood beside Guy H kins and showed him how to hold his b when he read, my pupils laughed until I to stop them. I was trying to teach Guy read as he stumbled over the simple word the first-grade reader. pupils laughed beca Guy was taller by inches than I was, heavier. He had a b neck, almost as large as head, and a promin jaw. His beard was so hea he had to shave every da Friendship consists in forgetting what one gives and remembering what one receives. —DUMAS THE YOUNGER.

Guy had big hands. His right hand c ered the back of his first reader. And he h powerful arms. The muscles rippled under clean faded blue shirt. I measured him a stood beside him. I knew that I wasn't goi to fight him unless he forced me to fight. was more powerful physically than I was. A the outcome of our fight might depend who successfully landed the first haymak to the other's jaw.

Then I looked down at Ova Salyers sitti on the recitation seat. If it were not for the two young men, I wouldn't have had a trouble disciplining my school. All the oth pupils were obedient. They would have be good in their classwork if they had had t proper training. I had ten-year-old pup just starting to school. Nineteen-year-olds the first grade. Fourteen-year-olds in t second grade. I had one twelve-year-old g in the eighth grade. They had not been p moted because they had never attended full school term.

"Guy, how long have you been in the fir grade?" I asked.

"Oh, about eight years," he laughed.

"You're not going to be in it any longer

"Why?"

"Because I'm going to promote you. T morrow you start in the second grade."

Then I had Ova Salyers read. He had al been in the first grade eight years. I pr moted him.

When these young men sat down again saw them look at each other and laugh a they thought my promoting them was funny I knew they accepted school as a joke. An I knew there wasn't much chance of reason ing with either one. But I had a feeling tha time would come. I didn't believe they wer coming to school for any good.

The following Monday I stayed at th schoolhouse to do some work on my schoo records after Don Conway had gone hom with his sister and brothers. This was th

(Continued on Page 128)

Most popular curtain styles, top to bottom: Cottage Set, Criss Cross, Priscilla; right, Tailored.

Two kinds of decorative and practical curtain fabrics. ABOVE: tailored curtains made from luxuriously sheer Hathaway Nylon Marquisette. AT LEFT: three of the many styles of lovely curtains made from famous Hathaway Dots.

Hathaway Nylon Marquisette is unlike any other fabric. Imagine chiffon-sheer curtains which are long-wearing and easy to launder! They shrink no more than 1% in either direction because of a special process used only by Hathaway.

Hathaway Dots are known everywhere for their crisp, white loveliness, their durability and their purse-pleasing low price. Both the Nylon and the Dots are available in all of the popular curtain styles.

Freshen up your house for Spring with new curtains made of Hathaway fabrics! Write for our practical booklet, "How To Buy Curtains." Address: Dept. L5, Hathaway Manufacturing Company, New Bedford, Mass.

Wish you could fix up your living room?

See what we did for $198 plus a new rug and a plan...

thanks to Alexander Smit

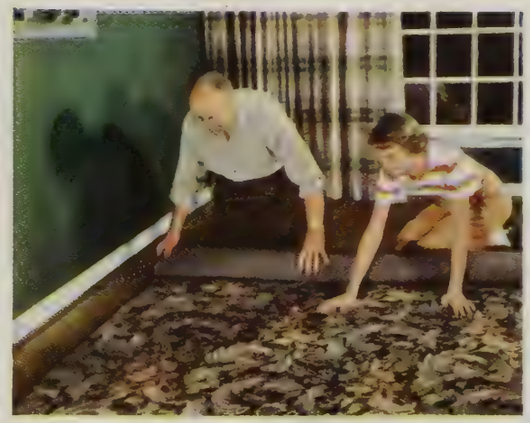
Mary Jean Barnett of Indianapolis tells how the Barnetts dressed up a drab room ...with an Alexander Smith Rug and a decoratin plan from Clara Dudley, your color-scheme consultant at Alexander Smith.

©1949, Alexander Smith & Sons Carpet

See how shabby our room looked! Faded walls. Beaten furniture. No rug. Because we danced our old rug into holes, Mother threw it out. I was desperate then. My new decorating studies at Broad Ripple High made me itch all the more to take away the room's grim look. When Mother and I tackled Dad, he agreed the room needed fixing.

Mother suggested that we begin with our rug. "Jean has learned that all re-decorating should start with your rug," she explained to Dad. The next Saturday we all visited Simpson & Miller's store here in Indianapolis. They had a fascinating selection.

We fell hard for a Floor-Plan Rug from Alexander Smith. One of those marvelous broadloom rugs, ready-made in room sizes so you get the right fit. Our 9′ x 18′ cost $164.50. $32 down and the balance monthly if we wanted terms. The salesman suggested we fill out Clara Dudley's Workshop Questionnaire.



That Workshop Questionnaire brought this personal portfolio. It contained a plan worked out just for us, with actual samples.

We're a team. I helped Dad paint the walls a dreamy dark green, a perfect match for the shade found in the new rug pattern.

…ther sewed like fury. That wonderful … of drapery, Miss Dudley suggested had …humming. We could hardly wait for it!

What a "five-star final" when we rolled the new rug out! Mother agreed with Clara Dudley: a new rug gives your room new life.

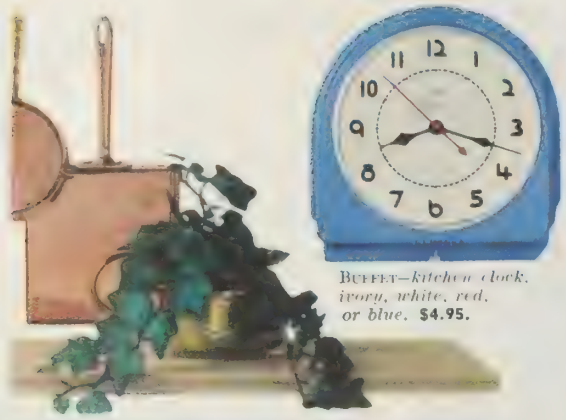
Dad figured the cost of our fixings and admitted it was less than he anticipated. That inspiring Workshop Portfolio helped plenty!

…uldn't you be proud of this room? …lore it all. But most of all, I love the …utiful new Alexander Smith Rug which …ted us off. It's so beautiful, so luxurious …ing. Dad says it's a good investment. …h its all-wool pile, it will last for years. … doesn't it dress up the whole room!

Let Clara Dudley help you! Could you dream the Barnetts could do so much for so little? Why not see what you can do with Clara Dudley's help. Go to your favorite store. Buy your Alexander Smith Rug or Carpet. Ask for Clara Dudley's Workshop Questionnaire. Or mail this coupon…today!

Alexander Smith

FLOOR-PLAN RUGS 1845 BROADLOOM CARPETS



CLARA DUDLEY, Dept. LH-8.
ALEXANDER SMITH & SONS CARPET CO.
285 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK 16, NEW YORK

I enclose 25¢ for your new 24-page color-idea book, "Colorama," showing me the easy way to work out my color schemes on a low budget.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

BUFFET—kitchen clock, ivory, white, red, or blue. $4.95.

SELECTOR—turns radio, and electrical appliances, ON and OFF. $14.95.

LITTLE TEL—alarm, brown or ivory colored plastic. $4.95.

Start them off on time!

CHOOSE FROM THE WORLD'S LARGEST SELECTION—$4.95 and up

Telechron
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
ELECTRIC CLOCKS

Handsome, silent Telechron electric clocks never need winding, oiling, or regulating, and the long-life, self-starting Telechron motor makes them the most dependable electric clocks in the world. Telechron Inc., Ashland, Mass. A General Electric Affiliate.

ALL PRICES PLUS TAX · PRICES AND SPECIFICATIONS SUBJECT TO CHANGE WITHOUT NOTICE

DECORATOR—kitchen clock, colored face, white cut-out numeral band and hands. $5.95.

ARIEL—alarm, clear Plexiglas case, gold-colored metal trim. $25.00.

(Continued from Page 124)

first afternoon I had stayed at school after all my pupils had gone. The room was silent and I was busy working when I heard soft footsteps walking around the building. Through the window I saw Guy Hawkins' head.

I wondered why he was coming back. Then I realized this was the first time he had been able to catch me by myself. And I remembered a few other incidents in Greenwood County's rural schools where a pupil had come back to the school when the teacher was there alone. But I didn't have time to think about them. Not now. Guy came in the door with his cap in his hand. He walked up to my desk and stood silently before me.

"Did you forget something, Guy?" I asked.

"Naw, I've never forgot nothin'."

"Then what do you want?"

"Whip you."

"Why do you want to whip me?"

"I didn't like your sister. You know what I done to her."

"Yes, I know what you did to her."

"I'm a-goin' to do the same thing to you."

"Why do you want to fight me?"

"I don't like you. I don't like teachers. I said never another person with your name would teach this school. Not as long as I'm here."

"It's too bad you don't like me or my name," I said, my temper rising. "I've come to teach this school and I'm going to teach it!"

"Maybe you will," he snarled. "I have you penned in this schoolhouse. You can't get away. I aim to whip you right where you stand. It's the same place where I whipped your sister!"

I looked at his face. It was red as a sliced beet. Fire danced in his pale-blue elongated eyes. I knew Guy Hawkins meant every word he said.

"Will you let me take my necktie off?" I said, remembering I'd been choked by a fellow pulling my necktie once in a fight.

"Yep, take off that purty tie. You might get it dirty by the time I'm through with you."

I slowly took off my tie.

"Roll up the sleeves of your white shirt too," he said. "They'll be dirty by the time I sweep this floor up with you."

"Sweep the floor up with me," I said.

He shot out his long arm, but I ducked. I felt the wind from his thrust against my ear. I mustn't let him clinch me, I thought. Then he came back with another right and I ducked his second lick. I came around with my first lick, a right, and planted it on his jaw, not a good lick, but just enough to jar him and make him madder. When he rushed at me, I side-stepped. He missed. By the time he had turned around, I caught him a haymaker on the chin that reeled him. Then I followed up with another lick as hard as I had ever hit a man. Yet I didn't bring him down. He came back for more. But he didn't reach me this time.

HE was right. I did get my shirt dirty. I dove through the air with a flying tackle. I hit him beneath the knees. I'd tackled like this in football. And I never tackled anybody harder than I tackled Guy then. His feet went from under him and I scooted past on the pine floor. I'd tackled him so quickly, when he had expected me to come back at him with my fists, that he went down so fast he couldn't catch with his hands. His face hit flat against the floor and his nose was flattened. The blood spurted as he started to get up.

I let him get to his feet. When he did, I waded into him. I hit fast and I hit hard. He swung wild. His fingernail took a streak of hide from my neck and left a red mark that smarted, and the blood oozed through. I pounded his chin. I caught him on the beardy jaw. I reeled him back and followed up. I gave him a left to the short ribs while my right in a split second caught his mouth.

"Had enough?" I panted.

He didn't answer. I didn't ask a s time. I hit him hard enough to knoc men down. I reeled him back against a I followed up. I caught him with a maker under the chin and laid him acro desk. Then he rolled to the floor. H there with blood running from his no mouth. His eyes were rolled back. I nearly out of breath. My hands ached heart pounded. If this is teaching school I thought. Then I remembered vagu had asked for it. I'd asked for this sch

GUY HAWKINS lay there sprawled or unswept floor. I went back and got the bucket. With a clean handkerchief, I wa the blood from his mouth and no couldn't wash it from his shirt. I put water to his forehead. He was really kno out for the count.

When Guy Hawkins came to his sens helped him to his feet.

"Mr. Stuart, I really got it poure me," he admitted. "You're some fighte

This was the first time he had ever c me "Mr. Stuart." I had heard, but had tended not to hear, him call me "Old J every time my back was turned. He never before, when he had spoken dir to me, called me anything.

"I'm not much of a fighter until I ha fight, Guy," I said. "You asked for it. I to fight you."

"I know it. I've had in mind to whip ever since I heard you's a-goin' to teac school. But you win. You winned fair I didn't think you could hit like that."

"Think you can make it home all rig

"I think so."

I stood by the wi and watched him across the schoolyard, across the foot log down the Lonesome C road until he went aro the bend and was ou sight. Something told to watch for Ova Saly

The essential charm of good talking rests upon sincerity, spontaneity and the willing revelation of character. —JOHN OLIVER HOBBES.

He might return to attack me. I wa several minutes and Ova didn't come. had come to do the job alone.

I felt better now that the fight was o and I got the broom and swept the floo had quickly learned that the rural tea was janitor as well. The floor was eas sweep. But it was difficult to clean bl from the floor. I carried a coal bucket of s and poured it on the blood and then shov up the sand and carried it out. The scrubbed the place, but the stain was th I could not get it from the oily soft-p wood. I knew this was one day in my tea ing career I should never forget.

News traveled fast in Lonesome Val When I reached Conways' they had gathe in the living room to see me after the fi

"Ova started to go back with Guy," I said, "but I wouldn't let him. I told him fight him all over the road. We waited Guy to come back. He was in a bad sha

Everybody knew Guy was going to f me. And no one had ever seen him beate before. No one had ever seen his nose f tened, his lips bruised and his eyes black This made news.

Before sundown the news of our fight reached The Valley. Not any of the rule cleanliness I had suggested for my pupils, any knowledge I was trying to give th not anything I could do at Lonesome Val would give me the reputation this fight d

Never was any teacher more respect than I was now. Men I had met before the Lonesome Creek road, men who h shyly spoken or had not spoken at stopped and introduced themselves. And fore we stopped talking, nearly everyone s the same thing: that he needed his child at home to help strip cane and cut cane wo and cut tobacco, but he was going to try do the work himself so he could send his c dren to school to me. These words, comi from tall, lean, beardy-faced men who wh they liked and respected you would die you, men who when they hated and despi you would kill you, made me feel good.

(Continued on Page 131)

so right, so bright for upstairs downstairs ...everywhere

Kandell chintz gives every room a new personality ...at surprisingly small cost! There's a fascinating variety of colors to choose from, a wonderful range of patterns. And remember, the making of chintz is an art with Kandell. Only the finest dyes are used, superbly printed on close-woven fabric. So when you look for quality in chintz, plus a permanent washable Everglaze finish—look for the name Kandell on the selvage.

* A trade-mark signifying fabric finished and tested according to processes and standards controlled and prescribed by Joseph Bancroft & Sons Co.

KANDELL Chintz*

FOR THE STORE IN YOUR CITY, WRITE KANDELL, INC., 261 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

Beautiful Venetians

THEY'RE NOT JUST STEEL . . .
THEY'RE ACME GALVA-BOND STEEL

For long-life beauty in blinds, introduce your windows to Venetians of Acme Galva-bond steel. These thin, graceful slats are not just steel but the finest steel of all. They have the strength of steel—and all of its flexibility, too.

Just bend them for quick, easy dusting and see how they snap right back into shape. Their special galvanized, bonderized finish assures you of lasting beauty. Just the right weight, too, for easy handling.

So, choose Venetian blinds to make your windows beautiful, and insist on blinds made for lasting satisfaction with Acme Galva-bond steel slats.

Your choice of beautiful decorators' colors

VENETIANS OF ACME Galva-bond STEEL

ACME Galva-bond STEEL SLATS

Look for this seal when you shop for Venetian blinds

ACME STEEL COMPANY, 2851 ARCHER AVENUE, CHICAGO 8, ILLINOIS

(Continued from Page 128)

I didn't expect Guy Hawkins to return to Lonesome Valley school. I thought his schooling was ended. But when he left the schoolhouse he didn't take his books. I wondered if he would come back to get them and, if he came, would he bring his father or one of his married brothers with him? Would he start another fight? The same thoughts must have troubled John Conway. When I went to school Tuesday morning John went with me.

When we got there Guy Hawkins, with his black eyes and swollen lips, was in a circle with the other pupils going around and singing The Needle's Eye. Guy greeted me: "Good morning, Mr. Stuart."

Then John Conway smiled and turned to go. I watched him cross the foot log and I joined in the game, The Needle's Eye, with my pupils. Guy Hawkins and I were captains. I was the hard-boiled egg and he was the soft-boiled egg. When we took pupils from the line and asked whether they would rather be a soft-boiled or a hard-boiled egg, the majority chose the soft-boiled egg. Guy Hawkins got three fourths of the pupils. And when we formed our tug of war to pull against each other, his side toppled my side. They pulled us all over the yard and everybody laughed. It was great fun. And never did Guy Hawkins or a pupil ask me about the fight. If they talked about it, I didn't know. I did notice them observing the bloodstain on the floor. If Guy Hawkins ever said anything against me to a fellow pupil again, I never heard of it.

That day another thing happened. During the noon hour a big, ruddy-complexioned man of perhaps fifty drove down Lonesome Valley with a mule team hitched to a wagonload of coal. He stopped his team in the shade of a giant sycamore and climbed down from his wagon. He walked over to where I was standing.

"Are you Mr. Stuart? My name is Burt Eastham," he introduced himself.

"Yes, I am," I said, shaking his coal-dusty hand. "I'm glad to know you."

"You wouldn't have any drinking water, would you? I'm a bit thirsty."

"Yes, we have water in the schoolhouse," I said. "It might be a little warm."

"Warm water will wet the throat."

"Then let's go get it," I suggested.

He followed me into the school. I looked into the water bucket. It was half full. He started to lift the dipper to drink.

"Don't drink from that dipper," I snapped. "No one drinks from a dipper here."

He looked curiously at me. "What do you use it for then?"

"To dip water from the bucket into drinking cups," I said. "Wait a minute and I'll make you a cup."

I TORE a sheet of paper from a tablet and made him a paper cup. He dipped the water from the bucket and poured it into the cup.

"I wasn't exactly thirsty," he said, after he had finished drinking. "But I wanted to see the man that whipped Guy Hawkins! That boy came to Upper Lonesome Church one night, and nearly beat my boy to death without any reason. He wanted a fight. He started it with my boy and beat him up. Whipped Les Brown's boy and Booten Tolliver's boy the same night. I wanted to see the first man to whip him. Say," he continued, as he looked me over from head to foot, "you're not such a big man. I'd 'a' thought that you had to be a giant to whip 'im."

We walked out of the schoolhouse, back toward his wagon. He stood for a minute and looked at Guy Hawkins, who was now enjoying himself playing games. I looked at his wagonload of coal.

"How many bushels do you have on this wagon?" I asked.

"Twenty-five bushels."

"You weigh your coal?"

"Nope."

"THEN how do you know how many bushels you have?"

In the meantime, Don Conway walked over to where we were standing.

"Guess at it," Burt said.

"I believe you've got more than twenty-five bushels on your wagon."

"You got any way finding out?"

"Do you know the length, width and depth of your wagon bed?" I asked.

"Nope." he replied.

"Don, run in and fetch the yardstick from my desk," I said.

Don brought the yardstick and did the measuring and I put the figures on paper.

"According to my figures you have thirty-nine and a fraction bushels," I said. "Since your coal is stacked a little higher than the bed, I wouldn't be surprised if you have over forty bushels!"

"What?" he exclaimed. "I've been selling this wagon bed of coal for twenty-five bushels for the past seven years! How can I really find out how much coal I have?"

"Have it weighed down at The Valley. They have scales there."

Burt Eastham, greatly excited, climbed onto his coal wagon and drove down the road. That afternoon, a few minutes before it was time to dismiss school, there was a knock on the wall beside our open schoolhouse door. I went to the door. There stood Burt, his face beaming.

"Thank you a hundred times, young man," were his first words. "I don't know how I can ever repay you. I had forty-three bushels of coal on my wagon. Here," he exclaimed, showing me the waybill.

I called Don Conway from the schoolroom and let him see it.

"Something told me to stop here and take a look at you," Burt Eastham said. "I'm glad I stopped. I've been swindled for seven years. Gee, I wished I'd gone to school."

"You can come here if you want to."

"Too late to start at fifty," he admitted sadly. "Too late when a man is married and has nine children."

His words were worth more to Don than my words, or any other teacher's.

"I've just been thinking, Mr. Stuart, whether you were married or not," Burt Eastham said. "I know you're old enough to teach school or you wouldn't be here. And when you're old enough to teach school you're old enough to be married."

"No, I'm not married," I laughed. "Haven't any prospects!"

"Then I have a prospect for you," he said. "See, I want to do something for you. May Woods, the teacher at Upper Lonesome, is pretty as a speckled pup. She's the right gal for you. If I's a young single man, I'd go for her myself!"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Song for the First Day in May

By Elizabeth McFarland

She is oh, so small and slight
As a rose is white,
My lady.

Barefoot and meek her ways;
Lord, send us gentle days,
I pray thee.

She walks with a country air;
No princess could seem more fair
Nor so mild.

Her scarf of embroidered lawn,
Gaily she dances on—
Like a child.

Here are topazes for her wrists,
Opals and amethysts,
And emeralds green;

Baskets of ribbons and lace,
Flowers to match the face
Of May's queen.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

FOR MODERN—You're really in style with smooth, contrasting woods, daring colors. And the rich Deltox Delfibre Rug makes such a wonderful background in tone and texture. Delfibre colors: green, brown, blue, rose, grey, natural.

FOR OLD FAVORITES—Colorful Pennsylvania Dutch is popular for its warmth and cheer. It looks wonderful against the cool, quiet tones of a Deltox Deltone jacquard rug. Deltone colors: green, brown, blue, rose, grey.

Deltox gives you the smartest rugs at the smartest price!

Here's one place you can beat high prices . . . and do it in style, too! Whatever furnishings you've selected for your home, you'll find a Deltox Fibre Rug that's perfectly suited to them. Modern, traditional, happy inbetween—all find their ideal background in the smart colors and patterns of woven Deltox Rugs. And beauty isn't all you get. Every Deltox has a napless surface that's a cinch to keep clean. They're all built for hard wear, and most are reversible for twice the life! Make a date with your Deltox dealer, and choose the lovely rugs you want for every room in your home—the rugs that save your precious dollars.

DELTOX

less than $20 for many 9 x 12's

*America's smart low price rug

295 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 16

NEEDLETUFT · BEDROOM

crisp and new... thrifty too!

This charming 3-piece Needletuft ensemble redecorates your bedroom for little as $30, stays fresh and new-looking with practically no work. Illustrated, two of several complete ensembles in Pebble Cloth, an exclusive Needletuft fabric with the crispness of seersucker, plus all-season sturdiness. Each ensemble has its own smartly blended Needletuft Rug of deep-textured cotton. Buy now at your favorite store. Cabin Crafts, Inc., Dalton, Georgia.

Pebble Cloth Bedspreads	About $10 to $15
Matching Draperies, pair	About $10 to $15
Dressing Table Skirt	About $10 to $15

Rugs, $10 and up, depending on size.

Needletuft®

PEBBLE CLOTH ENSEMBLES and NEEDLETUFT RUGS

Write for Free Illustrated Booklet

Before he left he assured me he "would fix up everything with May Woods for me."

Mr. Eastham worked fast. The very next day he stopped and told me he had everything "fixed" for me to date May Woods. He said, "You know, I told her last night about you. I went over to Oscar Pennix's place, where she boards, and told her you'd straightened that school out where they's run off every schoolteacher. And I told her about what you did for me. I told her that she needed to go with a man like you and you needed a woman like her. I'm not a matchmaker, but I think you'd make the best married pair that ever lived in these parts. I've made the date for you to go see her at Oscar Pennix's place tomorrow evening at eight o'clock. It's not more than two miles and you won't have any trouble finding the house. It's the first house on your right after you pass the schoolhouse."

"I'll be there," I said.

I had never had a blind date before. I had not had many dates in my life. I didn't know May Woods. But if she's a schoolteacher, I thought, and is as beautiful as he says, she must be all right.

At about seven that evening I was on my way to Upper Lonesome. I had waited for the dew to settle the dust before I started, because I wore white shoes and I didn't want to get them brown with dust. And I didn't want to get any dust on my white suit. I wanted to show May Woods that I was everything Burt Eastham had told her I was, and more. I wanted to give her a surprise. This was a blind date, but I knew as I walked along that blind dates had developed into serious love affairs and often marriage. These thoughts raced through my mind as I walked along the brown winding road, always careful not to step hard enough to stir the dust beneath the thin gossamer of dew dampness.

To be happy, make yourself necessary to somebody.
—EMERSON.

I passed the Faith Healing Holiness Church. Little crowds of men, women and children had already begun to gather. The men carried unlit lanterns and the mothers carried babies. They would need their lanterns, for they would stay until the moon was down.

The jolt-wagon wheel of yellow moon was rolling not too high above the green hills. It was soft and mellow, with the man still in it, put there for burning brush on Sunday, for I could see his shape as it had been shown to me when I was a child. This devil moon, even if he did hold as prisoner this poor man, was soft and bright and beautiful. And his mellow shafts of light flooded Lonesome Valley with tainted moonlight gold. This was the kind of night to have a date. It was the kind of night for a young man to go see a beautiful girl. He'd feel love in his heart and brain and the air he breathed. The whippoorwills, nightingales and insects were inspired to sing. I couldn't blame them for singing. I sang too. And the distance seemed shorter.

The road crossed Lonesome Creek. And when I leaped the stream to keep from soiling my white shoes, I leaped a golden stream. The moonlight had changed it to the color of the moon. What a night! I was beginning to wonder if May Woods was as beautiful as Burt Eastham had said, for I was in the mood on a night like this to fall in love.

Such thoughts raced through my mind as I came into shadows that cut away the moonlight. Lonesome Creek and the Lonesome Creek road parted here. Lonesome Creek went into the dark forest, heavy with aromatic leaf and blossom. At this point the forest closed in on both sides of the road. I followed, feeling my way with my feet, a road that was as dark and strange as time. I looked to my left and to my right for an opening of light, of moonlight upon the open fields, upon patches of ripening wheat and oats, broadleafed, lusty, green-growing tobacco and the dark clouds of stalwart corn.

I was thinking that just a few yards beyond I would reach the light, when a barrage of something came through the trees like a flushed covey of birds flying for their lives. One of the objects caught me square on the jaw and the juice spattered my lips. I knew by the taste and smell it was a rotten tomato.

I stopped in the road. I couldn't think fast enough. My white suit was the same kind of target as a white chicken roosting in a winter leafless tree at night is to a hoot owl. They could see me, but I couldn't see them. And how many there were, throwing at me, I could only guess by the way the tomatoes, rotten eggs (I knew by their smell), good eggs, apples, squashes, pumpkins and melons were hurled at me in an avalanche like hailstones. A rotten egg yellowed my hair. A good egg caught me on the same spot the rotten tomato had hit. A squash, melon or pumpkin caught me on the leg above the knee, and broke into fragments. I put my hands over my eyes and ran forward, thinking I could brave the avalanche. I couldn't push through it. Then I heard laughter and screams back in the darkness under the trees. There must have been fifty boys and men!

In the middle of the road, I did an about-face in a hurry and started back. For I was covered from head to foot with oozy, dripping stuff that didn't smell good or taste good. I was hit on the mouth several times. Now I was laying my feet down on the dusty road like a running horse. The missiles kept coming and the crowd, laughing and giving war whoops, came from the dark shadows in hot pursuit. When I came back into the light, Lonesome Creek that had been golden was lead-colored to me. I sailed over it like a bird. Dust on my shoes meant nothing now. I was running as I had never run before, with the pack on my trail.

When I passed the Faith Healing Holiness Church, I was wet with egg goo, mixed with rotten tomato, melon, squash, pumpkin and sweat. My white suit stuck to my body and encased it like long underwear. The front door of the church was wide open on this hot night and the house was packed with people.

I didn't linger long before the church. When I reached Conways' I couldn't go inside. I found a bar of soap in the soapbox on the back porch. I found a hole of water in Lonesome Creek surrounded by willows. I pulled off my clothes and shoes. Even my underwear and socks were soaked with rotten eggs. I soaped and washed my body from head to toe. I washed my clothes and spread them on the brush for tomorrow's sun. Then I hurried to the house to beat the Conways home.

The news of my going to see May Woods spread like wildfire the entire length and breadth of Lonesome Valley. Everybody was laughing. When I ate my breakfast next morning, everybody at Conways' breakfast table wanted to laugh. John Conway tried to make me think he was laughing at something else. But I knew he wasn't. Bertha Conway smiled as she poured my coffee. Don would look across the table and grin like a possum. Everybody wanted to laugh and they puffed like frogs trying to hold their laughter. But not one mentioned what had happened. I didn't mention it either.

When I went to school my pupils smiled. All but one. Guy Hawkins didn't smile. But not one mentioned the affair where I could hear him.

Noon hour was over and we were back in the schoolroom when Burt Eastham drove his mule team under the sycamore shade and stopped. I met him at the door and we walked out to the coal wagon together.

"I'm sorry about what happened last night," he apologized. "It looks like I am the goat."

"Plenty happened all right," I said. "And I'm the goat."

"Let me tell you what happened," he explained. "This fellow, Bill Coffee, Miss Woods has been a-sparkin' rounded back unexpectedly from the Auckland Steel Mills. He found out she had a date with you and went wild when she wouldn't break the date. He said he'd break it in a nice way!"

as dependable as

Old Faithful

Just as you can count on the regular performance of this famous geyser, so you can rely on the consistent high quality of Thomaston sheets! Over the years (since 1899) these soft and white, yet sturdy sheets have become favorites with women everywhere...because they mean sheet value at moderate cost.

DEPENDABLE THOMASTON Fabrics SINCE 1899

ALWAYS DEPENDABLE

Thomaston Sheets

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Ask for THOMASTON SHEETS at your favorite store —a quality for every purse and purpose

"He broke it all right," I said. "You didn't tell me she dated anybody else."

"Yep, she's sparked Bill for a couple of years now, but I thought you had a good chance a-beatin' his time! He went around there among the Upper Lonesome boys and you know they don't have much use for the Lower Lonesome boys, let alone a stranger, and they got ready for you. See, Bill Coffee is an Upper Lonesome boy hisself and he knows just about everybody up there."

"Bill can have May as far as I'm concerned," I said. "I've never seen her or him and I don't care to see them."

"I'm sorry it happened the way it did. Did they hurt you?"

"Not exactly."

"Did they run you a fur piece?"

"Just to the Faith Healing Holiness Church."

"'Pon my word," he said, "ain't it awful!"

He got on his coal wagon and I went back into the schoolhouse. Right then I learned, for the first time, a joke at the other fellow's expense was funny to everybody.

MAN is often reminded of his past actions in the most conspicuous surroundings. I had returned from school that day and sat on the porch where the Conway family was sitting, fanning themselves with long fronds of a creek willow, shooing the flies and stirring the stuffy air, when it happened. I looked across the yard at the Lonesome Creek road and saw an automobile coming, larger than any car I'd ever seen in Landsburgh. It was a green convertible and the top was down. The young man behind the steering wheel was wearing a striped silk shirt and a high collar and flashy tie. He had a long cigar in his mouth. He was driving the car with one hand and had his right arm around a beautiful girl. She looked, from where I sat on the porch, like a beautiful girl. Her black hair was blown back by the wind.

"Who in the world is that?" I asked.

Everybody on Conways' porch started laughing. "That's Bill Coffee and May Woods," Don said.

I felt a warm glow spread over my face. "He must own the Auckland Steel Mills."

"No, he just works there," Don replied. "He's a welder."

"You know Bill Coffee has done better than anybody ever expected he'd do," John admitted. "People around here never thought Bill would amount to a hill o' beans. He never would go to school. Got to the first reader. Then he quit and tried to farm. He couldn't do that. Then he went to the Auckland Steel Mills. Makes over three hundred dollars a month, so I've heard."

"He's not been at the Auckland Mills but a couple of years," Don continued. "First year he worked there he came back with a new car and ten-dollar shirts and fifteen-dollar shoes. Every girl on Lonesome was a-tryin' to go with 'im, but May Woods beat all their times. She makes him awful jealous by having a date with somebody else now and then."

"May Woods holds a First Class certificate too," John bragged.

What a fool I've been, I thought. I knew this event would be history for the people in Lonesome Valley. I would never be able to live it down.

Friday of my third week, at noon, I dismissed the school to go home. I had to fetch supplies for my school from Landsburgh. So many things needed to be done. And I had to do them. The looks of my schoolhouse satisfied my trustee, but didn't satisfy me. And to get to Landsburgh, I had to walk five miles to The Valley and catch the afternoon Old Line Special. When the train reached Landsburgh, I hurried home.

Next morning, bright and early, I went to see John Hampton. He promised to take me back to Lonesome Valley on Sunday. Since he had to get supplies for his school, we went together to Landsburgh in his car. Then we went to Mr. Staggers' office.

"Well, how are you getting along, Mr. Stuart?" my superintendent asked.

"All right, sir," I said. "Have you heard any reports?"

Englander

AMERICA'S MOST LUXURIOUS mattress

No matter how you sleep or what you weigh, you sleep better on an Englander

Englander Red Line brings you the first really new mattress idea in 50 years

FOR YEARS THIS... FOR YEARS THIS... NOW! INDIVIDUAL SPRING ACTION

Coils held together at top and bottom by cotton sacks. This method prevents individual spring action.

Coils held together at top and bottom by wire. This method prevents individual spring action.

Sleep in Comfort

Sleep in Health

Englander coils are held together only at the center by flexible ribbons of steel . . . permitting individual spring action.

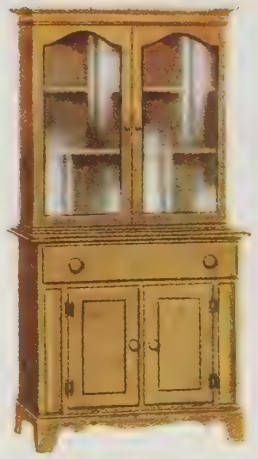
That's why the upper half of an Englander gives you cushioning comfort. Every movement and contour of your body is gently cradled. "Roll-to-the-middle," when sleeping double, eliminated. Lower half supports your weight in the firm, healthful manner doctors recommend.

© 1949, The Englander Company, Inc., Chicago, Illinois

Shown above, the new Super Bodyguard—$49.75. Other Englander Red Line mattresses (twin or full size) or matching box springs to $79.75.



Old Colony furniture

"Home-Planned" to Bring Lasting Charm to Your Home

YOUR first glance tells you how Old Colony keys your home to the mellow friendliness of traditional American furniture. But that's only the beginning of Old Colony's appeal to sensible, modern home-makers. The Heywood-Wakefield emblem on every piece stands for the quality of materials and workmanship which have been famous for generations. And our exclusive, "Home-Planned" designs give assurance that you can add pieces or room groupings as your home grows—and retain the pleasant harmony throughout living room, dining room and bedrooms.

Do see for yourself how the warm, mellow "Winthrop Maple" finish makes Old Colony a perfect complement to most any decorative treatment. You'll find Heywood-Wakefield Old Colony at your favorite store specializing in fine quality furniture.

HEYWOOD-WAKEFIELD EST. 1826

Old Colony brings a background of traditional charm to your dining room—makes hospitable comfort the keynote of your living room.

Here's Expert Help With Your Planning

—This 16-page book is illustrated profusely in full color and jam-packed with smart and sensible ideas by Gladys Miller, prominent decorating consultant. It shows you tricks for making a sound beginning out of a modest start—and how the "Home-Planned" designs of Heywood-Wakefield Old Colony will assure continuing harmony throughout your home. Mail coupon with 25¢ for your copy today.

Heywood-Wakefield Company, Dept. LH-5 Gardner, Mass.

I enclose 25¢ for my copy of "Old Colony Furniture" by Gladys Miller.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

"No. You haven't come in to give the school up, have you?"

"Oh, no," I said. "I've come for supplies."

"What do you want in the way of supplies? Coal bucket, erasers, chalk, windowpanes?"

"All of that and more. I want two bags of lime, a water cooler with a faucet, enough paint to paint my schoolhouse, paintbrushes, hatchet, hammer, nails, hoe, rake, ax and shovel."

"Just a minute," Mr. Staggers broke in. "Who's goin' to paint the house?"

"I'm going to paint it. I'm going to clean that place up!"

"What are you goin' to do with lime? First call I've ever had for lime."

"Use it as an antiseptic in the vaults of the outdoor privies. Flies won't mess around lime."

He let me have all the supplies, although I was getting far beyond my allowance, because I agreed to paint the house free of cost. Mr. Staggers wrote an order for my supplies at the Lawson Hardware.

Sunday, at noon, John Hampton and I started for Lonesome Valley. By six o'clock we were at Conways'.

Monday I told my pupils that we planned to paint the house. I told them that this building was our home. Then I explained that we wouldn't need another dipper, and the only need we had for a water bucket was to carry water. For now we had a water cooler. I showed them this new gadget, the first they had ever seen, and they were pleased.

That afternoon they knew we were serious about painting the house. John Conway made ladders for us. He brought our supplies to the schoolhouse. When school was over, Don and I started painting. Many of the pupils stayed to watch us work.

"Mr. Stuart, I can paint," Guy Hawkins said. "I'll help if you want."

"And I can paint, too," Ova said.

Guy Hawkins and I scraped off the old paint, while Ova and Don started putting on the first coat.

The summer days were long, and we worked until it was late. While Guy and I removed the old paint, we found a brown stain on the paint-scaled walls up about four feet from the ground. It was in blotches, big and brown as autumn oak leaves. Guy Hawkins laughed while I took my knife and scraped on one of these spots.

"Don't you know what that is?" Guy asked.

"I'm not sure."

"It's ambeer spittle. Somebody has been spittin' on the walls!"

We found ambeer spittle all around the back of the schoolhouse. I knew this was something that had to stop before we got the house painted with our new white paint.

THE spitting of ambeer on the schoolhouse walls worried me, but I had another problem that worried me more. I had from the beginners to the eighth grade, all in one room. Their ages ran from five to twenty. This was so in every rural school in Greenwood County. I had never thought about this until I started teaching.

The beginners were the most difficult to teach. I would bring my beginners up and teach them ABC's on the old dilapidated chart, used years and years before I came to Lonesome Valley. After I had gone over their ABC's with them, they went back to their seats and had nothing to do. They needed more attention than I could give them. Many of them fell asleep in the hot schoolroom. I wondered what to do about this.

I knew how beginners had been taught in the Greenwood County rural schools in the past. I knew, because I had been a beginner in this same type of school. I had been taught to read on this kind of chart and I still knew everything on it from memory.

When one of these little fellows went to sleep, I let him sleep. What else could I do, when I was trying to hear fifty-four classes recite in six hours, give them new assignments, grade their papers? What else could I do, when I had to do janitorial work, paint my house, keep the toilets sanitary, the yard cleaned of splintered glass and rubbish, and try to make our school home more attractive than the homes the pupils lived in?

One afternoon, after we had been painting on the house, we got to Conways' late. John Conway sat by the table while Don and I ate. The rest of the family had eaten. I told John Conway about my problem with beginners, but he didn't know about schools and he didn't understand. I told John that if Upper Lonesome, Lonesome Valley, Unknown and Chicken Creek rural schools were moved to The Valley, the approximate center of all these surrounding school districts, it could be worked out as it was in Landsburgh Graded School. It would take fewer teachers and the teachers would have pupils on an age level. One teacher could handle the beginners.

HIS face reddened when he asked me how the pupils could get to school as far away as The Valley. Haul them by bus or by jolt wagon, I told him. He laughed and told me I didn't know about the Lonesome Creek road in winter. I told him the time would come when we would get gravel on the roads and then we could have this type of school. He said he hoped when this time came, when they took Lonesome Valley school from the people, where his children, himself, his father and his grandfather had gone to school, he would be dead. He went into as much of a tirade against this idea as if someone had walked into a field of his green-growing tobacco and started chopping it down with a hoe. He said my thought was dangerous, and if I wanted to be a good teacher and stay healthy, I better stop having such crazy talk.

The first step to virtue is to love it in another.

—SCOTCH PROVERB.

I was in his house. I taught his children. I couldn't tell him what I thought. But I thought if I ever got to a position high enough in education, if I was ever elected any kind of legislator, so help me, I would abolish the trustee system if I could. Why should John Conway have more power than the superintendent, elected by members of the Greenwood County board of education and they, in turn, elected by the people? Why should he have more power than the five members of the Greenwood County board of education, when they were elected by the people to serve the interests of education for the people?

John Conway hadn't gone any farther than the third grade. In all the years he had been elected trustee of his district he had never persuaded the Greenwood County school board to have a well dug for his school. He hadn't been able to get the house painted. He hadn't offered to dig the well or paint the house himself.

I finished my supper, left the table and sat on the porch to enjoy the evening breeze and think about what I would do with my beginners.

Next morning, when I got up, I was still trying to think of something to do with my beginners. I ate breakfast and got ready for school. I went early and walked slowly along by myself and tried to think of a way.

Then I started whistling. I walked along beneath the willows in the morning sun, whistling The Needle's Eye. It was a beautiful morning, the kind of morning that made me want to breathe deeply of the cool fresh wind. Why should I worry about the school problem that had troubled me all night? Maybe it would come to me sometime.

The needle's eye that does supply
The thread that runs so true ——

What was the needle's eye? What was the thread that ran so true? The needle's eye, I finally came to the conclusion, was the schoolteacher. And the thread that ran so true could only be play. Play. The needle's eye that does supply the thread that runs so true. The teacher that supplied the play that ran so true? Play, that ran so true. Play. Play. Play that ran so true among little children, little foxes, there is always one . . .

(Continued on Page 137)

One face dearest to the heart . . . one song, one place, one time the best remembered . . . and among material possessions one thing most treasured.

To many, and to more each day, this happiness in choice of blankets has become St. Marys. For they delight so many ways! In their incredible beauty . . . through years of warmth and wear and wondrous comfort . . . you discover the great wisdom of your choice.

Always purest wool in weights most pleasing and colors most becoming to you. One name to add to those that will not fail you . . .

St. Marys

ST. MARYS BLANKETS

ST. MARYS
OHIO

Only Wallace Sterling ... like Sculpture ... is lovely from every angle

FIGURINE, CONTEMPORARY AMERICA

Only Wallace Sterling ... like Sculpture ... has Third Dimension Beauty

Brides are making Wallace Sterling the most sought-after silver in America. All over the country they're asking to see the sterling that has the "Third Dimension Beauty" of sculpture ... beauty in front, beauty in profile, beauty in back. Only Wallace Sterling ... created by William S. Warren, famous designer ... fits that description. Before you select your sterling, be sure to see the five Wallace "Third Dimension Beauty" designs. Left to right: Grande Baroque, Sir Christopher, Grand Colonial, Stradivari, Rose Point. Six-piece place settings from $27 to $35, according to pattern.

WALLACE STERLING

COPYRIGHT 1949 WALLACE SILVERSMITHS, WALLINGFORD, CONNECTICUT • SINCE 1835 • WALLACE SILVERSMITHS, TORONTO, CANADA

(Continued from Page 134)

lambs! Yes, play, among big children rownups! My beginners should play. work should be play. I should make think they were playing while they d to read, while they learned to count! was it! I had it. Play.

en time came for my first beginners' I tore the big sheet from the Lawson ware calendar. I took the scissors from rawer and sat in a semicircle with the I cut the numbers apart, told or asked they were and handed them to the chil- Then I cut the stiff backs of tablets into es of approximate size. Taking a jar of I pasted one number to one cardboard. I told the class to sit four in a seat (I ight) and paste all the numbers and oard squares together.

hile I went on with other classes these en were busy. When recess came they d more to do, rather than go out to Some numbers were pasted sideways, hat did that matter? They had done with no more supervision than I had them.

earched my brain for an idea to tie this reading and drawing. I drew objects on oard with which they were familiar— s, cups, balls, stick figures of and girls—in s of one, two, e and four. time came for ext beginners' I asked the ren to identify bjects first by , which I wrote e the object, by number, h I wrote be- it. They were cited they sat he edge of the ation bench, bare feet tap- nervously on floor. Then I ed for the stack number cards held them up, g the class to e the number. as surprised recognized so y.

ne room was so quiet you could hear a fall. Every pupil in the room was inter- d. This was something they had never , but they recognized it as an interesting to learn. This was play. Realizing this enough for one time, I asked my begin- if they would like to return to their seats try to draw the pictures as they were vn on the board.

ne idea led to another. There were dozens ays to use the number cards. As days ed, the children learned to draw objects epresent a number on a card chosen by eone. They learned to add and subtract bers and objects. They recognized the ber when written. They learned the names ictures drawn. We varied this by erasing picture and number and reading the word. placed a row of number cards along the rd in the chalk ledge and let the children w pictures to represent the number on the d. There were no more little sleepy heads desks.

TH the problem of my beginners solved, ething happened to mar my happiness. at morning I had let Don, Guy and Ova their free periods to paint the house. er I had finished my lunch, I walked be- d the house to see how the paint was dry- . My face must have flushed red as a key's snout. There were twelve brown tches of ambeer spittle on the last coat of snow-white paint.

When the noon hour was over, I talked to pupils. I told them that if I caught any- dy chewing tobacco on the school ground, would punish that pupil. If I caught one tting on the paint, I would spank, and nk hard. I knew it was one of my pupils. There hadn't been anybody else in the schoolyard.

That afternoon, after school was dismissed, we took a bucket of soapy water and a broom and scrubbed off this ambeer spittle. Then we went ahead with our painting.

Friday I took my lunch, and walked outside and back of the schoolhouse. My pupils were sitting under the shade of the tall sycamores, eating their lunch. All but one. She was making the ambeer spittle fly against the newly painted boards. A girl! And Vaida Conway, the fourteen-year-old daughter of my trustee.

"Vaida," I said before she saw me, "what do you have in your mouth? What are you doing?"

"Nothing."

"Don't you spit it out," I warned her. "Let me see what it is."

She didn't spit the quid from her mouth. She took it out and showed it to me. Then she looked down at her bare feet.

"Why did you do this?" I asked.

"Mr. Stuart, I worked in the green tobacco," she said. "It was hot and smelly and after I quit working in it I craved a chaw."

"You mean you got the tobacco habit by working in green tobacco and smelling it?"

"Yes."

"I've worked in it all my life and I never got the habit by smelling green-growing tobacco," I told her.

If she had ever chewed tobacco at her home I had never seen her do so.

"Vaida, why did you spit on this white wall?" I asked.

"Because I liked to spit on it," she admitted. "I like to see brown against white."

"When I dismiss school this afternoon, I want you to remain," I told her.

None of the pupils had heard or seen me talking to Vaida. I don't believe any of my pupils knew who was spitting on the wall. But that afternoon when I dismissed school, Vaida Conway remained. I waited until the schoolyard was cleared of pupils. Don Conway must have known. And I think a few others suspected what was going to take place. I had to back up what I had said. I laid Vaida Conway across my lap and applied the geography book in stinging spanks. Not enough to make her whimper, though. It only wounded her pride.

After I had spanked Vaida, she stood for a minute before she went out the door and glared at me. "I'll tell my daddy on you," she said. "He'll fix you. He doesn't like you nohow. Not after you talked about moving our school down to The Valley." Then she ran out the door, across the schoolyard and foot log.

I finished making my monthly report. When I got to Conways' a cold silence greeted me. John Conway had little to say. Bertha didn't bother to speak to me. I knew they regarded Vaida as a woman grown. In two more years she would be eligible to marry. I sat down and ate my supper. Then I walked to The Valley and mailed my attendance report.

Saturday morning I got up late and ate my breakfast after John Conway and all his children had gone to work. Bertha was the only one there and she was silent. She fixed my breakfast and I ate. Then I took a volume of Kentucky School Laws and went to the Lonesome Valley school and sat down on the brace root of a sycamore in the shade.

(Continued on Page 139)

NEXT MONTH

"Nobody's so special he can't be touched," Toby said accusingly. "Someday you'll come and ask me to kiss you!"

THERE was something special about Eliza. She was beautiful and smart; people said you could love Eliza, but you couldn't ever get really close to her. It took a man like Toby—"a hellion with the ladies" but a man with a heart—to make her wonder whether an ivory tower could shut out life and love forever. To teach her that

Nobody's That Special

by Nella Gardner White

complete in the June JOURNAL

Lovely Curtains call for Washable Wat-a-set

LIKE a day without sunshine . . . a home without people . . . there's a lot missing if your curtains are not Wat-a-set finished! Wat-a-set is the original lasting finish for cotton, rayon and nylon marquisettes, ninons and casements.

Perhaps you've overlooked Wat-a-set in your previous curtain shopping. If so, look over these features you've missed — features that make so many curtain-conscious women call Wat-a-set their curtain washword:

1. It makes curtains WASHABLE — quickly and easily — without distortion of delicate open weaves.
2. It reduces shrinkage. Makes starching unnecessary.
3. Helps tailored curtains hang straight. Keeps threads in place.
4. Resists dirt and makes for less frequent washing.
5. Repels rayon-eating silverfish.
6. Prevents crinkling because it's moisture resistant.
7. Wat-a-set curtains are dyed with colors which have good resistance to sunlight.

Look for the Wat-a-set label . . . you won't have to look far. It's at your favorite curtain counter, tucked loosely in the folds of many different brands — and in a wide variety of styles and prices. Make Wat-a-set your WASHWORD, too! MOUNT HOPE FINISHING COMPANY, North Dighton, Mass.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY ★ Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Wat-a-set® THE ORIGINAL LASTING FINISH FOR COTTON, RAYON AND NYLON CURTAINS

"RUG MAGIC" by OLSON

How Your OLD RUGS AND CLOTHING Save You up to ½

It's All So Easy! Free catalog tells how your materials are picked up at your door and sent at our expense to the Olson FACTORY, where . . .

By the Olson Process we sterilize, shred, merge materials of all kinds—reclaim the valuable wools etc., then bleach, card, spin, re-dye and weave into lovely, new, deep-textured—

REVERSIBLE BROADLOOM RUGS

—double luxury rugs made in seamless sizes for every need up to 16 feet by any length.

Choice of Solid Colors Tweed Blends Floral & Leaf 18th Century Early American and Oriental Patterns FACTORY-TO-YOU. Satisfaction guaranteed. Over two million customers. We do not have agents or sell thru stores. Our 75th Year.

Chicago New York San Francisco

FREE CATALOG in Full Color

MAIL COUPON OR 1¢ POST CARD TO-DAY

OLSON RUG CO., N-80, Chicago 41, Ill.

Please mail the Olson Catalog FREE to:

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

TOWN_____ STATE_____

© ORC

When you see this on this —buy it!

And here's why . . . Every statement made on that Durene label is a fact. Proved by actual service. Proved by laboratory tests. Proved by the growing demand for literally millions of garments now made of Durene mercerized cotton. And all merchandise bearing the Durene name is subject to the Durene quality control plan; which includes regular, impartial laboratory tests. That's why any garment that carries the Durene label—socks, briefs, undershirts, polo shirts—is bound to be a good buy. Don't miss it.

(Continued from Page 137)

discovered that the use of tobacco was ibited not only to pupils, but to patrons, that visitors were not allowed to use this rant weed on school property at any time ny school in the state. This was the law. I also trying to find out whether a teacher to board in the school district where he teaching. I read the entire document ugh and failed to find such a provision.

Monday I got my check for my first th's teaching, exactly $68. I knew then as better that my going to see May ds had turned out the way it had. If I had a date with her and had fallen in , I could never have shown her a "good ," and could not have driven her around n automobile.

ill Coffee, welder at the Auckland Steel ls, even if he did have only a third-grade cation, was four times as successful as I , if success was measured in dollars and s. And, believe me, success was measured way among the young people I knew in esome Valley.

was young, too, and wanted to date girls show them a good time. I was also fasci- ed by schoolteaching. I loved my profes- . I was willing to learn it from the ground I knew there was much for me to learn. why should I follow this profession?

here had been months, when I followed trap lines and lived at home and went to dsburgh High School, when I had more n $50 a month. There had been months in spring, when I dug roots and sold them, I had made over $30 a month. After I paid my board, how much would I have ? How much more uld I make t—hing ol than I would make porting myself by ting and trapping in autumn and digging roots in the spring? didn't have long to wait now how much I would e left. Bertha Conway rged me $25 for a month's room and rd, and I knew this was reasonable com- ed with "the times" in our country. But as not reasonable compared with my sal- . I had only, not counting the little things ad bought for my pupils and my school, left.

My having to pay $25 a month for room board was not the reason I was leaving nways'. There were other reasons.

"Remember I'm not tryin' to keep you e," John Conway said when I was packed ready to go, "but you do have to stay in s district."

"Who said?" I asked. "Mr. Conway, I'm ving here a copy of the Kentucky School ws. I've marked one place for you to read."

Then I was off down Lonesome Creek d to The Valley. I was going to stay with cle Amos Batson, who ran the store and st office at The Valley. I would be five es from my school and have to walk ten es each day. But I would be away from two factions that composed the people of school district. The score was evened in minds of both groups, for I had disciplined y Hawkins, whose father belonged to one tion, and Vaida Conway, whose father be- ged to the other.

ACH group knew now I didn't show par- lity. I was there to teach the school. I was termined to stay until my school year was ished. If I continued to live in the Lone- me Valley school district I would have to e in a home where the people belonged to e faction. There was no middle ground. y sister had told me this, and she was right. ad learned that a schoolteacher must keep nself above the petty bickerings of preju- ed groups in his school community.

There were twelve rooms in Uncle Amos tson's two-story white frame house. Uncle nos and Aunt Effie had the downstairs and ad all of the upstairs I wanted. The place as roomy and comfortable. And the food as delicious. I had never eaten better hot scuits, three-year-old hickory-smoked ham d wild honey in my life.

Uncle Amos Batson, though sixty-seven years old, could draw a fiddle bow the smoothest I'd ever heard. He could make his fiddle talk, laugh or cry. He could play music that made Aunt Effie put her long-stemmed pipe aside and dance. The first evening I spent in their home, she danced to her husband's magic fiddle. Though she was sixty-seven, the mother of eleven children, all married and moved away, she was as agile as a sparrow. She danced the old reels, her small feet nimbly tapping the tune that Uncle Amos played on his fiddle, fast as snow-melted water poured over the cliffs in an early mountain spring.

The first week I lived at Batsons', Uncle Amos' hired man, Bill Strickland, didn't show up to milk Uncle Amos' seven cows. Bill Strickland had followed Bill Coffee to the Auckland Steel Mills. Uncle Amos didn't have anybody to milk his cows. Though he could play the fiddle, he couldn't milk a cow. I volunteered to go after the cows and to milk them.

Uncle Amos knew I would have to hurry if I did all this and got to school on time. He saddled and bridled Sundance, his large white pony, and I climbed into the saddle. I was off to get the cows up a twisting cowpath that curved right and left until it reached the mountaintop. There were hundreds of acres of grassy slope, gentle and rugged, dotted here and there in the deep hollows and ravines with tracts of giant trees. There were four hundred acres in this pasture. Below this mountain pasture lay The Valley. I could see the winding stream, like a silver ribbon in the early-morning sun, flowing gently past the farmhouses, through the fertile level land where grew corn, cane and tobacco.

I sat for a moment in the saddle, looking at this miracle of beauty, while Sundance pranced. He knew what his mission was. He had been after the cows before. I gave him the rein and he found the cows. When the cows saw Sundance, they were ready to start home to be milked.

It didn't take me too long to milk the seven cows. Then I strained the milk and separated the cream for Aunt Effie to put in cans to ship on the Old Line Special. When I was through with my work, I didn't have time to walk five miles to school.

"Ride Sundance," Uncle Amos said. "Put him in Abraham's barn durin' the day."

And that is what I did. Uncle Amos didn't try to get another man to do the milking. I loved Sundance. I loved to ride him up the Lonesome Valley road in the morning when the dew had laid the dust and when the morning-glories vining up the corn were so alive with pink, blue, purple and white horn-shaped blossoms. They were good to smell and beautiful to see. In the afternoon, when I mounted the saddle for home, Sundance was anxious to return to his barn in The Valley and wanted to run like a fox.

My second month at the Lonesome Valley school, I enjoyed the co-operation of the two factions. Don Conway held no malice toward me. And even Vaida soon forgot what I had done to her. She didn't chew any more tobacco, not after her father had read the section of Kentucky School Law I had marked for him. And he didn't say anything about my leaving Lonesome Valley school district.

Burt Eastham had told almost every man in Lonesome Valley about my figuring up the bushels of coal on his wagon bed. Now they came for me to figure wagonloads of coal, bushels of corn in the bins, sizes of coalhouses. And I never refused a request. If it was a small job, we did it after school; if it was a large one, we did it on Saturday. I took with me as many boys and girls as wanted to go along. Don Conway was always with me. Guy Hawkins became very much interested in figures. When he got interested, his bosom friend, Ova Salyers, did.

One of my pupils, a twelve-year-old boy, Denver Lykins, who was in the first grade

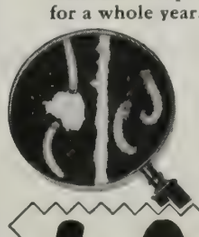
(Continued on Page 141)

Though a man may become learned by another's learning, he can never be wise but by his own wisdom.
—MONTAIGNE.

The ONLY sure POSITIVE MOTHPROOF

method used for years by big mills — Now sold for home use!

The modern, easy, SURE way to protect your precious woolens from moth damage is to actually mothproof the cloth itself with LARVEX. One easy spraying with LARVEX does the trick! It mothproofs woolens for a whole year.



LARVEX'S magic spray penetrates each tiny woolen fibre and treats the cloth so as to make it uneatable to the hungry moth worm. Tests show moths would rather commit suicide by starvation than eat anything treated with LARVEX. It gives POSITIVE protection! Simply spray the garment and hang in its usual place ready for immediate wear. Stainless. Odorless. No wrapping. No storing away. No more moth ball, cedar or camphor odors. Spray your rugs and sofas, too.

So Easy! A few minutes' spraying with LARVEX mothproofs for a whole year.

Inexpensive! It costs no more to LARVEX a suit than it does to get it dry cleaned. Only 79¢ a pint. $1.19 a quart.

TESTS SHOW PROOF—The cloth on the left has not been treated with LARVEX. Cloth on right has been treated with LARVEX. Note how moth worms refuse to eat LARVEXED cloth.

LARVEX

The Largest Selling Mothproofer

New make-up! Adorably young Enchantingly natural!

Angel Face
by POND'S

FOUNDATION AND POWDER—ALL IN ONE! Not a cake make-up . . . not a greasy foundation! Angel Face is a completely different make-up—foundation and powder all in one! Never drying, never shiny! Neater to use at the dressing table, and perfect in your handbag—because Angel Face can't spill!

GOES ON WITH A PUFF—AND STAYS! Incredibly easy to use! Just smooth on Pond's Angel Face with its own downy puff. No watery sponge. No greasy fingertips. Angel Face goes on like sheer velvet—looks fresh for hours. Because a special "cling" ingredient makes Angel Face stay on—much longer than powder! It's the only make-up neat enough and sweet enough to put on any time . . . anywhere!

Choose from five soft, flattering Angel Face shades. Complete with a plump, luxurious puff, Angel Face is 89¢, plus tax.

Society Beauties love it!

"I love Pond's Angel Face. It smooths on so easily . . . no damp sponge . . no drying effect on the skin. And the velvety color stays on for hours."
THE LADY BRIDGETT POULET

"I never have that self-conscious 'made-up' feeling with Angel Face—it feels so soft on my skin, and looks so fresh and real! Ideal to carry—it never spills over handbag or clothes!"
FREDERICA VANDERBILT GAMBLE

(Continued from Page 139)

could count in his head with figures fast could, always went along. He couldn't figures because he hadn't gone to school than three months in his life. I gave him ial attention because he was so inter- I held his hand at the blackboard and ed him make figures, starting him with es from one to ten. Yet he went with us, gure land, cornbins, coalhouses, every- e that we were called to figure and cal- te for the patrons of our district. We ed applying arithmetic and the people d it.

ne Saturday we figured the number of s in Tim Conley's farm. Denver carried od pole, while Don Conway kept tally of number of rods. We figured the small to have 48.6 acres. When the county eyor, Don Shackleford, two weeks later a survey, he figured the farm to have acres. We had come that close.

ut one of the funniest things to happen in early September, when a small man he name of Silas Higgins came to Lone- e Valley school to ask me to figure a pas- field where he had cut the sprouts. He he was to receive $6 per acre. The fellow cut the sprouts for, Willis Hager, had sured the land and he had measured it. said that he had measured it for twelve one half acres and Willis had measured or six. We told him we'd be there that rnoon at four o'clock.

When we got there—Don, Guy, Ova, Den- and I—the two men were waiting and ar- g. Willis Hager must have been seven tall. Silas was not much over five feet. ey had stepped the distances around the l, counting each step for three feet, five a half steps for a rod. pupils began laughing. lis was so tall he could six feet at a step and s so short he couldn't three. We measured land and Don Conway red it, while Ova, Guy Denver looked on. He red the field for 9.6 acres. Willis wouldn't e their figures. He wasn't satisfied at all. as was better satisfied. These men even eatened each other physically and with law. Then I went over the figures. Don figured it correctly.

"You see, Mr. Higgins, your legs are short," a Salyers said, "and your steps are not g enough. Mr. Hager, your steps are too g. That's why you measured this field for y six acres."

Willis Hager was going to hit me with a ssafras stick when I told him that if he nt to law he would lose and our measure- ent was approximately what a surveyor's easurement would be. But he didn't get ry far with the stick. Four of my pupils pped forward and little Silas Higgins picked a rock. Willis knew the odds were against n and he settled down and listened to rea- n. Before we left, we had the dispute tled and both parties were satisfied.

My pupils were seeing the practical appli- ce of simple learning to everyday prob- ns. Don Conway became so interested in hool that he decided not to get married but go through the Lonesome Valley school, en to high school and beyond high school college.

HE third week of my second school month mething happened that made the pupils ke more interest in schoolwork than ever. nce Burt Eastham ran a coal wagon be- ween Upper Lonesome and The Valley, and nce he was interested in a curious way in her people's affairs, he had again contacted Iay Woods and told her that our school was etter than hers. She challenged me to bring y pupils to her school for an arithmetic atch. That Friday we all left Lonesome alley at noon, on foot, for Upper Lonesome. And for the first time, I came face to face ith one of the most beautiful teachers I had er seen. I could understand why Bill Coffee ad bought a convertible too big for the rns in the Lonesome Creek road. Maybe he uld win her with an automobile. She was eautiful, with crow-wing-black hair, brown eyes shaded with heavy lashes, white teeth and lovely lips.

Her schoolhouse was immaculately clean. Her pupils were well disciplined. There wasn't anything wrong with her school that I could see. The two long recitation seats were moved to the back of the schoolroom for visitors. They were filled and people were standing. There were probably over one hundred visitors to watch the match.

Before we began, Miss Woods and I agreed that she, Burt Eastham and I would be the judges. We agreed that if a pupil could work the problem in his head and call out the correct answer, he didn't have to write the figures on the blackboard. And we agreed that the pupil called from his seat to the board, to work against the one still standing, had his choice of addition, multiplication, subtraction, common or decimal fractions, long or short division.

WE started with the beginners. She called one and I called one. We matched them at the blackboard in front so all could see. They were about evenly matched for speed and accuracy. But when my beginners were gone, she had half of hers left, for she had twice as many in the beginning. Each of my pupils had to turn down two of hers before we had an even break.

Then I called to the blackboard Denver Lykins, my big first-grader. He stood there calling out answers until he had eliminated all her beginners. Someone shouted "Eighth-grader." But I showed Miss Woods my record book. Denver Lykins stood there until one of Miss Woods' pupils asked for a problem in addition. She asked for four columns of figures to add. Denver couldn't add four columns in his head, though he could add three. This girl knew his strength and his weakness. She turned down this boy who couldn't make figures on the blackboard, but this match left him with a determination to learn how.

All the blessings of a household come through the wife, therefore should her husband honor her. —TALMUD.

Denver Lykins had turned down seven pupils. Then Guy Hawkins turned down five. Ova Salyers turned down three. We turned down and they turned down until we got to the fourth grade. Then I called Don Conway and showed in my record book that he was a fourth-grade pupil. He turned down ten, all of Miss Woods' fourth-grade pupils and six of her fifth-grade. Don was pleased with himself, for many of them were as large as Don.

In the upper grades Miss Woods had three pupils to my one. But I had one girl, Margaret Prater, who was excellent in decimal and common fractions. She was the best pupil in my school. I held her for the last pupil. The match went on, with shouts from our side if we turned down one of theirs. Shouts came from the other side when they turned down one of ours.

I had only Margaret Prater left when Miss Woods had seven eighth-graders. Miss Woods used one of her best pupils to try to eliminate Margaret immediately and end the match, which had taken nearly two hours. But Margaret turned her down.

Then Miss Woods sent another star pupil to work against Margaret. He chose addition. Margaret was right and he was wrong, though he finished first. The third person she sent chose subtraction and Margaret beat her by a second. Both were right. The fourth pupil chose short division. Margaret worked the problem and checked it while her contestant stood beside her shaking and couldn't do a thing. The fifth pupil chose long division. They were trying to find one part of arithmetic that was Margaret's weakness. She turned this pupil down by a split second. Both problems were right. Their sixth pupil said, "Let Margaret choose the problem." Margaret chose multiplication of common fractions. She won easily. Only one was left now, a taller girl, older-looking than Miss Woods and much larger. She chose decimal fractions and put the problem down so fast that she mistook a seven for a three. She worked what she had on the board correctly, but Margaret had beaten her by a split second. Margaret was right again.

More than 2 million women a month use Toni —the wave that gives that natural look!

See how flattering a Toni is . . . how soft and beautifully natural it looks. Because there's no frizzy stage with a Toni. Even on the first day your Toni wave looks naturally curly with lovely deep waves and soft curls! But before trying Toni you'd like to know:

Will TONI work on my hair?
Yes. Toni gives a beautiful wave to any kind of hair that will take a permanent, including gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine hair!

Will my TONI wave be loose or tight?
The exclusive directions in your Toni Kit give you exactly the wave you want —from loose, casual curls to a halo of lovely ringlets. You're sure of success because these easy-to-follow Toni directions have given millions of perfect permanents. In fact, more than 2 million women a month use Toni!

Why do most women prefer TONI?
Because Toni leaves your hair in such wonderful condition—so shiny soft and natural-looking. You see the Toni Waving Lotion is wonderfully mild and gentle, utterly different from hurry-up salon-type solutions. Toni has been granted the Good Housekeeping Seal and the Parents' Magazine Tested and Commended Seal. So it's no wonder more Toni waves are sold than all other cold waves combined! It's the world's most popular wave!

How long will my TONI last?
You'll enjoy your beautiful, soft Toni wave for months! Because Toni is long-lasting and is guaranteed to look as lovely as a $15 beauty shop permanent—or you get back every penny you paid.

How much will I save with TONI?
The Toni Kit with plastic curlers costs only $2. You can use the curlers again and again. So for your second Toni wave all you need is the Toni Refill Kit. It costs just $1 . . . yet there is no finer wave at any price!

Which twin has the TONI?
Talented, teen-age Kathlene and Helene Crescente won the Beauty Contest for Twins in New York City. Kathlene, the twin on the right, has the Toni. She says: "I never knew a permanent could look so natural right from the start!" And Helene says "Next time it'll be Toni for two!"

The wave that gives that natural look . . . Toni

We had won the match against odds. Then we had to hurry home. Everybody had his evening chores to do. I had to ride to The Valley, fetch my cows from the pasture and milk them.

This match created a school spirit at Lonesome Valley. The last week in August my pupils met pupils of the Chicken Creek school and defeated them. The first week in September we met the Unknown school and defeated them. We had only The Valley, largest of all the rural schools, left. When this match came off we had visitors who had to stand in the yard and look through the windows. People could hardly believe that we defeated The Valley and that we never used Margaret Prater, our best pupil. Guy Hawkins turned down fifteen. This was a new kind of fighting for Guy and a kind of fighting he liked much better. We had spelling matches against these same schools and we lost two and won two.

Play for my pupils! Play for myself! I was the needle's eye! Play was the thread that ran so true! Teaching was not work as it had been. Teaching was play! I had never in my life, much as I loved to go to school, enjoyed myself more.

When I drew my second check and started to pay Uncle Amos and Aunt Effie, they would take only $12, because I had milked their cows. By a little work, I had cut my living expenses to less than half. This left me $56 clear money from teaching. In addition to getting my expenses cut to less than half for this excellent place to live, I got the use of the most intelligent and one of the prettiest ponies that ever carried a saddle. I rode Sundance when and where I wanted to. One week end I rode him thirty miles home on Friday evening, and on Sunday rode him back.

In September the tobacco ripened and many of my pupils had to stay home and help with tobacco cutting and hauling to the barn. The cane ripened, too, in September and it had to be stripped, topped, cut, hauled to the mill and the juice pressed from it and boiled into sorghum molasses. It was better to do this just before frost so the sorghum would keep its delicious flavor and its golden color. Potatoes had to be dug. Corn had to be cut. September was a busy time in Lonesome Valley.

Attendance was down considerably in September. There wasn't an attendance officer to see why they didn't come to school. If the pupil went, it was all right. If he didn't, it was all right too. But we had made our school so attractive in appearance that the pupils loved the place. It was the liveliest spot in our community. It was the only place they could go and many would never go beyond this school. Their education ended when they finished at Lonesome Valley. Beyond these days it was eternal work, work, work, and the sameness of life. It was marriage, children, death and burial in Lonesome Valley.

I thought of these things when I taught my pupils all the practical things I could. How to write letters, measure land, be clean with drinking water, about personal sanitation, screens for their windows. When I gave them assignments to write themes, I never gave them the topics listed in their books. I told them to write about the things they knew about: people, places, things and adventures in Lonesome Valley.

The sea of multicolored leaves was whipped from the Lonesome Valley trees by the raw and biting November winds. The two great furrow edges, turned in opposite directions by some great mythical plow in the beginning of time to make narrow-gauge Lonesome Valley, were naked, grotesque and ugly now. Autumn had passed. Winter was on us. And if there was ever a cold, icy funnel anywhere on the earth's surface, it was Lonesome Valley.

We crowded close to the pot-bellied stove. We fired it until it was red-hot. The corners of our schoolroom were cold even when our stove was dangerously overheated. But my thinly clad pupils braved the smiting winter wind. Attendance grew in this weather because the farm work was done, and the pupils were free of home labors for the first time.

December came. We had a Christmas tree and my pupils drew numbers from a hat and exchanged gifts. We had a Christmas program and I bought candy, apples, oranges and bananas. We lost only one day for Christmas holiday. My pupils hardly knew the meaning of letting out school a week for Christmas. Our six-months school couldn't go too far into the late winter. For they had to start burning tobacco beds and getting ready for another crop year.

Our school year ended February fourth. This was the time for pupils to get their promotions. Guy Hawkins received the highest number. He had gone from the first to the fifth grade. Ova Salyers was promoted to the fourth. Don Conway leaped to the seventh. Not one had failed. Six eighth-graders had finished school. They would not go any more.

The last day of school we had a program. Members of the community were invited. They came until the house was packed. We had readings and then Guy Hawkins and Don Conway "chose up" and we had an arithmetic match. Finally I shook hands with my pupils, their mothers and fathers, and thanked them for their co-operation. I made them laugh when I told them I had learned more in six months of teaching than I had in my three years of high school. And that I would return to school a much smarter pupil. And I would.

At one P.M. I was in the saddle for the last time. My pupils watched me ride away, around the bend and out of sight. I looked to my right and to my left, for the last time, at Lonesome Valley. I put Sundance in the barn and patted his nose. My clothes were packed and I said good-by to Aunt Effie and Uncle Amos.

"I won't say good-by to you," Uncle Amos said. "You know, Stuart, Effie and I have thought of taking out adoption papers for you! We always wanted a dozen and we just got eleven. You'd make the dozen."

"Jesse, we're so proud of you," mom said, that Sunday in August I arrived home, hitchhiking from Lincoln Memorial University. "We're proud to have a college graduate in our family. Larry Anderson is new superintendent of Greenwood County rural scho... He's holding a good job for you!"

It had been five years since I had tau... school in Lonesome Valley. During th... five years, I had finished my senior year ... Landsburgh High School. I had worked ... year at the Auckland Steel Mills. And I ... finished college in three years. But I had ... taken any courses to prepare myself ... teaching. I had taken an academic cours... wanted to be the first of my people to fin... college. I hadn't planned to teach sch... again.

I had hitchhiked to a small university ... never heard of before, with $29.30 in ... pocket, after I had been turned down by t... colleges.

I had helped dig and lay water lines; I h... cleaned manholes and unstopped sewers; h... mown grass over every foot of the spacio... campus many times; had worked on t... farm and at the dairy barn. I had washed a... dried dishes, delivered mail. I had my class ... arranged so I could work half of each day ... had left Lincoln Memorial, hitchhiki... home, with $10 in my pocket. I owed t... school $100. I had made better than B ave... age.

Now I was home, surrounded by my pe... ple. They were proud of me. At this tin... Greenwood County, with an approxima... population of 23,000, had fewer than a ha... dozen native-born college graduates. Supe... intendent Larry Anderson had done so... college work, but he didn't have his degr...

"Mom, I've made up my mind to go ba... to the Auckland Steel Mills," I said. "I lo... to teach school. But remember my salary ... Lonesome Valley?"

"Son, with all your education," my fath... said, "you can get in on the ground floor f... something good in Greenwood Count... You'll make more money now, since you're ... college graduate. Go see Larry."

Monday morning when Larry Anderso... came to unlock his office door I was waiting ... "You're Jesse Stuart, aren't you?" he said ... gripping my hand.

"Yes, sir."

"Come into the office," he invited m... "I've been talking to your father about you ... I'm trying to do something for the Green... wood County schools. I have school buses t...

(Continued on Page 144)

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

A BACHELOR is a man who can take a nap on top of a bedspread.

A woman's tears, like a sprinkler in dry weather, may only harden the surface.

There comes a time in the life of every young couple when a choice must be made between celebrating Saturday evening and observing Sunday morning.

"My trouble," complained a small daughter, "is that I always lose by an overwhelming majority."

Sign on back of automobile: "Drive as if this car had a fool in it!"

When I was young, the flavors in candy were strong enough to hold a child up for a while.

Contrite mother reads following item on little girl's list of things to make home life happier: "I wish mother would like my cat more."

Any woman who says she has never seen a cockroach in her kitchen is either a prevaricator, awfully lucky, or needs glasses.

Any parent who has absolute government over his child must feel a little like Simon Legree.

Some families might consider in their hom... life more of "whatsoever things are lovely."

Love and whipping cream are smoothe... when mature.

Somehow the woman I admire most is th... one who hangs her clothes outdoors in the... wintertime.

One of the most expensive stages a daugh... ter goes into is the one when her friends begi... to get married.

There's always that moment of anticipation, when we sit down to dinner, wondering which of the children, like clocks in a jewelry shop, will strike first.

I have never—no, never—seen lack of beauty given as a cause for divorce.

Once a fire is really low, a man has about as much success coaxing it back as a cat does in coaxing a mouse out of its hole.

The only thing harder to raise than a boy is a rice plant on the desert.

I'm discovering that if you have daughters you don't need to make a better mousetrap.

Life begins when a person first realizes how soon it ends.

Smoke a LUCKY to feel your LEVEL best!

Luckies' fine tobacco picks you up when you're low . . . calms you down when you're tense—puts you on the Lucky level! That's why it's so important to remember that LUCKY STRIKE MEANS FINE TOBACCO —mild, ripe, light tobacco. No wonder more independent tobacco experts—auctioneers, buyers and warehousemen —smoke Luckies regularly than the next two leading brands combined! Get a carton of Luckies today!

L.S./M.F.T.—Lucky Strike Means Fine Tobacco

So round, so firm, so fully packed — so free and easy on the draw

COPR., THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY

THE PERFUME THAT INSPIRED A BALLET

one of the most beloved perfumes

Perfume $18.50, 12.50, 7.50, 3.50
Eau de Toilette 3.75, 2.50
Sachet Powder 1.75
Bath Softener 3.50, 2.50
Talcum Powder 1.00
Dusting Powder 2.00

NEW!
Quelques Fleurs Hand Lotion $1.00

(prices plus tax)

Mark Everything with Cash's

For VACATION! SCHOOL! TRAVEL! HOME!

12 Doz.	$3.50
9 Doz.	$3.00
6 Doz.	$2.40
3 Doz	$1.80
NO-SO Cement 25c (to attach without sewing)

Identify quickly. Protect positively. Personalize distinctively.

CASH'S WOVEN NAMES

Ask your dealer, or write for samples Cash's So. Norwalk 4, Conn

POISON IVY

OAK or SUMAC
New treatment stops itching, dries up blisters quickly—gently—safely.
At druggists, 59¢

Ask for IVY-DRY

AMAZING OFFER — $50 IS YOURS
FOR SELLING ONLY 100 BOXES
WRITE FOR SAMPLES
CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. G-21, White Plains, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 112)

haul pupils to Landsburgh High School in the east end of this county and school busses to haul them to Maxwell High School in the west end. But we have approximately thirty-two miles of hard road over which our busses run. The rest is dirt road. Beyond where our busses can go are great spaces where the rural pupils haven't a chance to pass beyond the eighth grade. I have established three rural high schools in this county. I plan to send you to Winston High School."

"Who'll be on the faculty at the Winston High School?" I asked.

"You'll be all the faculty," he smiled. "You'll have fourteen pupils. Your salary will be one hundred dollars a month."

For a moment I sat thinking. "What subjects will I have to teach?"

"Algebra, Latin, plane geometry, history and English."

"I'm afraid I can't teach algebra."

"You've got mighty good college marks in algebra. I have a transcript of your credits here. That's one reason I'm holding this school for you."

I couldn't tell Superintendent Anderson I had for my roommate at Lincoln Memorial Mason Dorsey Gardner, who had won the award for being the best math student. I couldn't tell him Gardner had worked my algebra and I had written his themes.

"I'll take Winston H'gh School," I said. "I'll be the faculty."

Saturday afternoon in early September I caught the Reo Speedwagon that carried mail and passengers. I was on my way to Winston High School. I had a suitcase with my belongings. I had with me school supplies allotted a rural school.

We followed the Sandy River and then went up Raccoon and over a mountain and down into Hinton Valley. Then we climbed another mountain and, when we reached the top, I saw before me, deep down, one of the prettiest valleys I had ever seen. The Tiber River wound slowly through the fertile farm lands like a silver ribbon in the sunlight. We went down this east wall of the valley, around the curves and up until we came to a store and post office. This was Winston. This was where I got off the Speedwagon. I was going to Baylors', the big white house overlooking the Tiber River. This was where I would room and board.

THAT afternoon, after Lucretia Baylor had shown me to my room, Snookie and Robin Baylor, two pupils whom I would have in Winston High School, went with me to show me the high-school building. This squat, ugly little structure had once been used as a lodge hall. The lodge had been dissolved twenty years ago. When I walked inside a bat barely missed my head in its flight to escape. There were wasp nests, mud daubers' nests and birds' nests above the window. A mavis flew from the nest through a broken window-pane in her escape to freedom.

I walked outside. Of all the thousands of acres of land there were in this spacious valley, I had less than one sixteenth of an acre for my high-school pupils. There was an outdoor privy in each rear corner of this tiny lot. Horseweeds grew as tall as the lodge-house roof. The community's obscene artists had found these privies. I sent Snookie back to the Baylors' to get water, broom, scrub brush, soap and a scythe.

That afternoon I went to work with two good helpers. We scrubbed ceiling, walls and floor. I scythed the small yard and raked the horseweeds from the lot. Then I hacked down the sharp stubble with a hoe. Snookie, Robin and I put the schoolhouse, the privies and the yard in order. We were ready for school Monday morning.

While we were working, a tall boy swaggered up the road and stopped, silently watching us. His face was pimpled. He had elongated blue eyes that squinted brightly when he looked at us. His loose-fitting clothes looked as if they would fall from his body.

"Hiya, Budge," Snookie spoke as soon as he saw him. "Comin' to school Monday?"

"Yep."

for accentuated uplift...

"Allo-ette"

BRASSIERE by Maiden Form

"Allo-Ette" gives fashionable acce ated uplift to average and to slig larger-than-average bosoms. Bande $1.50 up; with 2-inch band, as sh $2.00 up; with 6-inch band, $3.50

GARTER BELTS by M. Form are also skillfully desi and beautifully made. Style sh Tearose, White or Ice Blue S $1.50; others, $.

"There is a Maiden Form for Every Type of Figure!"

© 1948 MFB CO.

Send for free Style Folders: Maiden F Brassiere Company, Inc., New York 16, N

FOOT COMFORT FOR SUMMER SPORTS

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
TESTED AND COMMENDED BY PARENTS MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU THEY WEAR WELL!

Springfoot
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
HEALTHSOX
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Protects active feet at play! Natural-color cotton . . . no dyes or irritants. Absorbs perspiration; helps guard against infection. True-ribbed leg for fit; flat-knit foot for comfort; "Ironyon"-reinforced toes and heels for extra wear.

Sizes 8 to 12 49¢ a pair

Other popular styles—sizes 6 to 13 at 39¢ to $1.00—in leading boys' departments and specialty stores in your community.

For the name of your nearest dealer write:
Wilmington Hosiery Mills, Inc.,
Wilmington 17, Delaware

Springfoot Sox
FOR BOYS FROM SIX TO SIXTY

ADACHE NEURALGIA
NEURITIS
Pain

RELIEVED

incredibly fast

the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend—

ANACIN®

Here's why

Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, it contains not one but a combination of medically proved ingredients. Get Anacin tablets today.

CAT'S PAW

Finest Rubber Heels & Soles!

Wear on approval piece dress looks two sizes:

JUNIOR 11-13 15-17
REGULAR 12-14 16-18-20
HALF 38-40 42-44-46-48

10 DAY TRIAL

Wear this new styled rayon gabardine dress at our risk—if in ten days you are not completely satisfied return dress for full refund.

You'll have the buttons and the beaus when you wear this lush, exquisitely fashioned rayon gabardine—loads of exciting back styling, as well as loveliness in the soft, draped front. Only $10.98

SEND NO MONEY—MAIL COUPON TODAY FOR PROMPT DELIVERY

BONNIE GAYE, Inc. Dept 130
1051 S. LaBrea Ave., Los Angeles 35, Calif.

Rush Buttons 'n Beaus. I'll pay postman $10.98 each plus C.O.D. postage. I may return dress in 10 days for refund if not satisfied. Colors: Black, Winter White, Kelly, Aqua, Gray, Beige.

QUANTITY	SIZE	1st COLOR CHOICE	2nd COLOR CHOICE

Name_____
PLEASE PRINT
Address_____
City_____
Zone_____ State_____

"Here's your teacher." Snookie introduced us. "Mr. Stuart, this is Budge Waters."

"Glad to know you, Budge," I said.

I'd never seen a youth in my life who looked anything like him. I'd never seen one with his peculiar actions when he walked. He used his hands to pull against the wind. This strange youth stood silently watching us work a few minutes. Then he walked away, swaggering as he walked and pulling the air with his hands.

"Are you kidding me about this fellow?" I asked. "Is he really a high-school pupil?"

"I'm telling you the truth," Snookie said. "He'll be the first one here Monday morning. He'll be here by daylight."

"How far away does he live?"

"About seven miles."

"Doesn't he have any work to do at home?"

"Plenty of work. They grow about ten acres of tobacco every year. They raise corn and cane too. Old Budge is a good worker."

"He might be a good worker," I agreed, "but he's going to find it hard to get through high school!"

"Don't you worry, Mr. Stuart. If you're not awfully smart, he'll be teaching you!"

Monday morning when Snookie, Robin and I got to school an hour before time to start, twelve pupils were waiting. Not one was barefooted. They were well dressed too. All but Budge Waters. His clothes were new and clean, but they didn't fit his angular body. There was one new automobile parked near the school. There were two handsome saddle horses tied in the shade of an elm tree. And there was one pony almost as pretty as Sundance tied to the schoolyard fence. The pupils introduced themselves before we started school. There were six girls and eight boys.

About one fourth of the world's work is in repairing mistakes.

—WILLIAM FEATHER:
Haystacks and Smokestacks
(William Feather Co.).

Their schedule was already written on the blackboard. I gave them assignments, and we discussed the beginning lessons. With fourteen pupils and five classes, each forty-five minutes long, I had a little time on my hands. It was not like teaching at Lonesome Valley, where I had fifty-four classes each day.

When I started teaching ancient history, I found one pupil who knew more facts about this subject than I did. He was Budge Waters. I asked Budge if he had taken this subject before. He told me he hadn't, but he had read all his textbooks except algebra that summer. He said algebra was hard for him; the other subjects were easy. Then I asked him to read two paragraphs in his history book, and when he had finished I asked to hold his book. Then I asked him to tell me what he had read. He quoted the book almost verbatim. I asked Budge to read three more pages of history aloud to the class and then tell how much he had got from three pages. Again, he almost quoted three pages. I had heard of photographic memories. This was it. This boy didn't forget, either.

During my first week at Winston High School, I knew my problem was to keep ahead of these pupils, teaching them the subjects that had been hard for me in high school. I had to go home and work long hours in the evenings. I had to know my lessons. I had to study ahead in algebra, Latin and plane geometry. I had to review my history and English too. I had to prepare five subjects.

I had accepted Winston High School, thinking it was a little place among the hills where my pupils would be the products of rural districts like Lonesome Valley. I had brought along a number of books to read so I wouldn't get lonesome. I wanted to have something to do. I found I had plenty to do.

(Continued on Page 147)

"Soaping" dulls hair—
Halo glorifies it!

✓ Not a soap, not a cream—cannot leave dulling film!

✓ Quickly, effectively removes dandruff from both hair and scalp!

✓ Gives fragrant, soft-water lather even in hardest water!

✓ Leaves hair lustrously soft, easy to manage—with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

✓ Halo—not a soap, not a cream—contains no sticky oils, nothing to hide your hair's natural lustre with dulling film. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo brings out glossy, shimmering highlights the very first time you use it! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly, completely in any kind of water—needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. For hair that's naturally colorful, lustrously soft, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

THE DOROTHY GRAY GALLERY OF FASCINATING WOMEN—ONE OF A SERIS

Mrs. John W. Eiman of Philadelphia. Mrs. Eiman is the former Daisy Biddle, daughter of G. Drexel Biddle. Portrait by Roy Spreter

Dorothy Gray Flamboyant [illegible] size lipstick Flamboyant Lasting Lip liquid make-up base set $1.50 plus tax.

Be daring... Be desired...
Be FLAMBOYANT

Definitely not for the shy-in-heart, this brilliant, sensuous new Dorothy Gray color inspired by the Flamboyant, vivid tropical flower. Wear it... if you dare it!

Dorothy Gray

THE DOROTHY GRAY SALON · 445 PARK AVE., N. Y.

(Continued from Page 145)

the end of my first two weeks I knew I earning algebra, Latin and plane geom- I didn't worry about my pupils. All I ed about was keeping ahead of them. I ght I might ease the situation and not to work so hard myself if I brought more books to read. We didn't have a y. We had only a dictionary and an en- pedia.

at was the reason on the Saturday ing of my second week I caught the lwagon for Landsburgh. From Lands- , I walked five miles home. I didn't any way to get back to Winston on Sun- The Speedwagon didn't carry mail on ay. I might be lucky enough to catch a after I walked from W-Hollow to the y River turnpike. I would have a heavy f books to carry a long distance. But I t mind carrying books to pupils as eager d as my Winston High School pupils. illed my suitcase with books I loved. s, I thought, that would keep them ng for some time. I chose books by Tol- Melville, Chekhov, Victor Hugo, de assant, Balzac, Thomas Hardy, Sin- Lewis, Emerson, Whittier, Hamlin Gar- Dreiser, Whitman, Poe, Edgar Lee ers, Bret Harte and Jack London. With itcase full, I followed a fox path across n Ridge to the Sandy River turnpike, was three miles closer than if I had by Landsburgh. I walked up the dusty ike along the river, then up Raccoon y and over the mountain. I walked into the Hinton Valley and up to the f the east wall overlooking the Tiber y. I put my suitcase down and was resting r the shade of a road- tree. I had walked t eleven miles with a -pound load. Then a ger with an Ohio li- on his car drove up asked me to ride. He me all the rest of ay to Winston.

onday I introduced my pupils to these authors. I told them to take the books, them, and exchange them until every- had read them. I told them they were ooks. All I wanted them to do was to care of them and return them when they through.

y getting novels, books of poetry, essays short stories didn't keep my pupils from ding me. How I wished that I had ed harder in high school and college! was the first time in my life I had ever d of high-school pupils crowding their er. It had always been the other way nd.

EN I had first come to Winston I won- d what my pupils did for recreation. One ing in September I was invited to Bill den's home. He was one of my pupils. ather had invited six or seven of the lo- nusicians to play for us. We sat in the , where the grass was dying and the h-tree leaves had turned golden and the n was high in the sky above us. We lis- d to this local band play their banjos, es, guitar, mandolin and accordion from n until eleven. They never played the tune twice, and often when they played t breakdown, one of the listeners would e. I had never heard old-time music so tiful as this.

here was hardly a family in this big vi- y who didn't have a musician. This was of their recreation. People had learned to ish their own music just as they had ed to plant, cultivate and harvest crops heir food supply. They depended upon nselves for practically everything.

went with my pupils, their parents and hbors to corn huskings, apple peelings, stringings, square dances and to the ng of the bride when there was a wedding. n we rode mules many miles through kness or moonlight to these community ts. I never missed a party at the mill n they made sorghum molasses in this t cane country. We went to the sorghum , shoved one another into the skimmings- and ate the soft sweet foam from the boiling cane juice with long paddles whittled from willow wood. I went to all the churches. I went to parties where we played Post Office and danced Skip to My Lou.

I didn't worry about recreation. I found plenty of recreation. It was the kind of recreation in which the old, middle-aged and young took part.

Not one of my pupils had ever seen a stage play. If one had ever seen a movie, I'd never heard of it. They didn't have to leave land-locked Winston to find recreation. They had it at home. As the autumn days wore on, they popped corn over blazing wood fires and made molasses-and-popcorn balls. Each pupil invited me to his home to spend the night. This was an old custom, for in past years the teacher had boarded with his pupils, since his salary wasn't enough to enable him to pay his board and have anything left.

When the hunting season came, I hunted quail with my pupils. I hunted rabbits with them in the Tiber weed fields. My pupils were good marksmen. They, as I had once done, hunted for animal pelts, shipped them, and bought books and clothes with the money.

NOBODY could keep me from starting home. I was determined to go. I needed more novels, poems and essays for my pupils to read. I wanted to see Superintendent Larry Anderson. Lucretia Baylor prepared a quick hot lunch for me while I packed my clothes and got ready. For my teaching day ended at 3:30 P.M. and I had walked the three fourths of a mile to Baylors' in a hurry. It was early in the afternoon, but the dark December skies hung low over the valley, and there was six inches of snow on the ground. I had seventeen miles ahead of me. The only way I could get to my destination was to walk.

"If you were a boy of mine," Ottis Baylor said, "I wouldn't let you go. I know the road to Landsburgh better than you do. It's treacherous when you leave the Tiber Valley road and try the short cut around Laurel Ridge."

I wasn't listening to Ottis Baylor. I knew that I was fast on foot. I had walked thirty-five miles in a day. I was positive I could cover a mile every twelve minutes. I thought, if I had luck, I could make the journey in three and a half hours. I allowed myself four hours and that was plenty of time. I said good-by to the Baylors and was on my way.

The December wind whistled in the barren shoe-make tops, where the redbirds hopped from limb to limb and chirruped plaintive notes. They were searching for a scanty supper of frozen seeds. Darkness would come early on this short winter day. Going up the mountain, I made excellent time. I followed the path all right. I had to break the snow, for no one had traveled this path. I knew how to follow the path by the clumps of trees, rock cliffs and fences.

When I reached the big opening, a cleared cove where tobacco had been farmed, I knew I was halfway to Laurel Ridge. And from Baylors' to Laurel Ridge was approximately three miles. I looked at my watch and it had taken me thirty minutes. This was slower than I had expected. The snow was deeper high on the mountain. The path was harder to break.

Before I reached the second small opening near Laurel Ridge, I lost my path. I walked into a forest of tough-butted white oaks. They grew close together, shutting out the diminishing winter light. I had never seen these trees before. I turned quickly, retracing my steps until I found the path. I knew I'd have to be more careful. I'd not walked more than a hundred yards when a red fox, almost as big as a collie, crossed my path. When he saw me, he took off with full speed and disappeared in the wintry dusk that was getting thicker.

I had reached Laurel Ridge, for there was a five-strand rusty barbed-wire fence nailed to the trees. I knew this fence. It followed Laurel Ridge some distance before it turned back down the mountain. When I held my arm up to look at my watch, I couldn't see the figures

(Continued on Page 149)

The new is what has been forgotten.
—AUSTIN O'MALLEY: Keystones of Thought (Devin-Adair Company).

petal soft...

leaf cool...

Queen Quality

WHITES

...with a gracious air, a touch of elegance. You'll make such a pretty picture in these carefully crafted Queen Quality designs that fit so smoothly into your summer plans.

50 YEARS Queen Quality SHOES STYLE QUALITY FIT

$10.95 • $11.95
some styles $12.95

Modess ... because

(Continued from Page 147)

he dial. I didn't know what time it was, I knew it was early. I knew I was in the cloud, for the big snowflakes were fall- around me.

l I had to do was turn to my left after I hed Laurel Ridge. I could follow the fence if I had to follow it with my hand as I ed. I carried my suitcase with my right d. My left hand was free. But I didn't h the fence. Not yet. I was following el Ridge road. I had hunted much at t in my lifetime. Darkness had never ered me too much. But now I couldn't he woods and I knew it couldn't possibly x o'clock. I was in a snowstorm.

hen I heard voices, and the sound was t to hear. I had barely time to side-step a mule team. I almost walked into a e before I saw him. Yet there was a ed lantern on the jolt wagon the mules pulling. When I recognized Eif Potters, topped his mule team in great surprise. asked where I was going on a night like told Eif Potters and his son, Zeke, who sitting on the wagon beside him, I was on way home. That v wasn't falling n in Tiber Valley n I left, not more n two hours ago. told me they n't been in the vstorm until they hed the top of coon Hill. Then nvited me to get he wagon and go ıe with them, but fused.

n this lonely e, high up in a w cloud, I said d night to Eif and e and was on my , for I had lost ut five minutes ing to them. I nged on alone. I ted for the fence n an outstretched d in the darkness, I couldn't find it. Eif had warned me ut one place. He d me if I bore too to my left I would into a vast tract timber on the last l of Tiber Valley. d for this reason I e to my right, feeling with my feet, while snow came down as I had never felt it fall ore. One thing I had forgotten to ask Eif was matches. He was a pipe smoker too. had smoked his pipe all the time he sat his wagon. If only I had a match!

was stumbling over the road. Once I went water to my knee. Then I knew I must be the Laurel Ridge road. This was a deep gon-wheel rut, and Eif had driven over nd had broken the thin ice down to the ter. My foot was wet. Water squashed in shoe. One of my galoshes was filled with ter.

IEN I stepped into a hole of water with dry foot. I went in to my knee. Both nts legs were wet to my knees. Again and ain I stepped into water, but my feet were eady wet and it didn't make any difference did get them wet again. I kept moving. I lowed the road the best I could. I knew I s on the Laurel Ridge road. I would soon ach the turnpike at the top of Raccoon Hill. at was where the Laurel Ridge road ended. d this distance was approximately three les from where my path from Baylors' had ne through the barbed-wire fence onto the urel Ridge. If I could only see my watch! ad surely walked three more miles!

Time in the night, I thought, when one was lking alone, might seem longer than it ac- ally was. I kept on going. I waded water d I waded snow. Then I knew I'd gone far ough to reach the turnpike on Raccoon ill—the turnpike that would take me straight to Landsburgh. While I thought about the fast time I would be able to make on the turnpike when I reached it, I suddenly walked into a cornfield. I thought it was a cornfield. I thought I was standing beside a fodder shock. It stood like a white wigwam before me. I pushed my hand through the snow and felt the dry fodder stalks. I knew now that I was lost.

I COULDN'T even retrace my steps. I couldn't see them. I was lost. That was all. I was in this cornfield and I would have to make the best of it. I stood beside the fodder shock, while I screamed at the top of my voice. I knew that in this part of Greenwood County there were miles and miles where there wasn't a house. But I screamed anyway. I thought somebody might hear me and come to my rescue. The only answer I got was the faraway barking of a fox. When I screamed he mocked me with his barking.

When I had reached this fodder shock, my feet were still warm and my face was wet with perspiration. But in this open space where corn had grown on the mountaintop there was an incessant sweep of wind. I had to walk to keep warm. I had to do something in a hurry.

Then a thought came to me. If there was one fodder shock here, there were others. I walked a few paces and found another fodder shock. I put my arm around the top of the shock and dragged it back to the first one. I carried eight fodder shocks to one place. The fodder shocks were not large. The shocks were not so tall as I was. I used one hand to carry them, I held to my suitcase with the other. I was afraid I'd lose it.

After I'd pulled these fodder shocks together, I laid the heavy ends to the windward side of the mountain. I bedded three shocks down on the snow. Then I put a shock on each side of the floor I'd made. I stood two shocks up on the windward side, to pull down on me as soon as I was ready to lie down. The last shock I stood up, to use where the fodder would be thinnest above me. Then I stood on the fodder and pulled off my shoes. The wind-driven snow was cold to my wet feet and legs. I pulled off my overcoat and wet pants. I took a dry soiled shirt from my suitcase and dried the water from my feet and legs. I tied dry dirty shirts around my feet. I put on a pair of soiled trousers I was taking to have dry-cleaned. I bundled myself with all the clothes I had in my suitcase. I lay down and spread my overcoat over me. Now I reached up and pulled the fodder shocks down upon me. The fodder quilt was thick but not too heavy. I lay there and listened to the mice in the fodder around me and the ticking of my watch, while over me the wind moaned and the snow fell.

I knew that I should not go to sleep. For if I did the wind might blow the fodder from over me. I would freeze to death and I would not be found in this cornfield until the farmer came to haul his fodder home.

I must have been half asleep when I heard the hoot owls start calling to one another from the timber all around this cornfield. I no longer heard the wind, nor felt it seeping through the fodder. I parted the fodder stalks to see what had happened. There were a million bright stars high in the clear blue sky and I could see the dark outlines of trees. Among these trees were the hoot owls.

I pulled the fodder quilt back over me and lay there listening to the hoots of the owls,

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Image

By Naomi Gilpatrick

"The caper tree shall be destroyed: because man shall go into the house of his eternity"—Eccles. 12:5

We made a treaty with the flesh
That this shall be our happiness!
Your eyes on my eyes,
All of that and nothing less.

From that mating came a child
Who with our breath ran up a hill
And picked the caper berries wild
And ate them of his own free will!

The lilt of his head, the tone
Of his song confessed him lepre-chaun,
But he played like a child of May
And all the devils stayed away.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Only one soap gives your skin this exciting Bouquet

You, too, can possess this dainty appeal... this romantic fragrance men love!

Bathe every day with Cashmere Bouquet Soap . . . to surround yourself with a captivating fragrance men love! It comes only from a secret wedding of rare perfumes far more costly than you would expect to find in any soap. Popular girls, for 80 years, have known this exciting secret. Do as they do. Use Cashmere Bouquet Soap in your daily bath . . . for your complexion, too!

Cashmere Bouquet

Adorns your skin with the fragrance men love —

Now! Cashmere Bouquet Offers You for a Limited Time Only!

Professional Style Hair Brush

(Manufactured by the makers of famous Hughes Brushes)

Here's a wonderful "Professional Style" brush—a $2.00 retail value—made for us by the manufacturers of famous "Hughes" brushes. Clear, sparkling DuPont Lucite—with springy DuPont Nylon bristles that give stimulating, "deep action" brushing. Adds graceful, useful beauty to any dressing table. Mail coupon today!

Regular $2.00 Value ONLY 50¢

With 2 Cashmere Bouquet Soap Wrappers

Order Now While Supply Lasts!

Cashmere Bouquet, P. O. Box 138
New York 46, N. Y.

I enclose.....in coin. (Do not send stamps.) Please send me .....Professional Style hair brushes as described in this advertisement.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....Zone.....State.....

Order one or as many as you wish. For each brush ordered, enclose 50¢ in coin and 2 Cashmere Bouquet Soap wrappers. Offer good in Continental U. S. Closes July 30, 1949.

"The Curtain's Bee-oo-tiful! I'm Almost Tempted to Do Without Drapes!"

It's a familiar story! Our eager homemaker plans a regulation glass curtain and drapery window ensemble. But when she sees Queentex Rayon Curtains actually on the window, she gets ideas!

Queentex Curtains are so flawless in texture . . . they hang in such luxurious, luminous, generous folds . . . their whites are so snowy, their decorator pastels so exquisite . . . women are tempted to let drapes "go hang"! Drapes are like gilding the lily, they say.

And they are even more delighted when Queentex Curtains emerge from the tub as crisp, as lovely, as full, as rich in color as ever. No special care in washing or ironing required . . . they launder beautifully. Write for handsome, illustrated booklet, "The Decorator Touch in Window Beauty." Queen Valley Fabrics, Inc., Box 634 Pawtucket, R. I. Exclusive manufacturers of Queentex Rayon Curtains . . . for 25 years weavers of rayon marquisettes.

QUEENTEX

the perfected washable rayon curtain

to the mice and to the ticking of my watch. I thought that I could stay awake until morning. Since the skies had cleared, I knew the weather before morning would be sub-zero on this mountaintop. I went to sleep dreaming that I would not go to sleep.

When I awoke, there were fewer stars in the sky. Daylight didn't come on these short December days until nearly eight. I tried to see what time it was, but I couldn't see the hands of my watch. The owls had flown away and all was silent save for the ticking of my watch and the mice that had never slept the whole night through. I had slept warm on this cold night. I had warmed the fodder for the mice. The place was comfortable for all of us. But now I sat up and placed the fodder around me like a wigwam. I wanted the day to break so I could put on my clothes and be on my way. I had never been so hungry in my life.

As soon as it was light enough to see what I was doing, I started dressing. The legs of the pants I'd pulled off were frozen stiff and hard. My shoes had frozen so that I couldn't get them on. I didn't have a match to build a fire to thaw them. It was impossible to put them on. I wrapped a soiled shirt around each foot. I put my feet into my frozen galoshes. I put my frozen shoes and pants into my suitcase. It was light enough for me to see dim footprints on the snow. I could retrace myself. I wanted to see where I had made my mistake.

I followed my tracks, dim little prints in the crusted snow, for more than a mile. Then I came to Laurel Ridge. Far, far down below I could see Hinton Valley, now a great white silence except for the dark leafless trees. If I had gone just fifty feet to my left I would have found the turnpike on Raccoon Hill. I had borne too far to my right, after Eif Potters had warned me about turning left.

Does any thoughtful man suppose that the present experiment in civilization is the last the world will see?
—GEORGE SANTAYANA.

Though it was Saturday morning, when farmers would be on their way to Landsburgh, I was the first person on the turnpike. I walked down Raccoon Hill, and in the distance, far down the road, I heard voices. They were coming toward me. I saw three teams hitched to a snow plow, and the county road workers were breaking the road. I walked past them and they looked at me. I hadn't noticed the fodder blades still hanging to my overcoat, and I brushed them off before I stopped at Gullet's grist mill.

I knew Ephriam Gullet. When I went inside the grist mill he asked if I wasn't traveling early. I told him I had been lost and had slept on the mountain. He put more coal in the pot-bellied stove. He made a pot of coffee. I thawed my shoes and my pants legs while I drank hot coffee and warmed myself in front of the red-hot stove. Ephriam told me that his thermometer was twelve below at six that morning.

When Superintendent Larry Anderson unlocked his office door at nine, I was there waiting for him. I had caught a ride on a coal truck from Gullet's grist mill to Landsburgh.

"Well, how did you get here so early?" Superintendent Anderson asked. "You didn't come all the way from Winston this morning?"

"Just part of the way," I said.

"How are you getting along with your school out there?"

"Superintendent Anderson," I said, "I'm up against teaching those fourteen pupils. I've not got a slow one among them. I've got a couple of average pupils, and they can do every bit of work I give them. And I've got one that's a genius. He's only a freshman in high school. I tell you, Budge Waters is a genius! I've got six or seven A pupils and he is above them!"

Superintendent Anderson sat looking at me for a minute. Then he spoke thoughtfully: "Well, what is your problem?"

"I haven't any," I said. "But there is one thing I'd like to do. That's why I've called on you this morning. I'd like to test my own judgment to see if I am wrong or right in my opinion of my pupils. I'd like to know how to go about entering them in the State Scholastic Contest. The contest is held e spring, isn't it?"

"Yes, but there is an elimination proc Your pupils will have to take an exam tion against the pupils in Landsburgh H School. Then, if you are successful th they'll go to Auckland to enter the dist contest. If they are successful there, the go on to the state contest."

I knew that to get past Landsburgh, w have to compete with the best from ne four hundred pupils. To get past the regio we'd have to compete with the best sele from thousands. Yet it took only one b to win a contest. I knew Budge Waters that brain if it was properly trained.

"If it's all right with you, superintende I said, "you make arrangements and s date for us to meet Landsburgh High Sch in algebra, Latin, English, plane geome and history."

"I'll do it." He smiled. "Would someti in January suit you?"

"Any time's all right with me," I said

That day in early January we dismi school. It was too bad that another blizz had swept our rugged land and that a sti ing wind was smiting the valleys and hills. But this didn't stop the boys and from going. Leona Maddox, my best L pupil, couldn't go along. Her father woul let her ride a mule seventeen miles to Lan burgh to compete in a contest on a day this.

At eleven o'clock we rode across the Lan burgh High School yard and hitched mules to the fence. Then we walked in the high school, wh Principal Ernest Chart met and welcomed us.

In the principal's of my pupils and I hudd around the gas stove. T Landsburgh High Sch principal didn't feel ab the contest the way we f To him, this was just "setup" to test his pupils for the distr contest. He told me this when he went af the sealed envelopes that held the questio

"These questions were made out by t State Department of Education," he sa "I don't know how hard they are."

We were asked to go to one of the large classrooms. A Landsburgh High Sch teacher had charge of giving the tests. Wh the Landsburgh pupils came through t door to compete against my pupils, we kn why Principal Charters had selected t large classroom.

I entered redheaded Jesse Jarvis to co pete with ten of their plane-geometry pup I entered Billie Leonard against twenty-o of their selected algebra pupils.

"Budge, you'll have to represent us grammar, English literature and history," said. "And I believe I'll put you in civil g ernment. Is that all right?"

"Yes." Budge had never had a course civil government. All he knew about it w what he had read in connection with histor

"Robert Batson, you enter in history a grammar. . . . Robin Baylor, you enter algebra. . . . Snookie Baylor, you enter algebra and plane geometry. . . . Sorry, M Charters," I said, "we don't have anyone enter in Latin. My best Latin pupil couldn make this trip."

After the contest had begun, I left t room. I took our mules to Walter Scott barn on the east end of Landsburgh, where fed and watered them.

With the exception of an interval when t contestants ate a quick lunch, the conte lasted until 2:30 P.M. Just as soon as Bud had finished with civil government, w started grading the papers. All the pupi were requested to leave the room.

We graded the papers with keys. M Charters, Miss Madden and two other teach ers and I did the grading. When we wer through, Mr. Charters called the contestant into the classroom.

"I want to read you the scores of this co test," Principal Charters said. His voice wa

(Continued on Page 152)

Modern! Gray china, yellow linen sets your sterling all a-glitter. For centerpiece, twine a flowering vine around a knarl of driftwood.

"I give a sense of security to each member of the family. Even children feel the family solidarity that Heirloom Sterling symbolizes. Over the years I'll save you money, too. For, being solid silver all the way through, I can't wear out. A lifetime of use just makes me lovelier! And money can't measure the pleasure and pride you'll feel in me always—the graciousness and importance I'll lend your every meal."

Compare prices and see for yourself that Heirloom Sterling is your best buy. Anyone can own this thrilling possession. These 6 magnificent, everlasting pieces of sterling cost no more than you might spend on an extra handbag! Start with at least two Mansion House* place settings on easy terms, and add more later. Ask your jeweler to show you, also, the much beloved Damask Rose* in Heirloom Sterling.

*Trade Mark. Copyright, 1949, Oneida, Ltd.

You get these
2 Big Extras with CLOROX!

1. GENTLER BLEACHING ACTION ...longer life for linens!

CLOROX makes your loveliest white and color-fast cottons and linens snowy-white and color-bright. And, too, linens laundered with Clorox last longer, for Clorox is free from caustic and other harsh substances... made by an exclusive formula protected by U. S. patent. Conserve your costly linens the extra-gentle Clorox way!

2. GREATER DISINFECTING EFFICIENCY ...added health protection!

THE instant you apply a Clorox solution to sink, drainboard, wash basin, bath tub or toilet bowl it goes to work killing germs! Yes, in routine cleaning of these and other household danger zones, Clorox kills germs quicker than any other product of its kind... it does a better job of disinfecting because it's free from caustic, therefore more efficient!

To Conserve Linens . . . to Protect Health . . .
LET CLOROX GO TO WORK FOR YOU!

IN LAUNDRY! IN KITCHEN! IN BATHROOM!

Directions on Label

CLOROX IS AMERICA'S FAVORITE... IT BLEACHES • REMOVES STAINS • DEODORIZES • DISINFECTS

(Continued from Page 150)

nervous. "Budge Waters, winner in English literature. Budge Waters, winner in grammar. Budge Waters, winner in history with almost a perfect score. Budge Waters, winner in civil government. . . . Why didn't you bring just this one boy?" Principal Charters asked me.

"Because I've got other good pupils," I retorted.

"Billie Leonard, winner in algebra. Jesse Jarvis, second in plane geometry, lost by one point. Snookie Baylor and Robin Baylor, tied for second place in algebra. . . . Congratulations," said Principal Charters, "to your pupils and to you. It looks as though Winston High will represent this county in the District Scholastic Contest. I've never heard of such a remarkable thing."

Soon we gave Superintendent Anderson, his rural teachers and the people of Greenwood additional pleasant news. Billie Leonard and Budge Waters entered the District Scholastic Contest. Budge Waters won three contests—grammar, history and civil government. Billie Leonard won first place in algebra. Then Billie Leonard took pneumonia fever and couldn't go to the State Contest. Budge Waters went alone and captured two first places, history and grammar. I knew my judgment of my pupils wasn't wrong.

OUR school year was coming to a close. One day, after school, while I sat on the bank of the Tiber, fishing, I heard the sycamore leaves swish behind me. I was getting a bite on my hook when it happened, but the fish suddenly stopped biting. He must have heard the noise too. A big man wearing a gray suit, cap, white shirt and bow tie came through the brush.

"I'm Larry Kenwood," he introduced himself. "I'm chairman of the Landsburgh City school board."

"I'm glad to know you," I said.

"The Landsburgh City board members have decided to hire you for principal of Landsburgh High School for this coming school year. It's a big school and your main problem will be discipline, but you have a good reputation and we've decided you're the man. Will you be interested?"

"Of course."

"Then meet with us the second Tuesday of next month in the Landsburgh High School office."

"I'll be there," I said.

When I reached Landsburgh High School, three big buses were unloading county pupils. Many of these pupils had come from farms fifteen miles away. The majority had their morning chores to do on farms before they could start to school. Many had to rise as early as four in the morning. To my surprise, eight of my fourteen Winston High School pupils were there. Budge Waters had walked to Landsburgh to follow me. I asked Budge where he was staying. He didn't have a place to stay or money to pay for board and lodging. I told him to go home with me. Others had secured boardinghouses in Landsburgh.

There were three times as many pupils in Landsburgh High School now as there were when I was a pupil here. The schoolhouse was the same size as when I had graduated. When all the pupils were inside, we didn't have room to seat them. We had to use my office for a classroom. We had to borrow chairs and tables from a local church to give our pupils a place to sit and work.

My first half day at Landsburgh High School was interrupted by pupils who had been expelled the year before. They asked in good faith to be reinstated. They were intelligent-looking youths with good steady eyes. My brother, James Stuart, was one of these. One of the first things I had done was to reinstate him; now I reinstated them. I didn't even ask why they had been expelled.

There was a feud among the players of our football team. Jack Alexander came to my office one day after school. He said he had starred three years for the Landsburgh Wildcats and Rodger Sutherland was jealous of

APEX
Always Kills Moths

APEX MOTH CRYSTALS AND NUGGETS 69c—$1.33
APEX MOTH CAKES Two Sizes 23c 33c
APE MOTH VAPOR for large clos 79c Refills—6

APEX
in its convenient forms, not only kill the adult moth but also kills larvae . . prevents eggs from hatching . . . ther fore it eliminates all possibility of mot damage. 100% Paradichlorbenzen

A CLEAN HOME PRODUCT
Guaranteed Good Housekee
CLEAN HOME PRODUCTS, INC., CHICAGO, IL

When Figures Count... Weigh with Counselo

Smooth figure lines are fashic lines . . . let your Counselor perso scale help guide you to smartne and figure perfection. Beautif accurate, durable . . . ask your deal for Counselor — the smart figur guide of fashionable women.

The Brearley Company
Rockford, Illinois

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

COUNSELO STREAMLINED Scale

Smith's "IRON-ON RUG BINDIN

"Just iron it on." No sewing—it's easy to bind rugs and carpets (with moderate iron) in a few minutes. Also repairs awnings, luggage, upholstery; articles of canvas, leather, cloth, rubber or other materials. Insist on SMITH'S, the heavy tape with the brown gum adhesive back that sticks to any surface.

AT DIME & DEPT. STORES
(NOTION COUNTERS)
1½", 15¢ a yard. 2¼", 20¢ a yard

MADE IN 12 COLORS
Insist on Instruction Sheet with Purchase

Or mail remittance with rug ravelling for color (no C. O. D. please) to GILMAN B. SMITH CO.
907 Broadway, New York 10, N. Y.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeepin

TALL GALS
SEND FOR FREE SHOE BOOKLE
BUY SHOECRAFT SALON SHOES DIRECT VIA MAIL!
TALL GALS FAMOUS FIFTH AVENUE SHOES IN SIZES 2½ to 13 WIDTHS AAAAA TO C. MONEY BACK GUARANTEE IF RETURNED UNWORN WITHIN 10 DAYS
SEND PENNY POSTAL TODAY FOR FREE 24 PAGE BOOKLET OF EXTRA LONG NYLON HOSE, NEWEST COLORS SIZES 11 TO 13½, 12 ONLY $1.95 PR
SHOECRAFT Tall Gal's Fifth Avenue Sh 693 Fifth Avenue, New York

SHAMPOO without water

EW DRY WAY TAKES
NLY 10 minutes

TAYS IN! You'll thrill to the glorious nipoo restores beautiful sheen—withurbing your wave.

AND EASY! No water, no soap, no dry-th its simple mitt applicator, fragrant o removes excess oil, dirt and hair n just 10 minutes. Leaves your hair clean and fresh!

Minipoo
HE QUICK DRY SHAMPOO
Shampoos and handy Mitt in each package

MAZING!! NEW!!
"DEW"
RAY DEODORANT
IN THE MAGICAL
"SELF-ATOMIZING" BOTTLE
PERSPIRATION AND TROUBLES! Keeps you
ly pure, socially secure.
TIER THAN CREAMS!
" never touches hands.
nessy. Squeeze flexible
, spray on gentle mist.
DEODORANT
TAINING "RETSELANE"
p perspiration trouble, perspiration stains othes. Removes odor.
T ROT CLOTHES!
irritate normal skin.
VES MONEY! year's supply only 98¢ Plus tax
s than 2¢ a week
EEZE FLEXIBLE BOTTLE!
"DEW" ®
SPRAYS ITSELF ON!
OR A REFUND OF MONEY
ranteed by Housekeeping
ADVERTISED THEREIN

him. He had always played in the backfield while Rodger had always played on the line. This was their fourth year on the same football team and for the past three years Rodger had failed to block for him when he carried the ball. He said Rodger would block for any other ball carrier from the backfield. So he said that he was going to hurt Rodger.

I asked him if they had ever had any trouble before they played football. He told me this story: Each family had kept cows in the same pasture on the steep rim of hills on the south side of the town. He and Rodger used to fight every time they met in the pasture. Their families had fought each other politically down through the years. He said they went to different churches. They didn't have but one thing in common: that the children from each clan went to the public school.

When he had finished I told him no generation should inherit the quarrels of an older generation. I talked with Jack long after the school busses had reached their destinations and the Landsburgh students had reached home. This was important to him, for he was keeping away from football practice since he thought Coach Watson was siding with Rodger Sutherland.

Next day I talked to Coach Watson. He told me this feud had divided his football team into two camps. Jack Alexander had his following and Rodger Sutherland had his. Each had about the same number and every man on the squad took sides with one or the other.

Jack and Rodger quarreled and threatened each other in my office. When I suggested that I might suspend both of them, they said that wouldn't solve their differences. Each confessed that he hated the other. They would have fought in my office if the coach and I hadn't preserved order.

> Always do right. It will gratify some people and astonish the rest.
> —MARK TWAIN.

"You fellows come with me," I said.

Rodger, Jack, Coach Watson and I walked out behind the schoolhouse. I took a stick and drew a big circle on the athletic field.

"Since there is no other way to solve your differences," I said, "I want you to get in this circle and fight it out. After the fight, don't either of you ever come and tell me what you're going to do to the other. If you do, you'll leave this school forever."

"This suits me fine, Mr. Stuart," Jack said.

"It suits me too," Rodger said.

They went into the ring. Each man was a good boxer, but gloves would have made the fight too easy for them. The football players came around to watch the fight.

Jack Alexander was nineteen years old. He was six feet four and weighed 190 pounds. Rodger Sutherland was five ten and weighed 195 pounds. He was nineteen years old. He was the best-muscled man I had ever seen. When these men struck each other it was like mules kicking. They followed up short and fast.

The fight lasted approximately five minutes. Blood spurted. Faces and shoulders were red with blood. Suddenly Rodger Sutherland reached for a stick that lay outside the ring. We knew the fight was finished, and we stepped in. We took hold of Rodger and wouldn't let him have the stick. He was glad to stop fighting. Jack was glad too.

"If any more football players have any grievances," I said, "this is the way you will settle them."

It was a strange thing for us to see. Jack Alexander walked over to Rodger Sutherland and laid around his shoulders. Rodger and Jack went to the showers together as if they had finished a hard football game.

From this time on Rodger blocked for Jack when he carried the ball. And Jack carried the ball for many touchdowns. The feuding Alexander and Sutherland clans of our Landsburgh Wildcats were solidified into one unit.

"Satina in my starch makes my ironing 3 times easier!"

WRITES MRS. FRANKLIN ELMER, PORTLAND, OREGON

"I HOPE I never have to do without Satina," writes Mrs. Elmer. "I use it in my starch for all my starching. Satina makes the ironing all of 3 times easier and it smells so nice!"

Satina is a wonderful ironing aid that you use with boiled or unboiled starch. It dissolves easily in boiling water or the boiling starch solution.

It not only makes ironing lots easier, it makes clothes smell fresher, look newer, and stay clean longer, too!

FREE FULL-SIZE PACKAGE

WE'RE SO SURE you'll love Satina, if we can just get you to try it once, that we're offering you a free full-size package. Enough for 4 big starchings! Just you try it and judge Satina for yourself!

SATINA, DEPT. 94, Battle Creek, Michigan

Dear Sirs: Satina sounds good to me. Now I'd like a free full-size package to see how much easier it makes my starched ironing.

NAME_____

STREET_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

A Product of General Foods

Satina users say: Put SATINA in your starch!

It makes starched ironing 3 times easier!"

You'll love 'em in December

as you do in May

IT'S strawberry time—time to enjoy berries at the peak of the season. Naturally, your family delights in fresh variations. The heavenly one shown here is a de luxe "Strawberry Chiffon Pie", tempting and glamorous, made with KARO* Syrup. KARO brings out the luscious ripe flavor of strawberries, raspberries and peaches . . . gives your filling just the right degree of sweetness without masking natural juicy goodness.

Strawberry Chiffon Pie

1 envelope gelatin
2 tablespoons cold water
2 egg yolks
¾ cup KARO Syrup, Red Label
†1 cup crushed strawberries
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 egg whites
⅛ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons sugar
¾ cup heavy cream, whipped
1 9-in. baked pastry shell

Soften gelatin in cold water. Beat egg yolks slightly in top of double boiler; add KARO Syrup. Cook over boiling water, about 5 minutes, stirring constantly, until mixture thickens slightly. Add gelatin; stir until dissolved. Cool slightly. Combine strawberries and lemon juice; add to gelatin mixture. Chill until slightly thickened. Add salt to egg whites and beat until stiff but not dry; gradually beat in sugar. Fold in strawberry mixture; then lightly fold in whipped cream. Pile into baked pastry shell. Chill thoroughly before serving. Garnish with whipped cream and strawberries, if desired.

†Note: Raspberries or peaches may be used in place of strawberries.

*KARO is a registered trade-mark of Corn Products Refining Co., N. Y.

SEND FOR THIS NEW BOOK

FREE!

It can be May time in December, too. Just preserve or freeze berries and fruits at their ripe peak with KARO Syrup and sugar. KARO protects natural fresh flavor and color . . . gives your fruits a glorious gloss—so appetizing! For complete directions for canning and freezing with KARO, send now for your FREE KARO booklet, "Finer Canned and Frozen Fruits". Drop a post card to Karo, Dept. N, Box 647, Central Station, St. Louis, Mo.

There are three kinds of KARO: 1. Red Label (crystal white), 2. Blue Label (golden dark), 3. Green Label (maple-y flavor).

My room in the Landsburgh Hotel was directly above Main Street. From my window I could see almost every street and intersection except along the river front toward the north. This was the quiet residential section of Landsburgh.

Perhaps I was lucky to get this room in the Landsburgh Hotel. I could not have got any other place where I could learn more about the town. I had selected it because it was a nicely furnished room and was empty. I didn't know that it was a key to the night activities of the town. My first night in this room I shall never forget.

After dinner at the hotel, I had taken a walk from one end of town to the other. People greeted me and I greeted them. Many were parents of the pupils I had in school, and I greeted many of my pupils. After my walk I went back to my room and made preparations for my next day's work. Then I switched off my lights to go to bed.

After I got in bed I couldn't sleep for the noise. It was not that I had come from the quietness of a farmhouse in W-Hollow, for I had spent my summer in Nashville, Tennessee, not far from the Peabody College campus where the streetcars screeched and automobiles zoomed by at all hours of the night. This was a different noise. Landsburgh didn't have streetcars and the cars didn't speed down Main Street. The noise I was hearing was loud voices and hilarious laughter. Many of the voices were familiar to me. The laughter was familiar too. I got up and sat by the window. It was midnight now and the town was just coming to life under the bright moons of dry electric lights up and down Main Street and out into shadowy bystreets, where the small street lights were few and far between.

At this late hour I saw my Landsburgh pupils walking the streets. I saw a few girls and many boys. My guess was there were 30 per cent of the Landsburgh High School pupils. These were the pupils who were tardy in the mornings, who made low grades. And these were the pupils whose parents criticized the teachers for giving their sons and daughters low marks.

The Landsburgh High School principal and faculty had received much criticism about the high-school teen-agers' drinking at night and over the week ends, in this section of Kentucky that had long been dry. I wondered about the parents of these boys. I thought they must know, or have pretty good ideas, where they got their liquor. For where did the judge get his? Where did many of the businessmen in the town get theirs? body in the town, I was quite sure where they got it. I was now finding

I had heard about Landsburgh's fi bootlegger who sold a good brand of whisky. He had bootlegged for a living time he had lived in Landsburgh. Nev had the officers of the law, no matter political faction was in power, arrest man. From my window I saw him street, talking to this one and tha Though the weather was mild, he w topcoat. In this topcoat, I was later t had pockets in the lining where he his half pints and pints, each on separate pocket so the bottles w clank together when he walked. I sa going on night after night.

I couldn't go meddling in the town' ness. Yet the town's business was m ness as long as it affected Landsburgh School pupils. And these things were ing our school. How would I get these lems over to the people without everybody mad at me? I didn't want young crusader. But I knew the spirit and progress of Landsburgh School depended upon everybody in th munity. I had to have co-operation.

The Parent-Teachers organizatio been more or less a social function parents and teachers got together and tea and ate cakes at the end of each m I thought it time to do something drink and eat. It was time we did som constructive for the high school an munity. But I didn't know how to go presenting my problem to these moth seldom did a father attend one of the P meetings.

Then something happened that ga the chance. We had arranged a sc whereby two teachers remained at th school during noon hour while the went downtown for their lunches. We r this schedule. My turn came to be high school during the noon hour.

heard gambling had been going on b the high board fence that surround athletic field. I made it a point to wa surely around this fence. Autumn was air and the sycamores, birches and w between the schoolhouse and the rive flaunting their bright-colored leaves autumn wind. The air was crisp and breathe. It was a beautiful day.

When I walked around the corner high board fence, I came upon the youn

"Remember the good old days? All you did was peel your potatoes, drop them in a pot of water, let them boil, and poke them with a fork to see if they were ready."

The Most Beautiful, Colored POPULAR-PRICED Curtains in America

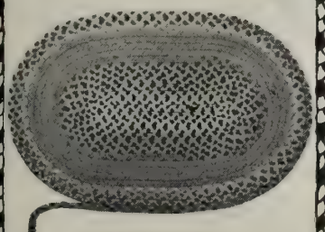
The magnificent, colorful Beacon Luxury Sheer, illustrated, headlines a diversified array of Beacon-Net Curtains for spring. Lovely, lacy textures with beautifully colored patterns. All washable. At fine stores, or write for your dealer's name. Beacon Looms, Inc., Dept. J, 261 Fifth Ave., New York.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

beacon-nets® washable curtains

FOR EVERY ROOM IN THE HOME

Clip This for Further Reference



SAY IT WITH A Wish-U-Well Trade Mark Pat. Pend.

A suitable decoration for any home or office. Sizes 7, 10 and 14 in. high. Shades Honey & Blend. Prices—$3.50, $5.00 and $8.00. Appropriate gift for Birthday, Grand Opening, Christmas, Easter, Blessed Event, Valentine, Wedding, Mother's Day, Showers, Hospitalized One, Anniversary and almost every occasion plus hospitality. Wells entirely hand made with copper bucket. Choice of tropical heart leaf philodendron or miniature ivy. Metal planter treated to last indefinitely. Postage paid in U.S. Send money order—no C.O.D.

Wish-U-Well Co., 4225 Huntley, Culver City, Calif. Phone S.M. 71702

Braid a Rug a Day THE HOLLYWOOD WAY

MAKE BEAUTIFUL Reversible BRAIDED RUGS from your old clothes

SPEED-BRAID • EASY • FAST • FUN

1.00 FIVE PIECE SET POSTPD.

Speed-Braid prepares material for braiding. Eliminates all hand-folding of strips and 99% of all sewing.

Speed-Braids are made of everlasting stainless steel.

The HOLLYWOOD BRAIDERS, Dept. 50
P. O. Box 471, Hollywood 28, Calif.
Here's my dollar. Rush the 5-piece Braider Set with complete illustrated instructions.

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ Zone____
State_____

PLEASE PRINT NAME AND ADDRESS

players. A topcoat was spread on the ground. Cards, silver and folding money were lying on the coat. Four young men were sitting on the ground around the coat with cards in their hands. Fifteen or twenty were standing around watching this poker game. I had walked around the fence corner and was standing in their midst unnoticed, for everybody was watching the cards and money.

"Who's winning and who's losing, fellows?" I asked.

One of the young men playing poker was the son of a minister. One was the son of a rural schoolteacher. Two were sons of a Landsburgh merchant. When they saw me, their faces turned sliced-beet red. They couldn't speak. The young men who had gathered to watch the game began to scatter. I didn't bother the cards or the money or tell them to quit playing poker. I walked on. I left this problem in the pupils' hands, for them to worry about. When I reached the far corner of the fence, I looked back and the gamblers, money and coat had disappeared.

That afternoon these young men expected me to have them in my office. But I was going farther than just to reprimand them. We had to have the ounce of prevention to effect the pound of cure. I knew my catching these young men playing poker would be news in Landsburgh. I knew that everybody would know it, for there were too many young men standing around not to tell it, and I knew it was not good publicity for our school.

The first person to ask me about her son's gambling was the wife of the minister. She asked what punishment I was going to inflict. I replied I hadn't made up my mind. I told her, on second thought, I probably wouldn't punish any of them.

"Do you believe in letting your pupils gamble?" she asked, staring at me wildly.

"No, I don't believe in letting pupils gamble."

"Then why don't you do something about it?"

I didn't say anything more. I wanted her to talk. I wanted her to tell other women, and I knew she would.

THE mother of each son caught in this act came to ask me what I was going to do about the gambling at Landsburgh High School. I didn't give one of them a satisfactory answer.

Finally, these women must have decided I approved of gambling, for the members of the P. T. A. took upon themselves the responsibility of bringing it up at our next meeting. I had not punished any offender. Each of these young men was worried, too, for he had come to me and apologized and wanted to know what his punishment was going to be. He was getting his punishment, but he didn't know it. Suspense is a great punishment.

At our first P. T. A. meeting after the gambling incident, I noticed that the members were very somber. They didn't laugh and talk as they had done at former meetings. Several fathers had come. After the meeting had come to order, Mrs. Albert Davis, president of the P. T. A., soon finished with the organization's business. Then she said:

"Something has been going on at the high school I would like to bring up. It is the gambling that has been going on. Pupils were caught in the act and have never been punished. We would like to hear from Mr. Stuart if he has anything to say regarding this situation."

"I have a lot to say," I said, rising to my feet. "First, I want to tell you why I haven't punished these young men. I don't see any use in punishing them until a few temptations are removed. I happen to know about these temptations."

Then I told them that in my room in the Landsburgh Hotel, I could see over the town. I told them I had the room the town's police ought to have. I said to the mothers and fathers that I had seen their sons and daughters walking the streets until midnight. I told them their sons were able to buy illegal whisky and there was not one among them who didn't know where they could get it. That to stop the sale of whisky to their sons was their business. It was the town's business and not the teachers'. Yet it did concern

(Continued on Page 157)

KitchenAid - More Power to You!

MORE POWER to your recipes—more power to each delicious meal! That's the success-secret of the super-powered, all-purpose KitchenAid. Plus-powered for every task pictured, and more—blessed with the exclusive patented Planetary Mixing Action—KitchenAid does so much more that before you know it, every meal boasts "extras" like special salads, hot breads, pastries, desserts of every kind.

Your mixer should be a lifetime investment. So, before you buy, compare performances and values. See the greatly added value for the little more that KitchenAid costs. See how only KitchenAid brings you the tested principles of the big Hobart commercial mixers. See for yourself, at department stores and better dealers everywhere.

Model 3-B (illus.) 3 qt. capacity—2 other models, 4 & 5 qts.

Puree fruits and vegetables

Chop meats

Extract juices

Freeze ice cream

Slice fruits, vegetables, cheeses

TEST THE AROMA . . . THE TASTE. You'll Love It! Coffee's fuller, richer, better, freshly-ground. Store it in the handy KitchenAid Coffee Mill hopper, flip the switch to grind it (any grind). You never tasted finer!

KitchenAid

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

THE FINEST MADE

KitchenAid Division • THE HOBART MANUFACTURING COMPANY, TROY, OHIO

Takes Early Garden TRADE MARK flavor to crown a thrifty roast!

It's new! Nifty recipe gives low-cost lamb dress-up looks—with DEL MONTE Brand Early Garden Peas for dress-up flavor!

You'll find these DEL MONTE Peas royal good eating with any meat! They're blended by Mother Nature's own recipe for spring pea flavor—big peas, middle-sized and small ones mixed together. Richness rounds out sweetness—for full flavor.

All the best-eating sizes are chosen at picking time. Then the tenderest, tastiest peas of each of those sizes are selected and blended. No flavorless, flat-tasting peas for DEL MONTE!

You'll be tickled pink to find such quick, convenient peas so delicious and natural-tasting. Ask for DEL MONTE Brand Early Garden Peas.

CROWN ROAST-ETTES OF LAMB

4 strips ribs from breast of lamb	2 tbsps. butter or margarine
½ cup finely sliced celery	¼ cup hot water
¼ cup finely chopped onion	1 egg, beaten
2 tbsps. minced parsley	3 cups soft rye bread crumbs
4 tbsps. mint jelly	2 cups DEL MONTE Early Garden Peas

Have lamb cut so ribs are in strips about 1½" wide; 11" or more long. Remove excess fat. With toothpicks, fasten each strip into a ring, rib side out. Place in shallow baking pan; salt and pepper. Mix celery, onion, jelly, butter, hot water; simmer till jelly is melted. Mix with parsley, egg, crumbs. Fill rings with mixture; cover with circles of brown paper. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) 1 hr.; remove paper; bake till tender, about ½ hr. more. Serve on hot platter with hot, seasoned DEL MONTE Peas. Garnish with pimiento and parsley if desired. Make gravy from drippings in pan. Serves 4.

Del Monte BRAND Early Garden TRADE MARK Peas

(Continued from Page 155)

igh school, for our young men had got on river-boat excursions and the l had been blamed for it. Now it was duty to eliminate the temptations.

nd another thing," I said. "Gambling ried on in many of the homes in this . Poker for money is played before your and daughters. You know who these e are. Fathers of the young men on our all team walk up and down the side lines et as much as fifty dollars on one of our all games! You know this is true! It is hat the men in this town will gamble who can spit the closest to a knothole e wall or a crack in the floor. The par- in this town must have a change of if we are to break up gambling in this l. I'm certainly glad, Mrs. Davis, you ht this up.

nd another thing," I continued. "Some- had better pass the word to the town's ite bootlegger to be careful to whom he his whisky. He has five pupils in this l! If you want to watch him sell some ng, come up to my room. If you want ow his customers, be sure to come to om.

me thing more, and this is all I have to I concluded. "Landsburgh High School a separate unit from you. Your ways of your homes are reflected here in the l. I used to think when I first started ing school that it was all up to the er and the pupils. I have changed my . The little island of humanity that is one of you must unite with other islands become a mainland if we are to have a ssful school."

e results of this P. T. A. meeting solved roblems in Landsburgh. I never again ny parents betting on all games. Something enly happened to the race-horse slot ma- . The juke-box danc- ended gracefully at o'clock, for the city's d of aldermen im- l a curfew to ring ne and every pupil enrolled in school o be in off the streets. Drinking sud- ended among our young men. Not erson was arrested. Gambling never oc- d again at our high school. And the only shment I gave the four young men ht in the act was suspense. They waited waited for something to happen, but it r did.

six weeks we showed members of our A. what their co-operation had done in sons' and daughters' grades. Many of sons and daughters who had been failing now making passing grades. Many pu- who had been passing with low marks lifted their average higher. The unex- l tardy and absence marks had dimin- approximately 70 per cent.

his P. T. A. has taught us something," Hadden remarked later at a teachers' ing. "All you have to do to solve a town lem that hurts your school is to get the en on your side. Show 'em what's wrong they'll clean it up."

Y DAY was the great holiday for our ols. The meeting was held at Lands- h High School, since we were almost in center of Greenwood County. Teachers pupils from every rural school in the ty were invited. School buses hauled ers and pupils. They came by auto- ile. And those from the rural schools to Landsburgh walked to this great ration, for it was something they didn't to miss.

he schoolhouse was filled. We had May- dances, athletic events, and school dis- s in the high-school auditorium. We had Club displays. The food was prepared by bers of Landsburgh P.T.A. Classroom was forgotten, for this was a great day verybody's getting together, for recrea- play and fun.

hen I was walking from the athletic field he schoolhouse, I met face to face a per- who looked familiar. She was going ugh the gate to the athletic field and I was coming out. In each hand she held the hand of a small girl.

"You're Jesse Stuart, aren't you?" she asked.

"Yes," I answered, "and you . . . I ought to know you. I've seen you someplace."

"You've grown a lot since I knew you," she laughed.

"You're not Nancy Cochran, are you?" I asked.

"That's who I used to be," she said. "I'm Mrs. Ova Salyers now. Remember Ova, don't you?"

"I certainly do. Are these your daughters?"

"We have three girls and two boys. These are the oldest. Bertha is six and Laomie is five. Bertha is goin' to Lonesome Valley school."

"Didn't Ova come with you?"

"No, I left him home paintin' the house and takin' care of the babies. Ova bought the old Willis Hager farm on Lonesome Creek. You know that farm, don't you?"

"Don Conway, Guy Hawkins, Denver Lykins, Ova and I measured that farm once."

"Yes, Ova told me you did."

"Tell me, what's happened to Guy Hawkins?"

"Oh, he's away at school. He and Don Conway are over at Morehead. Don is in Morehead College and Guy is in the Morehead Training School. Don plans to make a teacher of himself. Guy does too."

"Come, mamma," Bertha said, pulling at her mother's hand. "Let's go see the races!"

"Wait a minute," Nancy said. "Then I'll take you."

"Someday I'm going out there for a visit," I said. "I'd like to see Lonesome Valley again. I'd like to spend a night with Uncle Amos and Aunt Effie Batson. I'd love to hear him play his fiddle and watch her dance."

"He won't play his fiddle any more unless he does it in another world," Nancy told me. "He died in his sleep. Aunt Effie went to stay with one of her sons. Their big house and farm were sold to Alec Prater."

Let us be kind to one another, for most of us are fighting a hard battle.

—IAN McLAREN.

In middle May, I sat beside Big River and threw round gravel into the moonlit water while I waited for a decision of the Landsburgh City school board and my superintendent, Larry Anderson. Our school year was over. I had reapplied for my position, but in the letter with my application I stated that unless my salary was upped to $1500 I didn't want to be rehired for principal.

I waited until the board meeting adjourned. When they came outside, I asked Larry Anderson the board's decision.

"We didn't hire you," he said. "You asked too much."

"That's all I want to know," I said.

I knew that schoolteaching was a great profession and that I loved it. But I would not teach again. I went back to the hotel, packed my clothes and walked home in the moonlight.

After the Landsburgh board of education refused to rehire me, I spent the summer working on my father's farm. My brother James and I raised a crop of tobacco. He planned for his part of the tobacco crop to pay his expenses his first year in Berea. I planned my part of the crop to pay my expenses for a year of graduate work at Vanderbilt University.

In July the heavy rains came. Our tobacco, with too much rain and not enough sun, rotted away. We knew the money crop on which we had fastened our hopes to finance us for a year in college was no longer a reality.

I borrowed $250 at the Landsburgh National Bank. I gave James $50 to enter Berea. I gave mom $50, for she was in need of money since dad wasn't getting steady work on the railroad section. With $150 I went to Vanderbilt University to do a year of graduate work. A conservative estimate of my expenses there for one year would have been $900. I went to Vanderbilt because I had

It's simple to be Fancy with

Betty Crocker's

GINGERCAKE MIX

and Fruit Cocktail

For luncheons that come in the spring, tra-la . . . a simple dessert made with GingerCake cupcakes and California Fruit Cocktail!

GINGERCAKE CUPCAKES

Follow directions on package for GingerCake. Pour batter into 10 greased large muffin cups . . . filling each cup half full. Bake about 20 minutes in quick, moderate oven (375°). Makes 10 cupcakes. Cut each cupcake into 4 or 5 sections. Center with whipped cream and well-drained fruit cocktail.

Every crumb of these elegant cupcakes is spicy rich as gingerbread, tender light as cake!

And now anyone can get such wonderful results, quickly, easily! For Betty Crocker GingerCake Mix is a Betty Crocker recipe all measured out. Nothing to add but water. Try it today! 19 easy, exciting Betty Crocker serving suggestions with each package.

General Mills

A SPECIAL BETTY CROCKER CREATION

Made From Softasilk Cake Flour . . . Not Bread Flour

"Betty Crocker" and "GingerCake" are trademarks of General Mills.

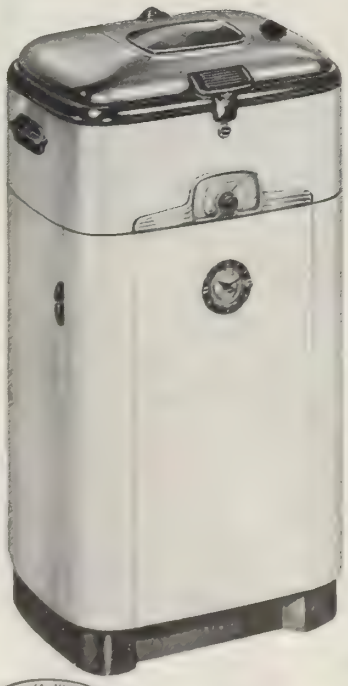
"DO's" from Decorators on kitchen beauty

"Salad Bowl" on shelves

STARTING APRIL 22, see Royledge Carnival of New Spring Patterns at 5 & 10's, naborhood, hardware, dept. stores

Royledge

Shelving Paper and Edging all-in-one 9-ft. pkgs.



DO paint kitchen walls light yellow, green or blue and use Royledge Shelving in deeper shades of same colors . . . for lovely color harmony. Use gay colors of Royledge in a white kitchen, for sparkling contrast.

DO "refresh" your kitchen's good looks regularly with Royledge. DO see glorious doubl-edge Royledge designs now.

Trade Mark "Royledge" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Add leisure hours to your day the NESCOMATIC COOKING way!

The new NESCO Golden Jubilee ELECTRIC ROASTER

PREPARE golden brown roasts and fowl without tedious watching . . . bake delicious pies, cakes and rolls . . . cook a complete meal while you're away from home . . . do all these things and many more with this beautiful Nesco Golden Jubilee Roaster. Accurate automatic thermostat and thick glass wool insulation save up to 40% on fuel, too! Cabinet and timer clock accessories optional. Get your new Nesco today!

★ NEW TEMPERATURE "GUIDE-DIAL"!
★ NEW "PUSH-BUTTON" COVER LIFT!
★ NEW AUTOMATIC ELECTRIC CLOCK!

Nesco products include electric casseroles, pressure pans, stainless steel utensils, enameled ware, tinware, decorated ware, galvanized ware, oil ranges and heaters.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

NESCO Golden Jubilee

NATIONAL ENAMELING AND STAMPING COMPANY

Dept E-5, 270 N 12th Street, Milwaukee 1, Wisconsin

heard of the Fugitives. I wanted to take graduate courses under these men, whose poems, stories, articles and nonfiction books I had read.

I believed that I could combine farming and writing. Since I had been six, old enough to thin corn, I had worked on the farm. There wasn't any kind of work I couldn't do. And since I could remember, I had wanted to write. I thought one year of graduate work in Vanderbilt University, with classes under these well-known Southern authors, was all I needed.

When my first term papers were returned to me I wondered if I could write. They were slashed to pieces with red marks. But I didn't have time enough to do research for my term papers. I worked in Wesley Hall cafeteria approximately four hours each day washing and drying silver and waiting tables. Shortly after the first semester ended, Wesley Hall burned to the ground. The cafeteria where I worked and where I ate my eleven meals each week was destroyed.

During the second semester I lived on a meal a day. I had lost all my clothes in the fire but those I had on my back. I lost all the poems I had brought to Vanderbilt and the thesis I was attempting to write for my M. A. degree. But somebody gave me a suit of clothes, and when the old suit of clothes gave out, Lonnie Maxwell, teaching in Landsburgh High School, loaned me a suit of his so I would have a change.

During my second semester Doctor Mims gave us an assignment in his English class to write a brief autobiography. He asked us not to write more than eighteen pages. This was the first time I had been given a writing assignment at Vanderbilt University that wasn't about a dead man. I couldn't tell Dr. Edwin Mims what I wanted to tell in eighteen pages. In the eleven days before our assignments were due, I had written 322 pages. Three days later he told me I had written a book. Doctor Mims took my term paper to Donald Davidson to let him read it. Then they wrote a publisher and advised me to send Beyond Dark Hills there. It was published six years later.

Every husband trembles when his wife looks at him closely and says, "I want to talk to you about something."
—ANON.

In the meantime I finished my year of graduate work at Vanderbilt. I didn't rewrite my thesis. I borrowed $2 and left Vanderbilt, hitchhiking home without my M.A. degree.

ON a Saturday afternoon in July, I was lying on the parched yard grass under the shade of a bushy-topped poplar whose broad leaves were now wilted pods drooping in the sun. Pencil-size shafts of light from the midsummer sun filtered between these clusters of wilted leaves to make shadows on the grass. I was observing light and shadow crisscross and intermingle on the brown parched grass.

"Is this where Stuarts live?"

"It is," I said, rising from the grass.

"Could you tell me where I could find Jesse Stuart?" said the short, red-faced man standing by our gate. Two larger men were behind him.

"You're talking to him," I answered. "Come in."

"My name is Mooner Bentworth," he introduced himself. "I'm chairman of the Greenwood County board of education. This is William Dawson and this is Tobias Claxton, members of the Greenwood County school board."

"I'm glad to meet you," I said. "But if you've come to see me about teaching school, I'm not available. I left the teaching profession last year."

"This is something bigger than teaching," Mooner Bentworth explained. "We need a new superintendent for Greenwood County schools."

"What's happened to Larry Anderson?"

"Landsburgh City schools have pulled out of the county system," Mooner explained. "Larry Anderson is the new superintendent of Landsburgh City schools. You have a college degree, haven't you, Mr. Stuart?"

"Yes, I have my degree. But the Kentucky school laws have changed. One has to have four years of teaching experience before can get a superintendent's certificate. I h only three unless they will accept my sut tute and practice teaching in college."

"Are you old enough?" Tobias Clax asked.

"I'm twenty-four."

"That's the age limit," Tobias said. "can't be any younger."

"Can you qualify, get your certificate take over next month?" Mooner Bentwo asked.

"I don't know."

Superintendent of Greenwood County sch raced through my mind. Not teaching, n high-school principal, but superintende Greenwood County schools. This was h for me to believe. They were awaiting answer. Would I take it if I could quali

"Gentlemen, will you hold the position me until I see whether I can get a supe tendent's certificate or not?" I said, beca I couldn't turn this offer down. "If I'm a to qualify I'll be your superintendent."

"How long will it take you to find whether you can qualify or not?"

"Not more than two weeks," I s "Maybe not that long."

"That's good enough," Mooner Be worth said.

"Say, where are your two other bo members?" I asked. It suddenly dawned me that only three board members had c to ask me to be superintendent.

"Don't even ask about them," Moo Bentworth answered quickly. "Two men were elected last year, Benton Dan field and Manley Warburton. The against everything we d

"Mr. Stuart, we d consider them," Will Dawson said. "We run school board. We have majority and we are y friends. We want y Dangerfield and Warb ton are against you cause we are for you."

Dad was surprised at the number of peo who stopped us in the street and congra lated me. They congratulated dad, too, having a son who would be superintendent Greenwood County schools. These peo knew that my father couldn't read, could write and had such scanty knowledge of ari metic that he had to depend on the m chants with whom he traded to do his fig ing. He had to take their word for everyth unless one of his children was with him.

"Young man, I'm proud of you," Un Walt Weston said. "You've amounted something."

Uncle Walt Weston had operated a clo ing store in Landsburgh for sixty years. was in his store that I had bought my clot when I was a pupil in Landsburgh H School. Often I would get clothes on cre and he would wait until I got returns o batch of animal pelts. He had always gi me credit for anything I wanted. My fat had traded with him for forty years.

Dad and I planned to be in the cou superintendent's office an hour before Greenwood County school board met. so many of our friends had stopped us, arrived just in time for the meeting.

"I'm one of the school-board memb you don't know," said a big pink-cheek man. "I'm Benton Dangerfield."

I did know Benton Dangerfield. He h killed two chicken thieves in his chick roost and his trial had been one of the m sensational in our county. He had co clear in his trial. But because Sherman A derson—brother to Larry Anderson—w was prosecuting attorney, had prosecut him (he thought unmercifully), he ran fo member of the Greenwood County board education against Albert Hix, who w Larry Anderson's board member, and d feated him.

Benton Dangerfield was about six feet fi and weighed approximately 260 pounds. had bright blue laughing eyes and a shock blond hair. He was the best-looking, bes dressed member of the school board.

(Continued on Page 160)

Cut yourself a Slice

(have "seconds" too)

If you rely on A&P for meats, you have cut countless tender and delicious roasts, chops and other favorites. If you don't as yet depend on A&P . . . well, you're missing something.

A&P is a stickler for meat goodness. It reasons that because meat is among the most costly foods, only guaranteed* quality will give you the fullest measure of fine eating and honest value. And so it has created the "SUPER-RIGHT" mark to identify meat that measures up to high customer satisfaction. That means tender, juicy, full-flavored cuts always.

A&P has experts contacting famous meat packers for choice selections. It employs scientific refrigeration and rigid quality controls to bring meat at its prime to its markets. Then trained A&P meat men prepare it. And all cuts are trimmed to give you the maximum in good eating for every ounce you pay for.

Better visit your A&P Super Market . . . for better meat meals for your money!

Your money back if any cut fails to please you completely.

A&P Super Markets

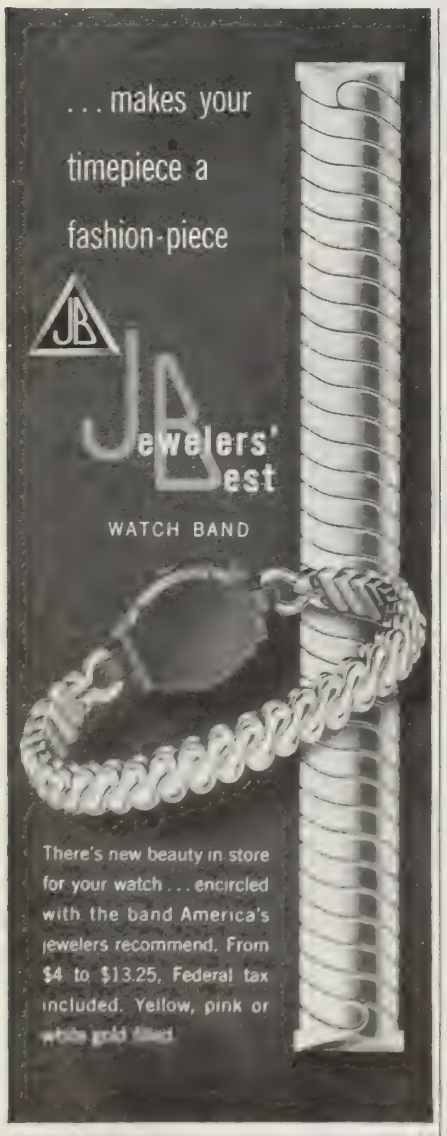
A&P

1859 - 1949

90th YEAR OF SERVICE

EVERYTHING IS PRICE-TAGGED at your A&P . . . so that as you shop you can compare quality and price, item by item.

YOU CAN CHECK WEIGHTS EASILY . . . because all A&P scales are arranged conveniently to let you see the dials.



YOU GET A CASH REGISTER RECEIPT at the checkout stand. It itemizes what you have bought to let you re-check at home.

HAVE YOU A SUGGESTION?

If you have shopped at A&P and have been displeased about anything . . . or if you think there are things we can do to improve our service . . . please tell us. With your help we can make A&P Super Markets even better places to visit for your family's foods. Please write: CUSTOMER RELATIONS DEPARTMENT, A&P Food Stores, Graybar Bldg., New York 17, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 158)

"I've heard of you, wondered about you. You are a very young man," he said, looking me in the eye. "I had planned not to vote for you because the other three members of this school board are for you. They are still too friendly with Larry Anderson. I'm against that man. Young man," he continued, "you are going into a mess. You've got something ahead of you. I know you have."

"I'm willing to tackle it," I said.

Then Mooner Bentworth called the meeting of the Greenwood County board of education, and we went inside. Benton Dangerfield introduced me to Manley Warburton, a small gray-eyed man wearing a gray suit, light blue shirt and red necktie. I greeted the three members of the majority faction of the school board who had come to my home. I greeted Larry Anderson, superintendent under whom I had served for two years. This was his last day in office. Tomorrow I would be in his place.

The meeting was called to order. Mooner Bentworth presented my application for the position of Greenwood County superintendent. William Dawson made the motion that I be hired. Tobias Claxton seconded the motion. Immediately the majority faction of the board voted for me. The surprise came when Benton Dangerfield voted for me. After Manley Warburton saw how Benton Dangerfield had cast his vote, he, too, voted for me. I got the unanimous vote of the board.

My first day in office I was a busy man. I must have had a hundred visitors. Each one wanted something. Many were school trustees who had axes to grind with other school trustees. While I was in Vanderbilt University, I didn't know that a law had been passed to have three district-school trustees instead of one. Now each little rural school district in each county in the state of Kentucky had three district-school trustees. Why the schoolteachers and the educators and thinking citizens had ever allowed this bill to pass was beyond me, for this gave each teacher of the little rural school nine bosses: three trustees, five county-school-board members and the county-school superintendent. But the district-school trustees had the power. We now had 246 district-school trustees in Greenwood County.

I wanted to know something about the financial condition of the Greenwood County schools. The story my school-board members told me about the financial plight of our school system was alarming. If I could rely on what they told me, we were in danger of financial collapse. They were waiting for the new tax revenues to be collected. I suggested that we should have a public accountant audit our books and give us the facts.

When I made this suggestion only Benton Dangerfield and Manley Warburton approved. Whatever they were for, the majority of my school board was against. And I had to keep the majority of my school board on my side. After I had talked with the board members I knew that not one of them was a good businessman. Not one had handled very much money. Finally they agreed to have an auditor audit our books and calculate our incoming revenue.

Two weeks later the audit had been made. The Greenwood County school system was approximately $144,000 in debt. This included the bonded indebtedness of the new Maxwell High School. But of this $144,000, we owed the Landsburgh National Bank $54,000, and $26,000 of this amount had been borrowed the preceding year with the promise to pay the bank from this year's local taxes when they were collected. There was a deficit of $3300 in our account at the bank. Our property taxes, plus state appropriations, were approximately $100,000. This was the highest figure at which the auditor could place our anticipated revenue for the year.

"You are in a bad financial way, gentlemen," Auditor Chad Hoskins said. "For the past three years you have spent beyond your budget."

I looked at Mooner Bentworth. He sat as silent and rigid as a statue.

When you take a TRIP..
Take along TUMS for Comfort
TUMS
Any time strang food, fast eating hurry or too muc smoking brings o acid indigestion, ga and heartburn, sli Tums in your mout as you would cand mints. Tums neutral ize excess acid almos instantly — you fee better fast! No baking soda in Tums. N danger of overalkaliz ing—no acid re bound. Get handy Tums today!
EAT LIKE CANDY TUMS 10¢ STOMACH DISTRESS
To feel better, try one or two TUMS after breakfast.
FOR THE TUMMY
Tums present "The Alan Young Show" every Tuesday night, NBC network

NOW A COMPLEXION CLAY THAT MAKES SKIN LOVELIER
CLEANS PORE OPENINGS • REDUCES SKIN BLEMISHES
WORKS WONDERS WITH TIRED LINES IN FACE

Look better, feel better, after the first application with Hopper White Clay Pack®. See for yourself how this amazing facial pack cleans pore openings, helps tighten the tired lines in your face and loosen blackheads which can then be easily removed. Yes, you can thrill at the new loveliness of your complexion, the radiant, tingling feeling that is yours after a facial with Hopper Clay Pack. It's easy to use, costs only a few cents. At drug or cosmetic counters.

GET Cotets
PERFECT FOR POWDER PUFFS

HANDY COTTON SQUARES
DOZENS OF COSMETIC USES LARGE PACKAGE 29¢

eps hair tidy
l through the day!

Costs less because it lasts longer!

20¢ White, grey, purple 25¢

Single or double mesh

VENIDA
The Guaranteed
HAIR NET
rules the waves

US VENIDA HAIR BEAUTY AIDS BY RIESER CO., N. Y.

I asked what arrangements had been made for the rural pupils of the east end of Greenwood County, since Landsburgh was no longer a joint county-city high school. I was informed a temporary line had been drawn across the county. All county high-school pupils west of this line would go to Maxwell High School. All pupils east of this line would go to Landsburgh High School. I was told that we would have to pay $8 per month for each pupil. This tuition was exceedingly high, judging from the amount of revenue we had to spend. According to this setup, the majority of pupils would be going to Landsburgh High School, where we would have to pay tuition. Maxwell High School would not have half as many pupils as we had space for, and faculty to teach.

I said, "Instead of paying tuition to Landsburgh High School, I suggest we transport pupils by bus to Maxwell High School. We can save money. We can give employment to another bus driver. We still have an extra school bus."

"But teachers have already been hired to take care of them at Landsburgh High School," Mooner Bentworth said.

"I would like to ask Mr. Bentworth something," Benton Dangerfield said. "Mooner, are you working for the Landsburgh City school system, or are you working for the Greenwood County school system?"

Then I presented facts and figures to the members of the board. I showed them what the cost would be at Landsburgh High School if we paid tuition. I showed them the approximate cost at Maxwell High School.

After you have sought over the wide world, you learn that happiness is to be found only in your own home. —VOLTAIRE.

"I make a motion we send our rural pupils from east end of Greenwood County to Maxwell High School," Manley Warburton said.

"I second that motion," Benton Dangerfield said.

"Did you gentlemen know," Mooner Bentworth said, "that there is a Kentucky school law that says you must send pupils to the most convenient school?"

"I'd like to test that law," Benton Dangerfield said. "Laws are made for the people, not people created for laws."

"I know this will cause trouble," Mooner warned. "We will have a lawsuit if we do it."

"Let this motion come to a vote," Benton Dangerfield said.

William Dawson, Tobias Claxton, Benton Dangerfield and Manley Warburton voted in favor of the motion. Then a strange thing happened. "I'm voting for it, too," Mooner Bentworth said. "It's a measure I don't want to go on record as voting against."

Something had to be done about our financial situation. There were approximately 100 rural teachers at work. At the end of their first month, they would want their pay. No rural salary was under $48.70 and none was more than $79.80 per month. The major portion of the salaries was around $65 per month.

I didn't know how to handle other people's money. I'd never handled much money. Since I was practically sure that my board members had handled less, I thought one of us would have to learn. Then the thought came to me that there were many small but successful businessmen in Greenwood County. Why couldn't they give sound advice to me and to my board?

When I asked Joe Terrill, Charles Angus, John Roberts and James Melvin if they would meet us in a financial advisory capacity without pay, each man felt flattered. It was the first time local businessmen had been called in to give financial advice to the schools. When we let these businessmen see the auditor's report, they came to one conclusion: We would have to borrow money. We would have to make new debts to pay old debts. We would have to find some place to

(Continued on Page 163)

gic window to beauty . . .
Pacific Northwest

AKE A LOOK at this Western onderland in a free, illustrated der. See and read about huge and Coulee Dam . . . Seattle and coma, seaports for Alaska . . . snow-d Mt. Rainier . . . Pacific-girt ympic Peninsula . . . island-dotted get Sound . . . Victoria and Van-uver, B. C. Write today to H. Seng-ucken, Passenger Traffic Manager, 0 Union Station, Chicago 6, Ill.

OLYMPIAN
Hiawatha

ow completely new—time-saving nedule; Private-room sleepers, Tour-ux sleepers, Luxurest coaches, diner d Tip Top Grill car.

E MILWAUKEE ROAD

Miracle-Tread
SMART SHOES FOR GRACEFUL POISE

Smart Summer Attraction

The Suma

Set the stage for summer smartness! Miracle-Tread opens the new season with its most flattering styles yet! You'll enjoy their high-fashion look... their superb craftsmanship in every detail. And you'll love their easy-going comfort.

$6.95 and $7.95
A FEW STYLES HIGHER Distant Points
Slightly Higher

Write for Name of Nearest Dealer
MIRACLE-TREAD DIVISION Craddock-Terry Shoe Corporation, Lynchburg, Virginia

Smart-form
It's CUSTOM FITTED!
The foundation with the amazing
PATENTED
FITTING FEATURE

Assures you a PERFECTION OF FIT unsurpassed by any other foundation garment. And your Smart-form will WEAR MONTHS LONGER than other foundations, because it has another Smart-form innovation—

HEMMED SEAMS!

America's loveliest selection of all-in-ones, corsets and girdles for larger women, also many other delightful creations for more youthful figures.

Your local Smart-form CORSETIERE or Smart-form CORSET SHOP will be delighted to show you these exclusive Smart-form features.

This nylon all-in-one, with concealed Inner Support—only $16.95.

If you are interested in CORSETRY as a PROFESSION we will explain how YOU can establish a fascinating MONEY-MAKING CAREER JUST MAIL THIS COUPON!

Smart-form INC.
NEWARK NEW JERSEY

Tear off here

Please tell me how I may: Check Choice
Reach my nearest Smart-form corsetiere ☐
Become a Smart-form corsetiere ☐
Have a Smart-form corset shop of my own ☐

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

our story is written on her face

There's another wonderland in her expression—the miracle of healthy, happy childhood. Both Welch's and Alice have been favorites since the 1860's, bringing wholesome joy to children everywhere.

For 80 years, Welch has made the purest and finest of fruit products. Famous Welch's Grape Juice led the way . . . jellies, preserves, fruits, and nectars followed . . . all expertly processed with a devotion to quality that accepts only the best.

The Welch name is your assurance that Welch's Grape Juice and all other Welch products are definitely better—now and always.

THE WELCH GRAPE JUICE COM
WESTFIELD, NEW

(Continued from Page 161)

ch expenses. I knew this wouldn't be my sh y. I was making as little as the state w ld allow a superintendent of county sc ols to receive, $100 per month.

e Terrill agreed to go with me to find cr it for Greenwood County schools. First w contacted Landsburgh National Bank.
In ead of extending us more credit, they a d that we pay what we owed. Then we th l three banks in Auckland. Each banker as d us what collateral we could give for se rity. We couldn't offer Maxwell High S ool building, for it wasn't paid for. We di n't find a banker who wanted a school-hi se anyway. We tried three banks in West V ginia. We tried the First National in P tmouth, Ohio. Everywhere it was the sa e story.

ince we couldn't find credit anywhere and e we owed $26,000 at the Landsburgh ional Bank that would be taken from our al tax money, this is what we did to save w emporarily: In Kentucky, half of the lol tax money is added to the state approations (the county's share of per-capita ney) to make up the salaries of the teach-It was against the state laws to use this ney for anything
t salaries. The er half of the local enue went to pay county school suintendent, janis, county-school-ard members, bus vers, upkeep and intenance of school sses, maintenance eighty-two rural ool buildings and axwell High School.
nen we paid the 6,000 to Lands-
rgh National Bank, obligation we were ced to meet, there uld be little, if any-ing, left of our local x money except the lf that was used for achers' salaries.

I suggested that we an the school busses
the drivers, let em furnish the gas
d take responsibil-y for repairs, and t the high-school
upils pay a reason-
ble amount each month for transportation.
he bus drivers would not get the salaries ey had been getting, nor would the pupils et free transportation, but since we were in position where we couldn't run the busses all, it was better to do this so the county upils, who lived long distances away, could ill go to high school.

Then I proposed we cut one month from l the schools in Greenwood County. This ould reduce all the rural schools to six onths, and Maxwell High School from nine onths to eight. I could not understand why igh schools should have nine months when he rural schools got only six and seven. It eemed to me that the rural and graded chools were the underpinning of the whole ublic-school system. So why shouldn't the ublic-school tax money be used for the reatest good for the greatest number of hildren? I was amazed that members of my oard, without a dissenting vote, agreed o slice a month from every county school.

With the approval of my county school oard, I started to remake our budget. We greed that since we couldn't borrow money nd couldn't raise taxes, we should make our udget with the money left us and spend ithin this amount. In a few days we had ade the new budget for six months of school nstead of seven. Since this was contrary to he school laws of the state, members of my chool board approved it reluctantly. They idn't think it would be approved by the tate Department of Education.

Instead of posting the budget to Frank-ort, I asked for expense money to take me and the auditor to Frankfort. They voted me $25. Auditor Chad Hoskins drove us to Frankfort, where we stayed at the Y.M.C.A. because the rooms were cheaper. I presented my new budget to the State Department of Education. On a few minor items members of this department were generous enough with their time to help make changes. We stayed in Frankfort two days. I got a personal interview with James Richmond, state superintendent of schools, and explained what I was up against. Our budget was approved. We knew then that our per-capita money, which would go to pay everything but teachers, would soon be on the way; this was a great relief. We had weathered the first storm.

When I reported this success to the Greenwood County board of education, four members applauded. But Mooner Bentworth didn't. There was fire in his ferret-colored eyes. Then he rose to his feet.

"I make a motion that we impeach Jesse Stuart for embezzlement."

"When did I embezzle county funds?" I asked, almost too stunned to speak.

"That twenty-five dollars expense money to go to Frankfort," Bentworth said.

"Expense of two men, meals and rooms for two days and nights, and expenses of a car for three hundred and sixty miles," I said. "We spent the last quarter to have the carburetor cleaned. We coasted over the last hill home."

"Gentlemen," said Benton Dangerfield, "I move that we have Mooner Bentworth removed as chairman of the Greenwood County board of education. Last summer he used the county school bus for a touring car. Drove it to the head of Big Sandy River to see a baseball game. He charged gasoline and repairs to Greenwood County board of education. I have the evidence here in my pocket." He brought his hand from his coat pocket filled with duplicate copies of unpaid bills. "I want you to look at these. Mooner Bentworth," he continued, "is not fit to be chairman of the county school board. He takes his orders before he comes to a meeting! Is that right, Mooner Bentworth?"

Mooner Bentworth sat motionless and stared at the wall. He didn't answer Benton Dangerfield's accusations.

"I watched you this morning with my own eyes," Benton accused. "Do you want to tell your fellow board members where you went early this morning? Do you want to tell them where you go to get your orders before each meeting?"

Benton waited for Mooner to answer his accusation.

"Gentlemen, I think the Greenwood County board of education and the superintendent of Greenwood County schools are capable of running this county's school business. I move that we remove Mooner Bentworth as chairman of the Greenwood County board of education."

"I second that motion," Manley Warburton said.

There were four votes cast against Mooner. Tobias Claxton was chosen for the new chairman. We did not bring court proceedings against Bentworth, but allowed him to remain as a member of the board, since he had only one year to serve before his time expired. If we had brought court proceedings against him, it might have taken us a long time to oust him. It might have been better if we had. For, from this time forward, Mooner

(Continued on Page 165)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

When Spring Comes

By DOROTHY STOUT

If you are mine to love, then it is Good that trees are budding, that the River has thawed quietly, that the Skies are often blue now.
If you are not mine to love, then Spring would please me not to Come so soon, and it would be best
If the cold should stay for just a Little while longer; for it is not Wise to want to be in love in spring,
Or have a love that is not returned.
Spring is for newness and rebirth.
It is for life and love, for man and Woman; and spring should not come if
No love exists in the world,
Or in your heart.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Helps with her housework in a hundred ways

Holds a heap of things she needs in kitchen, laundry, nursery or sewing room—fine, too, for youngsters' homework and hobbies. All-steel, 29½" high, 21" x 34" top. Chromium legs lock open—fold flat within 2" top for space-saving storage. Easy-to-clean top finished in tough, baked-on enamel—red, yellow, blue, green or white. Give one for Mother's Day—only $15.95 ($16.95 in western states and Florida). See them at leading stores everywhere.

HAMILTON MANUFACTURING CORPORATION • COLUMBUS, INDIANA

BY THE MAKERS OF COSCO HOUSEHOLD STOOLS

the prettiest windows wear the Finest Marquisettes

VOGUE CURTAINS OF CLOUDSPUN
Sheer-delite
Bridal Veil
Spindrift

And your windows can be seen at their best by dressing them with Vogue's exquisitely sheer Marquisettes. Made from specially selected long staple cotton, carefully woven into fine count cloth, and then superbly finished with DURAFINISH* . . . exclusive with Vogue, making Vogue curtains last longer, stay cleaner, and wash easier. You may see these Springtime beauties at all fine stores.

Vogue Curtains — AMERICA'S MOST BEAUTIFUL CURTAINS

*Trade Mark

Send 10¢ for this 16-page booklet, "How to Curtain Your Windows," to Harriet Stillman, Dept. L-5, 321 Fifth Ave., New York City.

ROBERTSON FACTORIES, INC., 321 Fifth Ave., New York • 99 Chauncy St., Boston • 10 Factories Coast to Coast: Atlanta, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Portland, Ore., San Francisco, St. Paul, Taunton, Mass.

"Conversation Pieces" from the KRAFT kitchen

Pick 'n choose salad

You know how pleasant it is when some... you serve at a party starts enthusiastic co... sation? Well, this Pick 'n Choose Salad is that kind of ... Individual salads, each one different . . . and served with ma... naise of such exquisite flavor that it's comment-rousing, too.

- Leaf Lettuce
- Perfection salad mold
- Grapefruit and orange salad
- Tomato, carrot and cauliflower salad
- Pineapple and peach salad
- Whole tomato and sliced cucumber sala
- Kraft Mayonnais...

Arrange 5 nests of crisp leaf lettuce on a chop plate and place... 5 individual salads on them with a bowl of Kraft Mayonnai... the center. It's a most attractive platter, and you can vary i... sorts of ways with favorites of your own. But however you vary... salads, you won't vary the mayonnaise once you have tried Kra... So rich, so delicately piquant, it too is a "Conversation Pie...

Yes, they'll comment on the mayonnaise as well as on the salad if it's mayonnaise by Kraft.

Made solely from fine salad oil, eggs, and seasonings, Kraft Mayonnaise has a delightful piquant flavor that's noticed right away. The secret is in the way it's seasoned . . . with a subtle blend of fragrant vinegars, fresh spices, and pure lemon juice to give that intriguing piquancy.

Do try Kraft Kitchen-Fresh Mayonnaise, soon. Exquisite flavor . . . sumptuous richness . . . smooth, smooth texture from an exclusive beater . . . Kraft's is true mayonnaise at its finest.

True mayonnaise at its finest — made with really choice ingredients, including pure lemon juic...

(Continued from Page 163)

th and Benton Dangerfield never each other. They were not without ner. We never knew, when we at- board meeting, who would come out who would be left dead.

ts sent beyond this state, that we unt our election votes until we had our dead, had good foundation. But eople believed this statement con- ounty, state and national elections the two major political parties. It ern them, but only in a minor degree ared with the trustee elections, which posed to be nonpolitical. They were, ain degree, nonpolitical. But in these stee elections it would have been they had chosen political sides. It ertain church group pitted against church group. It was the "wets" the "drys." It was feuding clan feuding clan. It didn't matter which vas elected and to whom he gave the he candidate he had defeated made impossible for the teacher recom- by his trustee and hired by the school board.

were often brought into play at these s. Men were killed and seriously d. People were stabbed with knives. heriff and his deputies were lucky, uld stop the fight. There have been s when the sheriff and his deputies e kind of fighters the people were. ed away from the election grounds fight was over. The election of local rustees was a big event. Scarcely ever re a peaceful election.

the memory of my first teaching ex- at Lonesome Valley and the daily ce I had with school trustees after I superintendent of Greenwood County I was compelled to try to do some- out this problem.

hed when I thought of the power of ct-school trustee over the superin- of county schools, over five county- embers and over the schoolteacher. istrict-school trustees told my school nd me what to do. Trustees who t write their names, who would not heir own names if they had been on road signs, told college grad- with years of teaching experience teach school. Often these trustees visited the schools once a week and gave the teachers orders. If the teachers didn't teach according to their instructions, then the trustees came to me. They tried to make me act against the teacher in their behalf. That I wouldn't do. Because I felt deeply for the members of my profession, I fought for them.

"Gentlemen, I have a proposition to which I have given much thought lately," I said to members of my school board. "It's the injustice of this abominable trustee system. I don't see why a schoolteacher has to have nine bosses! I propose to do away with the school-trustee system."

"Well, I'll be —— ——, what else will you propose?" Mooner Bentworth shouted, jumping to his feet. "Don't you know you are going against a state law? Don't you know you will get yourself and the members of this board in trouble?"

"I agree with Mooner Bentworth," Tobias Claxton said. "I think he's right!"

"I never heard tell of anything like this," William Dawson said, shaking his head, then hit the cuspidor perfectly with ambeer spittle at a distance of eight feet. "Jesse, you are fooling with something very dangerous!"

"Any superintendent who has the trustee system to work with finds it dangerous," I said. "It's dangerous to the whole state school system. I know this state has a law in favor of district-school trustees. But we could go on record as being against the system. I'll send copies to the state superintendent and to members of the Kentucky legislature."

"Never!" Mooner shouted, louder than before. "Then we will be in hot water over our heads!"

"I'm not for this either," Manley Warburton said. "I believe in the old way. It was good enough for me. It's good enough for the children of today. I was trustee for nine years!"

"Four members of this school board are against my proposal," I said. "I'd like to know what Mr. Dangerfield thinks." Benton Dangerfield had agreed many times on the proposals I had suggested.

"I'm against it," he said.

Then I knew my proposal was doomed. It didn't get even a motion. All my board members were against me. I wanted to leave this as a record on my minute books. I still pro-

JENNIFER

"If you don't mind, mommy, I'd rather wear my cotton ones—silk feels like you didn't have any on!"

Delicious, Fluffy

HOT BISCUITS

in only 9 minutes

the BALLARD workless way!

out of the package...

into the pan...

onto the table...FAST!

Yes, ma'am! Package to table in only 9 minutes! The finest, freshest home-baked biscuits ever—the real, old-fashioned Southern kind. So thrifty, too—you get 10 biscuits in every package... all ready to pop in the oven!

- NO MEASURING
- NO MIXING
- NO ROLLING
- NO CUTTING
- NO FAILURES!

Get these amazing new

Plastic Mittens

(electronically sealed)

yours for only 25¢

and 2 labels from

BALLARD

Oven Ready BISCUITS

Get two packages today from YOUR GROCER'S REFRIGERATOR!

Now, save your hands from hard water, dirt, grease, grime with these sensational Neo-Seal Plastic Mittens. Slip on and off easily, protect sleeves, rings, manicure. Soft and pliable, leave fingers free to grasp even tiniest object. Beautify your hands while you sleep, too. Cream hands, wear Plastic Mittens overnight for marvelous beauty treatment! Hurry—send for yours today!

Fit all hands for:
- Laundering
- Housework
- Washing Dishes
- A Beauty Aid

NEW! TWO-TONE! Red Plastic palm-side clear Plastic backs!

Mail Today! Offer Positively Expires July 31, 1949

Ballard Mitt Dept. L.
549 W. Washington Blvd., Chicago 6, Illinois

I enclose 25c and 2 labels from Ballard OvenReady Biscuits. Send me postage prepaid one pair Plastic Mittens as described in your offer.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

Offer good in continental United States only—not good in states or municipalities where offers of this type are taxed, restricted or prohibited. Offer expires July 31, 1949

Good canning starts with

WEAR·EVER

Aluminum

WEAR-EVER ALUMINUM TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Here's a tip to keep home canning from becoming a burdensome chore . . . just do a bit at a time the easy way with the Wear-Ever 7 qt. Pressure Cooker.

Holds 4 pint jars with plenty of room for proper heat circulation. Also cooks roasts, stews, vegetables and soups deliciously, quickly and economically . . . a money-saving investment.

All the Wear-Ever Aluminum utensils you need for home canning are shown here and at your favorite housewares store.

For free canning recipes, write to Wear-Ever Kitchens, 1805 Wear-Ever Building, New Kensington, Pa.

THE ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSIL COMPANY
NEW KENSINGTON, PA.

©TALUCO 1949

posed to do something about this system. My fight was just beginning.

On the morning of September eleventh, four school busses transported Greenwood County high-school pupils to Maxwell High School. They transported to Maxwell High School approximately 100 pupils whom Landsburgh High School had made arrangements to teach. Larry Anderson, now superintendent of Landsburgh City schools, his teachers and members of his city school board must have been disappointed. The approximate sum of $800 per month they had expected to receive from us went to our own Maxwell High School, where we employed three new teachers to help with the additional pupils.

On the afternoon of September eleventh, John Farnsworth, elderly local politician of Landsburgh, who had congratulated me on the street, laid his arm across my shoulder.

"Jesse, you are a product of this town," he said. "You graduated from Landsburgh High School. You have been principal of Landsburgh High School. Now you are wrecking our school system!"

"I'm not wrecking your school system," I said. "I'm working for my own."

"Now, listen," he said. "Can't we get this school business all ironed out? Can't you throw ——"

"Throw what?" I broke in before he had time to finish. "Do you know that I am under oath to do my duty for my school system?"

"You can be somebody or you can wreck yourself," he snapped.

"I don't appreciate your thinking so little of me as to think I can be propositioned," I told him. "Who sent you here anyway?"

"You'll be sorry," he said. "We've got good lawyers here and they're loyal to Landsburgh!"

It took one day for the news to spread over town. Pupils came home from school and told what had happened. From this time on, my Landsburgh friends would meet me on the street and wouldn't speak to me. I wasn't welcomed in the stores. I was sorry that my office was in the courthouse of this county-seat town.

This was the first time in my life I had been shunned by my friends. It cut me to the heart when people turned their heads and spat when they met me, instead of the usual "Good morning" as it had been down through the years. These were the same people who had cheered when I played football for Landsburgh High School.

The following week, when I returned one noon hour to my office, Sheriff Bill Creason gave me a summons to appear in court. Now I knew we were up against a real fight.

Oscar Vinson, who was a taxpayer of Greenwood County, had brought suit against the county school board and the superintendent, in his own behalf and that of other taxpaying citizens who were sending their sons and daughters to Landsburgh High School. They asked that we furnish free transportation and that we pay $8 per month per pupil for these county pupils who were going to Landsburgh High School. This petition gave the names of the parents who were behind this suit. I had checked the list of pupils eligible to attend high school before we sent our pupils to Maxwell High School. Many of the pupils now attending Landsburgh High School had not passed examination to enter high school. A few of them were sixth-grade pupils. But they occupied the seats that had been vacated in Landsburgh High School. They kept the teachers whom Landsburgh City school board had employed busy, and would pay them as well, if they collected the tuition for them from the county.

I called the businessmen who had helped me with the school budget into my office, to meet with the Greenwood County school board. I showed them the list of unauthorized county pupils now attending Landsburgh High School, and with county-school records we showed them where sixth-grade county-school pupils had been accepted at Landsburgh High School.

New underfo
Luxury

LONGER RUG AND CARPET W

★ Makes rugs and carpeting look and feel deeper, handsomer, more expensive.

★ Sponge rubber resilience built in for li

★ Cuts to fit from rolls, 36 or 53 inches w Standard ¼" and 3/16" thickne

Rugs won't creep or slide with U. S. Ca Cushion. It won't mat or pack. It's allergic, moth- and vermin-proof, free of and lint. Installation is simple, easily ta

RECOMMENDED FOR RADIANT HEAT INSTALLAT

U.S. carpet Cushion

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMP
Mishawaka, Indiana

PAINT YOUR CAR WITH WYPE-MEL $2.95 COMPLETE JOB

Get Mirror-Like Finish Rivaling Factory Spray Job.

NO BRUSH, SPRAY, STREAKS or LAPMARKS—Just WIPE ON with a POWDER PUFF

Anyone can do beautiful job. One quart gives 2 full coats any car. Apply in about an hour. Dries dust-free in 1 hour. Goes over any other color enamel or lacquer. Guaranteed 2 YEARS not to peel, chip, crack or fade, if simple directions are followed, or money refunded. Genuine enamel—not wax or polish.

10 Beautiful Colors:

Black; Maroon; Red; Gray; Brewster (Dark) Green; Jewel (Light) Green; Washington (Dark) Blue; Monticello (Medium) Blue; Sun Beige (Light Tan); and White—All $2.95 Quart (Or $1.75 Pint—2 pints will do a 2-tone job.)

SEND NO MONEY
See Your Dealer or Order Direct

If your dealer can't supply you, just send us a postcard. We'll ship C.O.D. Just pay mailman, plus postal charges. Or send remittance with order and WE pay postage.

WYPE CORP. Dept. 149-E, 2214 Dolm SAINT LOUIS 4, MISS

ONLY Brushless Enamel

CERTIF

by U. S. Te Co., Inc.— Famous La tory—Larges kind—and to confor claims and antee of Corp. Y SURE yo SAFE whe paint with V

Sold by Am Leading D ment St Merchants Stations & ages Everyw Over 350,000 fied Users. *T.

For all your Knittin

Wonderized

ANTI-SHRINK ANTI-MATTI YARNS

Exclusive in

BEAR BRAND YARNS

Fleisher's Yar

FREE! Instruction leaflets for knitting men' women's and children's sweater also men's socks. Send 3¢ stamp to cov postage to Wonderized: 30-20 Thomson Ave Long Island City 1, N. Y. Dept. J-59.

"They haven't any right to invade our ools and take our pupils," Manley War- rton said.

Then came the problem of getting lawyers. e board agreed to let Tobias Claxton and employ the lawyers, with a promise to y when we got the money. Two of the sinessmen and three of the school-board mbers didn't think we had a chance of nning this lawsuit.

Jason Spleeves, one of the largest men in e in Greenwood County and the biggest nty taxpayer, heard about it and came to me. Since this man couldn't read or ite, he had my secretary read the claim ainst the county in the suit Oscar Vinson d brought. He had her read parts of this tition over and over so "he could get it in s head." She also read him the list of un- thorized county pupils attending Lands- rgh High School.

"B'gad, I'll do something about this," he id, when he left the office.

Before the lawyers were ready to act, he d done something about it. I was standing ar by when it happened.

"Oscar, why did you bring suit against ?" Jason said, when he met him on the reet. "Now you get your name off that tition and drop that lawsuit in a hurry!"

"I won't do it," Oscar said.

"Listen, Oscar"—Jason shook his finger der his nose—"you have sold me the rot- nest moonshine whisky I ever drinked. If ou don't get your name off that lawsuit, ll go before the grand jury and indict you r bootlegging and prove it on you and send ou to the penitentiary. Hate to do it, on ac- unt of your wife and ildren, but b'gad I will you don't drop that etition."

Oscar Vinson's face rned red as an October ourwood leaf. He got way from Jason Spleeves st as fast as he could n. In two weeks time Oscar Vinson's name was off the petition and he suit against us was dropped.

The most fascinating women are those that can most enrich the everyday moments of existence.

—LEIGH HUNT.

On the morning of the regular board meet- ng, which might be the last one for me, I alled Benton Dangerfield into a room in the ourthouse and had an hour's talk with him. I knew that if any man had ever known dan- er, this man had. If anybody could give me dvice, Benton Dangerfield could.

"Do you think, Mr. Dangerfield," I asked, that I will be in danger if I attempt an- other term as superintendent of Greenwood County schools? Do you honestly think I shall be killed?"

"Jesse, you have asked me to tell you what I believe," he answered. "I'm going to be rank with you. I think you are in great dan- ger all over this county, except in the west nd around Maxwell High School. There you are well liked and respected. In the east end of this county," he explained, "I think many a man that doesn't understand what you have done for this county thinks you are an enemy and will consider it an honor to kill you. Not just one, but many would do it."

"Will members of the school board re- employ me if I ask to continue my work?"

"Four members will vote for you. Of course, Mooner Bentworth will be against you!"

"Could you be re-elected if you support me for a second term?"

"To tell you the truth we will all be de- feated, when we run again, if we support you. We've talked that over. But we've agreed among ourselves to stand by you to the last ditch."

"Thank you," I said.

I had made up my mind what I was going to do. I wasn't going to leave the teaching profession. Not me.

Tobias Claxton called the meeting to or- der. While they were seating themselves, I thought about what Benton Dangerfield had just told me. I knew the gift of life was the greatest thing on earth. I didn't want to lose it now.

"Members of the Greenwood County school board," said Manley Warburton as he arose from his chair, "I move that we re- employ Jesse Stuart, county-school superin- tendent of Greenwood County schools, for another term."

"I'm against it," Mooner Bentworth shouted.

I arose before Tobias Claxton could rise and second Manley Warburton's motion. "Members of the school board," I said, "this time I am inclined to agree with Mooner Bentworth. I think it is the first time."

Everybody laughed except Mooner.

"I do not want to be re-employed as super- intendent of Greenwood County schools," I said. "But while I am superintendent, and since Maxwell High School is without a principal for next year, I should like to rec- ommend myself for that position."

"I move we hire Jesse Stuart for principal of Maxwell High School for next year," Man- ley Warburton said.

"I second the motion," Benton Danger- field said.

The motion was put to a vote. I received all five votes. I was made principal of Max- well High School for the following year.

To be principal of Maxwell High School was something like a dream. I was getting better pay than I had received since I had been in the teaching profession, with a prom- ise of an additional $100 per year for the next three years. After my past experiences, I couldn't believe I was principal of a high school where there was a telephone in every room. There were 350 pupils and 12 teachers in this build- ing. There was a large gymnasium which we used for athletics and, also, as our auditorium. There were shower rooms for the girls on one side of the gym and for boys on the other side. And this was something for those who came from the rural sections of the west end of Greenwood County, for not more than 2 per cent of the homes had bathrooms.

In my second year at Maxwell High School something happened about an in- justice I had fought against when I was superintendent of Greenwood County schools.

"Legislation permitting the abolishment of subdistricts, thereby doing away with the trustee system." I read these unbelievable words carefully. This was the catch: "Legislation permitting." In other words, this piece of legislation threw the responsibility for doing away with the subdistricts and the school- trustee system upon the county school su- perintendents and the members of their boards of education. The state's lawmakers didn't assume the responsibility. And here is what happened.

After this legislation was passed, Charles Manson, superintendent of Greenwood County schools, called a special session of his board and they did away with the trustee system. Of the 120 counties in Kentucky, Greenwood County was the first to do this. If Charles Manson had had the school board I had when I was superintendent of Green- wood County schools, it would not have been done. They would have voted against it.

Later came more important pieces of legis- lation. The Teacher Tenure Law was passed. Then came the Teachers' Retirement Law, with the highest monthly allotment of $100 and the lowest of $8.33 per month going to teachers too old to teach any longer. This law came to benefit the schoolteachers in my state long after railway section men were drawing their old-age pensions. My father was one of them. He was retired on physical dis- ability. Even he, though he could not read or write, could not understand why teachers too old to teach had not been given pensions long ago.

For many years I had blamed the members of the State Department of Education for Hot Diggety Dawg!

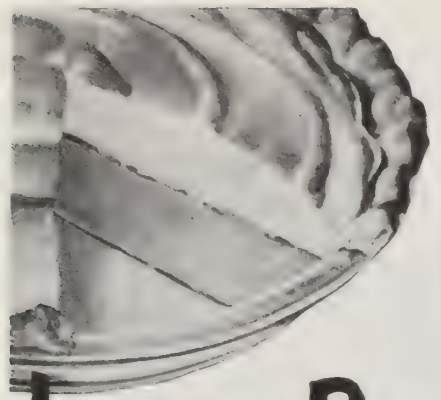
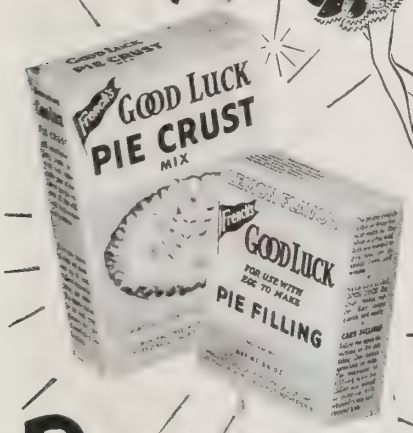
KINGAN'S New Skinless WIENERS!

Good news! Now you can buy Kingan's juicy Skinless Wieners, made of beef and pork, with all their flavor-freshness sealed in the can.
Simple to fix, simply delicious.
Just simmer in their own liquor for ten minutes and serve with heated rolls, split and spread with mustard.
Your family will love 'em!
Keep a few cans on hand for good eating.



16 VARIETIES of DELICIOUSLY PREPARED CANNED MEATS

Corned Beef Hash	Chili Con Carne
K-P Luncheon Meat	Hamburger Patties
Spaghetti and Meat	Beef with Gravy
Beef Stew	Pork with Gravy
Vienna Sausages	Pork Sausages
Liver Spread	Picnic Spread
Potted Meats	Skinless Wieners
Lunch Tongue	Pork Brains



Backed by over 100 years of Reliable Meat Processing

KINGAN & CO., Indianapolis, Indiana

LEMON PIE quick-easy!

PERFECT every time!

Make the flaky Good Luck crust this easy way—Even if you never made a pie before, you can't miss with Good Luck Pie Crust Mix! So quickly and easily you can make tender, flaky crust every time. Good Luck is made with special pastry flour. Highest grade hydrogenated vegetable shortening ensures perfect freshness.

Make the Good Luck filling in less than 10 minutes—Good Luck has all sugar added! So easy . . . so quick . . . in only a few minutes you have a luscious creamy filling that's just the right consistency, has that delicious "fresh-lemon" taste. Made from a real New England recipe. Good Luck is neither too thin nor too stiff.

Another fine French's product

our standing second from the bottom in education of all the forty-eight states. After much reading and investigating the facts, I learned that members of our State Department of Education had to obey the laws created by the state's lawmakers. The shocking thing I learned was that the Superintendent of Public Instruction, the highest educational office in our state, drew only $3400 a year, while the superintendent of one of the small independent city school systems in Greenwood County drew $4200.

We had a terrific snowstorm in the high hills of Northern Kentucky in December. There were drifts in the narrow valleys that made it impossible for our school buses to bring the country pupils to Maxwell High School. We dismissed school for two days until the snowplows could clear the roads.

While I was waiting for the snowplows, I attempted to write a short story. Now that my first book of poems, Man With a Bull-Tongue Plow, had been accepted, I was no longer content to believe that I could not write fiction as well as poetry. In two days, I wrote three short stories.

To my surprise, Martha Foley and Whit Burnett, co-editors of Story Magazine, accepted Battle Keaton Dies. Helen McAfee, editor of the Yale Review, accepted Head O' W-Hollow. Paul Palmer, managing editor of the American Mercury, accepted Three Hundred Acres of Elbow Room.

I waited until each magazine had paid me, so I could cash the checks at the same time. The evening after I had cashed my short-story checks, I was sitting in the living room with Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Kingston. Suddenly I got down on the floor, on the hand-woven carpets, and I started stacking my money in three piles.

"This is Battle Keaton Dies," I said, pointing to the two ten and the five. "This is Head O' W-Hollow," I continued, pointing to five tens. "And this is Three Hundred Acres of Elbow Room," pointing to the largest stack, six twenties and a five. "Each pile of money is for a short story I wrote the two days we were snowbound."

"What are you going to do with that money?" Forrest Kingston asked.

"Carry it in my pocket," I said.

LYDIA and Forrest Kingston had loaned me money many times, for when I first went to Maxwell High School I was badly in debt. This money, for the short stories, was the first surplus money I had ever had in my hands, that I could call my own, since the days I had worked at the steel mills.

"Don't you carry that money around in your pockets," Forrest warned. "You put it in the bank."

"I don't know how to put money in the bank," I said. "I never put a dollar of my own in the bank in my life."

"I'll show you how."

Lydia and Forrest explained to me the difference between a savings account and a checking account. The following Saturday I deposited my first money in the bank.

Nearly every teacher I knew gave his best to teaching. But he had a side line, such as farming, tobacco growing, carpentering, raising chickens, selling insurance. I had found my side line to earn some extra money. It was writing. And it was paying off. Two hundred dollars to me was a pile of money. I thought if I could sell the first stories I had ever written, I could sell more. And I wondered about some of the things I had already written. I thought they were about as good as the stories I had just sold.

Nest Egg, a theme I had written in high school, I later sold to the Atlantic Monthly. Sixteen of my old high-school and college themes I later sold to Harper's; Collier's, Esquire, Commonwealth, Household, Progressive Farmer, Scribner's, American Mercury and Southwest Review.

I HAD found the solution to my financial problems. I had found a side line that gave me great enjoyment. I knew now that I could remain in the profession that I had been trained for. I could remain in the profession that I loved. Besides the sale of stories, I would have royalties coming from Man With the Bull-Tongue Plow.

In April, I received a letter from Allen Moe, of the Guggenheim Memorial Foundation. When I had attended Peabody College for my third and last summer, Dr. Alfred Crabb suggested that I apply for a Guggenheim fellowship. That had been months ago. Now I wondered what the committee's decision was. I had applied for a Guggenheim grant to go to Europe. All I had to do was tear open the thin little letter to learn I had been accepted.

When I reported this to my superintendent, I was, upon his recommendation to the Greenwood County board of education, given a year's leave of absence.

When I went home, after fourteen months in Europe, many startling changes had taken place. Charles Manson, superintendent of Greenwood County schools, had been ousted. He hadn't been ousted by the popular vote of the people. Three of the five members of his school board had run for re-election. Thomas Dixon, who had aspirations to be superintendent, ran three men to oppose Mr. Manson's school-board members, seeking re-election. When the votes were counted Mr. Manson's school board was elected by a substantial majority. In the petitions filed by these board members when they were seeking re-election, each had made the simple mistake of failing to state his place of birth. Two were natives of Greenwood County. One was born in Pike County, Kentucky.

Upon these minor technicalities, a petition was filed in the Greenwood County court to keep the re-elected members from serving on the Greenwood County board of education. After a favorable decision had been handed down, the case was sent to the Kentucky Court of Appeals, where there was a reversed decision the following spring. Thus the candidates who favored Thomas Dixon were given the legal right to serve as members of the county board of education. Since three board members were a majority, Charles Manson was ousted as superintendent and replaced by Thomas Dixon.

On my return I found, too, that my leave of absence had been disregarded. Sturdie Roundtree had been employed to replace me as principal of Maxwell High School. His father was one of the new school-board members.

(Continued on Page 170)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

For Robert, Frightened

By Marjorie Lederer Lee

A sudden sound renting the air,
Too sharply heard;
A barking dog, a slamming door,
A thoughtless word;

The hand of night casting its forms
About your bed,
Draping familiar sunlit sills
With shadowed dread;

This is the unexpected spring
Of infant fears
Which come to fill your blue, blue eyes
With sudden tears. . . .

Call to me then, your tower of strength,
Your pillar of stone.
(Who was it said that mothers have Fears of their own?)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

makes a WOW of a tomato juice cocktail

It's a WOW—this new tomato juice cocktail with zip and sparkle. Easy to make—just add a pinch of salt and pepper, and a teaspoonful of French's Worcestershire Sauce to each glass of tomato juice—mix well—serve very cold. The blend of choice ingredients in this famous Worcestershire, aged and mellowed, adds wonderful rich flavor. Before dinner tonight—serve a WOW!

TOPNOTCH QUALITY ...COSTS LESS!

THEY GO FOR THAT EXTRA FLAVOR FRENCH'S GIVES!

Also made in Canada

FREE!

NEW RECIPE BOOK

Send for handsome recipe booklet "Dining Delights" illustrated in full color. Dozens of practical suggestions to make food go further, meals taste more delicious!

Millions prefer this smoother, creamier mustard reat your family to this easy-to-erve buffet supper. Have assorted old cuts, potato salad; and as the ain excitement, a big platter of zzling frankfurters on toasted rolls erved with lots of French's Mustard r perfect, zesty flavor. They'll make hit with everyone!

French's smooth, creamy texture makes a wonderful salad dressing, too. Grand for potato salad!

★ ★ ★

POTATO SALAD... Combine 4 cups cold boiled potatoes, cubed, 1 small onion chopped, 2 tablesp. chopped parsley, 1 cup chopped celery, 1 teasp. salt. Mix well with dressing made by beating until light and fluffy; 4 tablesp. French's Mustard, 2 tablesp. evaporated milk or light cream, 2 tablesp. sugar, 2 tablesp. vinegar, ¼ teasp. salt.

Write to The R. T. French Company, 1522 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.. and this booklet will be sent you FREE.

Name_____
(PLEASE PRINT)

Address_____
(PLEASE PRINT)

ARGEST SELLING PREPARED MUSTARD IN U. S. A. TODAY

(Continued from Page 168)

After his dismissal Mr. Manson retired to his farm. Larry Anderson, whom I had succeeded as superintendent of Greenwood County schools, was no longer connected with schools. He had left teaching to become an undertaker.

Many of my pupils were teaching in Ohio, Indiana, Tennessee, West Virginia and Michigan. Eight of the fourteen pupils I had taught at Winston High School were now teaching school. Pupils I had taught at Lonesome Valley, at Landsburgh High School and at Maxwell High School were now teaching. My brother, James Stuart, was teaching Mountain View rural school. The WPA had built a road to this mountaintop. A car could be driven there now. Budge Waters was teaching a rural school. These young teachers had the highest average in scholastic qualifications of any group of teachers in Greenwood County's history, before or since. They averaged two years in college. Many were college graduates.

I found a position at Dartmouth High School, Dartmouth, Ohio. When my year at Dartmouth High School ended, I went home to my father's farm.

Three nights each week, I walked to Landsburgh to see Naomi Deane Norris. I had known Naomi Deane since she was in the seventh grade at Landsburgh graded school. I was a junior in Landsburgh High School when she was a freshman. I wrote poems for her then. For sixteen years I had known her and had had dates with her when I could. In later years I wrote poems for her that were published in nationally known magazines. I had always loved this tall, slender, beautiful girl. Now the years were passing. She was thirty-one years of age. I was thirty-two. I knew if we were going to get married, it was time.

Then I did some reasoning. In the nine years I had been employed in my profession, I had made a total of approximately $10,832. This made an annual wage of $1203.55. On a twelve-month basis, I had averaged $100.20 a month. I had an A.B. degree and had done approximately two years of graduate work. I had spent approximately six years to prepare myself for my profession. I had been principal of two large high schools and superintendent of a large county school system. I had held one of the better paying teaching positions in one of Ohio's highest-rating high schools.

I made up my mind I was going the way the teachers I had worked with and the young teachers I had taught had gone. I was leaving the profession I had put my heart into, the profession I loved.

On August eighth I started writing my first novel, Trees of Heaven. I spent the first half of each day working on the farm. The second half of the day, I worked at my typewriter. I wasn't sure that I could write a novel.

In October I sold a poem, Eternal Destiny, to the American Mercury for $35. This was the first money I had in my hands since I had received my last check at Dartmouth High School. After I sold this poem, the first date I had with Naomi Deane, I suggested that we drive to Auckland and see a show. Before we reached Auckland, I suggested that we get married on this night.

"If we get married," she said, "we'll have to keep it a secret. I can't let my people——"

"That's all right," I interrupted.

After we got our marriage license it was past twelve midnight and the new day was Friday, October thirteenth. After waiting all these years to get married, we were superstitious about this traditionally unlucky date. We drove back to Landsburgh with our marriage license.

The next evening I had another date with Naomi Deane. Before midnight we had made all arrangements for our marriage. We were secretly married a few minutes past midnight on October fourteenth. Then once more we drove back to Landsburgh, where she went to her home and I went to mine. I worked to finish my novel while she continued teaching her tenth and last year in the Landsburgh City schools.

THE END

THE LITTLE SMALL YOUNG THING

(Continued from Page 39)

th was smiling at her and so was e didn't live around here before the came to live with the Flints just ago. This is Bob Eagan, Jane—
, the new lawyer in the judge's know. I've seen him in the court-id Jane breathlessly. "I know your she told Bob. He felt a little dizzy.

s awastin'!" Bill told them. "Let's g."

ls put on their coats and Jane was ver her bright silk party dress—a jacket! But Bob didn't even notice an out to Bob's car and all piled ove four blocks and got out at the ane walked beside him lightly. Her ely seemed to touch the ground.
was like dark gossamer. It blew is shoulder. She talked in a rush of ob was sensitive about people's d how they talked. But her voice and clear—her words quick, but oken.

do you like the judge?" she asked got to know him well when the ere adopting me. He was always kind to me. He wouldn't approve until he knew I was going to be ppy."

are you?" he asked.

es—oh, yes, now I'm so happy! The e wonderful and so kind and good.
love them!
Flint is really n, you know."
rned in their t the door. It ational Guard
They tossed ats onto the s around the t, marked also tball, and Bob began at once
e. Blue crepe rs had been soften a little ness of the ar-he lights were Older people
cing, confining es to their own group. There were lege students home for the week end;
uardsmen, with their girls or families.
n't get over it," Bob said. "You're ul! Where did you learn to dance?"
igh school," she said. "At lunchtime.
s were always dancing at noon, teach-another. Then we'd teach the boys."
t are you doing now?" he asked.
girls had taught him to dance, he ered. And he considered it a shame wasn't off at college somewhere.
decoration she'd be to any sorority nd what a rush she would have. But osed the Flints couldn't afford to send rk in the courthouse," she told him.

en you there. I work for the auditor.
typing."

an't believe I've come and gone in usoleum and not seen you."

ggled. His hand on her back was like on a young sapling. Bob had never h fun. But still there was something fey about all this. Perhaps he was ng? He had never felt such enchant-
A little French girl once had made him ttle like this, and once in Scotland—s was an American girl, right in his me town. He couldn't believe it.

oticed that she stayed very carefully om the door, where some high-school ters were clowning about. How she ance! Bob hated to let Bill have her.
omeone else cut in on him, one of the ters. It was Petey Long, the high-cheerleader.

ll, Bob!" said a cheerful voice and he about.

as one of his classmates, Dorie Cox, greeted her with pleasure. She was his age, and she looked very handsome in a blue dress with a full skirt. She had married one of his friends who was lost in the war. She had a little girl, and Bob understood that she was working in the city. They stood talking and she told Bob she had come home to stay.

"My baby's been sick. I had her in a flat, with a nurse girl to look after her, but she's not been thriving, and mother wants me to come home and stay all this winter, anyhow. I hated to give up my job, but of course Lila comes first."

"Of course she does," said Bob. "I'm coming to see you soon, Dorie. It'll be fun to have a contemporary about."

"Your actions speak louder than your words," she said, her blue eyes mischievous as she looked at Jane, whose partner had returned her to Bob.

"Do you know Jane?" he asked, grinning down at Jane.

"Yes, indeed. Jane's done some baby sitting for me in times past," said Dorie, and she greeted Jane with kindness.

"I'm awfully sorry Lila's been sick. I'm coming to see her."

"Thank you, Jane," said Dorie.

Bob danced with Jane again. An extraordinary sense of happiness came to him as he danced with her. They laughed a great deal. Everything going on was amusing.

At last the hired dance band played Good Night, Sweetheart and began to pack away instruments. Bill and Elizabeth and Bob and Jane went to Sam's for coffee and sandwiches, along with half the other people at the dance. The place was jammed, but Bill got a table for them and they sat talking to their neighbors and calling back and forth.

Petey Long, walking in a very cocky manner, came by their table, walked back to the front door, and then passed them again.

Jane's color heightened as the boy paused and said to her, "Grandpa-sitting tonight, Jane?" She ignored him, head held high.

A terrible thought came to Bob. He looked at her and at the little table where about seven of the high-school crowd sat jammed together, all watching them. He turned back to Jane and said slowly, "Tell me, are you still in high school?"

"Um-hum," she said.

Bob had to laugh. "How old are you?" he asked directly.

"I'll soon be eighteen," she said airily. "I graduate next May."

"Holy cows!" said Bob. "What are you doing out with an old man like me? You'll soon be eighteen indeed! I'm twenty-five. I was dropping bombs on Germany when you were just a little girl in pigtails. Of course I know this was a blind date—and it's been delightful. But ——"

"It wasn't a blind date," she said. "At least, not as far as I'm concerned. I've seen you in the courthouse. I knew who you were. I asked Elizabeth to fix it up for me. For us."

He couldn't help feeling flattered, but he shook his head. "It's no go," he said. "I never met a cuter girl. But you belong over there with those other children."

Her eyes were downcast, her young face stubborn. She looked up at him and his heart jumped. She said seriously, "I've had lots of trouble and sorrow. It makes me older than other . . . kids my age. It's true. I'm more grown-up than they are."

He strove to hide his deep smile. "Might be," he said. "But you are sounding younger every minute. Well, let's just enjoy it all and say we had fun!"

To gain the friendship of a cat is a difficult thing. If you are worthy of his affection, a cat will be your friend, but never your slave. He keeps his free will though he loves, and will not do for you what he thinks unreasonable; but if he once gives himself to you, it is with absolute confidence. Sometimes he will sit upon the carpet in front of you with eyes so melting, so caressing and so human that they almost frighten you, for it is impossible to believe a soul is not there.

—THEOPHILE GAUTIER.

BRING FLORIDA'S BRIGHT SUNSHINE into Your Daily Life!

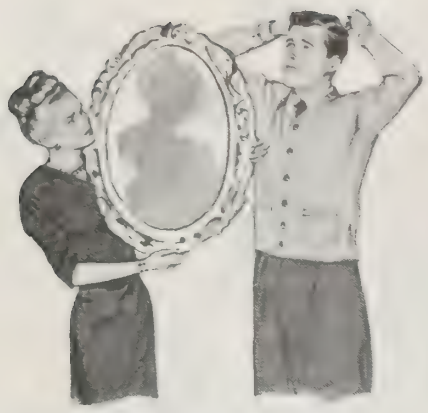
Florida's luscious orange juice does so much for you . . . why let a day pass without it!

That wonderful Florida feeling...folks travel a thousand miles to enjoy it—to bask on Florida's beaches and the sunny shores of her lakes . . . to wander through her luxuriant orange groves. But do you know a big slice of Florida's health is stored up for you inside those golden skins of Florida oranges, and in those inexpensive cans of Florida orange juice?



Yes, natural vitamin C in abundance, other vitamins and minerals, fruit sugars for energy—and all the other nourishing values are retained in Florida orange juice, fresh or canned, for your refreshment and health. Right now, while Florida's Seedless Valencia oranges are at the height of juicy goodness, and while cans of juice are being offered at most attractive prices, make the most of Florida orange juice each day!

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION
LAKELAND, FLORIDA

FLORIDA ORANGE JUICE
FRESH OR CANNED

Jane bought a mirror at a sale.
It made her husband sigh!

She sprayed some WINDEX on and proved
It was a lovely buy!

Some cleaners cost four times as much
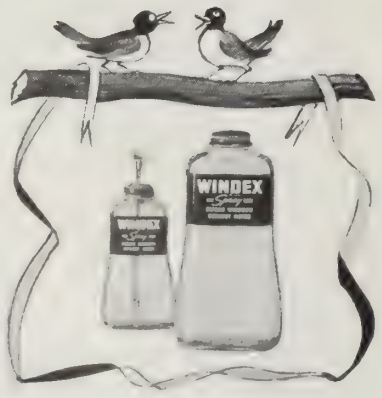
But Jane is on the beam!

She knows that only WINDEX gives
Her glass that WINDEX gleam!



Speedy WINDEX sparkles glass
Of all types, old and new.

It never leaves the corners dusty.
(Many cleaners do)!

And nothing could be easier
Than handy WINDEX SPRAY!

You put a little on the glass!
You wipe it right away!

Why pay high prices for window cleaners? Windex is only 15¢! And nothing beats it for cleaning glass, because it's made especially for glass. Windex leaves no oily, waxy film, no streaks, no dust. Insist on Windex every time!

Get Brighter Windows Quicker with—

WINDEX®

Spray

Costs only 15¢—even thriftier in the big 20-ounce size.

TUNE IN: DOROTHY KILGALLEN, Thursdays. See local paper for time and station.

Copr. 1949, by The Drackett Co.

When he took her to the Flints' door a little later, in her incongruous low-heeled shoes and pea jacket and long bright dress, he said, "Good night, honey. You sure showed me a swell time and I thank you for it."

She stood with her hand on the door. "Aren't you going to call me?" she asked, half coaxing, half in dismay.

"No," said Bob. "Not this winter—maybe next summer."

"Oh, pooh!" she said. "Don't be that way!" She closed the door softly.

Bob went home quickly. When he wakened the next morning, his first thought was of Jane. At the breakfast table he told his mother about the night before.

"Jane Smith!" his mother exclaimed. "A little small young thing like her! Dates must be scarce."

"It was a blind date," he reminded her. "I didn't know she was still in high school. She's cute as a button. And quite a dancer too! I told her she'd have to stick with kids of her age."

"I take it you enjoyed her?"

"Very much. She says she'll soon be eighteen."

"H'm-m-m," said his mother. "I think probably she's going on seventeen, not eighteen. She is a senior, but she's young."

"This gets worse and worse," said Bob, and he laughed sheepishly. He told his mother, in self-defense, "She says she's had a lot of sorrow—it makes her older."

MRS. EAGAN smiled appreciatively. "It's true," she answered, filling his coffee cup again. "She was ten when her folks were killed in an automobile accident. They lived in the south part of the county, in Freeman Township, on a farm. She lived with her grandmother for a year after that. Then her grandmother died. Mrs. Flint went down there to the funeral and brought Jane back with her and has kept her ever since. They went through a formal adoption too. The Flints are good people. They haven't much money, but that's a small thing compared to the love they have for her. And she loves them."

"She doesn't seem dampened by all that," said Bob. He got up from the table. "Time to go to work," he said.

He went on down to the judge's office, but found himself looking out the window, thinking about Jane. Just a little small young thing, he told himself and he had to laugh, just to think about her. It wasn't a blind date as far as she was concerned, he remembered. What in tarnation made her want to date him? He was actually threatened with a waistline, from his mother's cooking, and he'd been feeling quite old. He'd put her out of mind. He certainly wasn't going to start competing with young cockerels like Petey Long, who had called him a grandpa, he remembered. He'd call Dorie and take her to a movie. But with his hand on the telephone he hesitated. Bill had said something about a poker game.

Bob played poker with "the boys" and lost fourteen dollars. He played bridge with the family and lost seven rubbers in a row. His grandmother finally grew quite testy with him. He drove with Bill to the university to see some college wrestling. The time dragged. Nothing was diverting. He finally took Dorie to the movies and sat for a long time talking to her afterward. It was mostly about old times when they were both youngsters in the town, but it was fun. Dorie was a grand girl. No doubt about it. She had had it rough and she was brave and asked no favors. But he didn't ask her for another date. Not then.

A few days later Mrs. Halleck stopped Bob on the street. She was a former speech and dramatics teacher and unofficial head of all local theatricals. She had been asked to get up an entertainment for the benefit card party coming up in a few weeks.

"You used to be quite good at amateur theatricals, Bob," she said. "Come in and help us."

"That'll be fun," he told her and promised to come to her house that night, with others, to plan out a program.

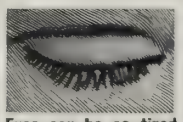
The first person Bob saw when he got to Mrs. Halleck's was Jane. She was sitting on

Wake up with a HEADACHE?

That's the time for Alka-Seltzer

If you have never tried Alka-Seltzer for headaches, find out how fast it works. There's nothing quite like Alka-Seltzer! It contains one of the world's most effective pain-relieving agents. It also contains alkaline buffers to speed relief. Alka-Seltzer's fizzing effervescence further speeds its pain-relieving action. The next time you have a headache, try Alka-Seltzer.

Alka-Seltzer



All drugstores U. S. and Canada

TRY EYE-GEN

AMAZING EYE-OPENING TES

Millions Thrilled O Transformation It Ma

Eyes can be so tired you want to close them for relief . . .

2 drops make this striki difference in SECOND

Clear, expressive eyes are fascinating. 2 drops of soothing, safe EYE-GENE in each eye floats away that tired, dull, strained, irritated look and fe in SECONDS—dramatically lights up your expression! Safe EYE-GENE is like a tonic for your eyes. Use it every day. Insist on EYE-GENE. 25c, 60c, $1 eye-dropper bottles.

Guaranteed Good Housek

AMAZING CREAM REMOV UNSIGHTLY HA QUICKLY, SAFE

Acts Below "Razor Li Without Cutting o Scraping Legs

The modern way to rem ugly hair from your legs is Neet® Cream Depilatory works deeper than a razor, low the surface of the s Safer too from razor cuts scratches. Neet leaves ten skin soft and smooth, free f razor stubble. Just apply N like any cream, then rinse and hair disappears like ma also Calluses. Qu easy, and economi Just rub on. Jars, and 50¢. Buy Mo at your druggist.

CORNS

REMOVED BY MOSC

Your money refunded if not satisfied. The Moss Company, Rochester, N.Y.

IT'S NEW! IT'S FUN!

Pro-phy-lac-tic WHISTLE BRUSH hat a peach of an idea! A child's tooth ush with a two-note whistle in the handle! et one for your youngster today . . . at ur drug counter. Made by the maker famous Pro-phy-lac-tic Tooth Brushes. o-phy-lac-tic Brush Co., Florence, Mass.

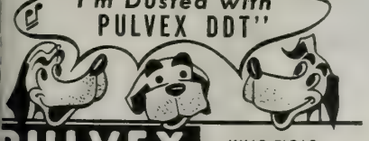
NOW THEY'LL LOVE TO BRUSH THEIR TEETH!

MOTHER! You Love Your ild Read This!



an happen in your home, a small accident a sudden burn, a cut or scratch that can ome infected. You must be ready to pro- your child when these things happen. utes lost rushing to the drug store, the ng preparation hastily used—these can anger your child's welfare. Have OIL-O- always in your medicine chest.

IL-O-SOL is a soothing, inhibitory anti- tic . . . of proved value in aiding healing. does not stain the skin. Wonderful for or cuts, wounds, burns, non-poisonous in- bites, and sunburn. OIL-O-SOL is so ctive that it has been used for years in usands of homes, factories, and industrial nts. You can pour it on—that's why it ks instantly. Every home should have sso's OIL-O-SOL. Ask for it at your drug re, today. Only 50¢.

If You Have a Child You Need OIL-O-SOL

"Fleas Don't Bother Me I'm Dusted with PULVEX DDT"

PULVEX FLEA POWDER ... KILLS FLEAS ... KEEPS 'EM OFF

MATERNITY DRESSES WRITE FOR FREE CATALOG

Smart, youthful styles for Morning, Street, Afternoon, Sports, or Formal wear. Charming fashions for the mother-to-be at low budget prices. Also Maternity Corsets and Lingerie.

ADVANCE STYLES

CRAWFORD'S DEPT. A, 729 BALT. AVE. Kansas City 6, Mo.

a sofa, where she was wedged in with four other girls. She gave him a radiant smile. She wore the same pea jacket, evidently her only warm coat. She had on a very long, floppy "new look" skirt and a little maroon-and-white beanie on the back of her head. Her soft, dark eyes followed him as he crossed the room. The word "precious" came to him again. She was precious. She was dear. He felt an unusual lightness of heart just to be there with her, and he turned around and made a little face at her. She giggled suddenly and her hand flew up over her mouth.

It was evident at once that Mrs. Halleck was going to build the whole show around Jane. She evidently thought Jane was the only one with any appreciable talent. There was to be a Gibson-girl sextet and Jane was to sing the lead. The male quartet, which would include Bob, was to sing a group of songs and then accompany Jane in two songs. Then there was to be a special number, the big number, which would be Jane singing Brown and Freed's Temptation, in parody, with Bob for a stooge. Bob was to sit in a chair like an old-fashioned portrait, with Jane standing with her hand on his shoulder. Jane was to wear an accumulation of the worst of the 1890 period, and Bob was to have his head in a real old photographer's vise, and to be cold and not tempted! He felt himself coloring a little as Mrs. Halleck outlined all this. They were handed songs to learn and told to report at the armory the next night. A stage was being improvised. They would begin rehearsals, for there wasn't much time.

Bob had to laugh. His mother had given Jane credit for some very solid virtues—courage, intelligence, the ability to work. Mrs. Halleck—and no one to contradict her—evidently thought Jane gifted. But Bob couldn't deny he was glad enough of an excuse to see something of her without seeking her out.

Dictators always look good until the last ten minutes. —JAN MASARYK.

Mrs. Halleck worked them hard and the time was brief. But she had learned long since that amateurs do better the shorter the time they have to think about it. Bob came by himself to rehearsals and Jane was always with the other girls. But she was not only the focus of his own interest, but of that of all the others, and she carried it lightly—almost, it seemed to him, unaware of it. She had a clear alto voice which was true and she showed an adolescent tendency to be "torchy." She looked very demure in the white shirtwaist and long black skirt of the Gibson-girl getup, with her dark hair in a pompadour. She was light-footed and sure of herself in the little dancing number she did with Bill.

But when it came to their act his astonishment grew. She didn't seem to care at all how she looked! Mrs. Halleck skinned back Jane's dark hair into two tight, thick, short braids and tied them with white strings. She painted freckles on Jane. She put a hat on her with an absurd rose that bent forward or back and then coached Jane in tilting her head to get the maximum effect. Jane was to wear a very tight plaid skirt, a fussy blouse, and someone's castoff old fox fur. Somewhere they had unearthed a pair of pink stockings with black polka dots, and rather large, fancy, high-heeled button shoes. There wasn't another girl in town, Bob was sure, who would be willing to wear that make-up!

But there was more than all this, he thought, at the last dress rehearsal. When Jane stood up there to sing her parody she not only didn't care how she looked, but she really looked changed. The round, sweet, young face suddenly showed a definite jawline—delicate and clean, but there under the tender flesh. Her whole being was turned outward. She held nothing back. She turned her toes in, made exactly the right gestures with her gloved, outspread hands, and she sang like an old trouper. She wanted only to please

ROYAL... Best for Carpets ...Nicest for You!

The smooth running, powerful ROYAL preserves the beauty and prolongs the life of your home furnishings by keeping them free from destructive dirt.

ROYAL is so easy to use—so quick and thorough—that it saves you countless hours of toil.

Either an "upright" revolving brush model or a super-powerful "cylinder" type will give you years of unfailing satisfaction. ROYAL always offers finest quality at lowest price.

ROYAL PRESERVES THE BEAUTY OF YOUR HOME FURNISHINGS

A CLEAN HOME IS A MORE HEALTHFUL HOME

There is no better way to protect the health of your family than by cleaning your home regularly and frequently with a ROYAL. Its great power and efficiency — its easy operation, make it a real joy to use.

Why wear yourself out using an obsolete and inefficient cleaner when it costs so little to have an up-to-the-minute ROYAL?

ROYAL Cleaners are sold only by dependable local stores. If you don't know the name of a ROYAL Dealer in your locality, please write us.

Illustrated—Model 279 "Upright" and 260 "Cylinder"

THE P. A. GEIER CO.
Cleveland 8, Ohio
CONTINENTAL ELECTRIC CO., Ltd.
Toronto, Ont., Canada

ROYAL leads the world for value

Simply wonderful wonderfully simple

ICE CREAM MADE WITH TEN·B·LOW

Extra-rich!
Extra-easy!

FRESH STRAWBERRY ICE CREAM
(makes a full quart)

1 can Ten-B-Low

1 cup water

1 cup chilled, crushed, sweetened strawberries*

1. Set refrigerator control to coldest temperature.

2. Place Ten-B-Low in a mixing bowl, gradually add water and 1½ to 2 teaspoons vanilla. Mix thoroughly.

3. Pour into freezing tray and freeze until entire mixture is frozen. You need only add water and flavoring to Ten-B-Low because each can contains all the sugar, heavier-than-whipping cream, milk and egg yolks necessary for extra-rich ice cream.

4. Break up and spoon frozen Ten-B-Low into mixing bowl. Whip to a consistency a little softer than creamy mashed potatoes. Stir in chilled, crushed strawberries* which have been sweetened with 2 tablespoons sugar.

5. Return to freezing tray and freeze. That's all there is to it—nothing to add but flavoring and the water we've removed! Ten-B-Low is NOT a powder, NOT a so-called "mix," NOT a gelatin, but a genuine ice cream in heavy, concentrated form. Get several cans of Ten-B-Low today!

*Any fresh, frozen or canned fruit may be substituted for strawberries in this recipe. For hand-turn freezer, just add water, flavoring and freeze.

FREE—20 Delicious Recipes, including many unusual and easy to make desserts. Just write Sally Ross, Ten-B-Low Company, Dept. B-95, Columbus 16, O.

Ten-B-Low

CONCENTRATED REAL ICE CREAM

makes any flavor

them all! He had a hunch she was very good. She ought to be in dramatic school. She ought to be studying singing.

Mrs. Halleck said as much to him. "I'm going to try to get her a scholarship," she said. "She is simply wonderful. We haven't had anything like her for years."

"Can she sing? Is her voice really good?"

"She can do anything. She just needs training. She can act. She can put it over."

Maybe she is more mature than the other girls, Bob thought, and knew he was glad of any excuse to think that.

The night of the card party he sat at one of the fifty tables set up on the armory floor. He played bridge with the family—someone had sold his mother four tickets. Bob was glad enough when the lights blinked—a signal to all performers to gather behind the screen.

The show went quickly and well, and of course the crowd was generous. These were their own youngsters. They'd rather listen to them, now and then, than to professionals. The applause was spontaneous and prolonged. Bob, in white pants and a blue serge coat, in an old straw hat with a cord on it, sang with the quartet the old favorites the crowd liked. He changed quickly in the enlisted-men's room in the armory, then carried his own chair out onto the middle of the stage and sat down, a hand on each knee, and glared at them.

Jane came prancing out and at once took the place by storm. They wouldn't even let her start singing. Finally she held up her absurd little gloved hand, gave herself a flounce. She started to sing and they listened. She sang to Bob:

"You came!
When I was alone.
I should have known
That you were templa-a-a-a-tion!"

She had them right in her hand and Bob played dumb and reluctant for her. When she courted him, he shook his head coldly. At last she finished singing and popped herself into his lap, and a howl of pure joy went up from the townspeople out front.

They had to do their whole act over from start to finish.

After all the prizes were given out, it was announced that there was over a hundred dollars for Christmas baskets. Everyone cheered and started home.

Bob walked Jane the few doors to Flints'. They stood on the shaded front p and Jane put her sweet face up and he stoo and kissed her. Her lips were cold trembling—but the kiss was like fire. It the sweetest kiss—its very sweetness ch him. He stood up straight, looked at h long moment, reached beyond her opened the house door and put her qui inside it, gave her a little spank and cl the door between them. But hours late was sitting on the edge of his bed, sm ing and thinking, and thinking and sm ing.

The winter wore away. Bob took Dori the Christmas dance. They joined a gr of contemporaries, mostly young marri and Dorie had a new stiff black even dress of moiréed silk, and she looked v fashionable. But when Bob took her even coat to the checkroom he saw a fami little old pea jacket on a hanger there.

Jane was with the high-school cro They had their own corner in the armory were allowed always to keep it for their group. Bob and his friends found a place themselves, and the older crowd anot center from which they could come and Jane was evidently with Petey Long. saw her dark head floating on someone's a and after a while, when Bill was danc with Dorie, he went over and cut in on Ja She gave him a shimmering smile and t danced in silence. She was light as this down. She didn't just follow; she anticipa him and he grew bold and danced he used to dance in college, as he danced here a couple of months ago. W he took her back to her corner she squee his hand and they smiled at each ot But it was a mistake to dance with for afterward his own contemporaries seen heavy and slow, even Dorie, who was good dancer.

Toward the end of the evening there w a commotion over in the corner, and Bob a Dorie stopped dancing to look. It was Ja and Petey, dancing together in a ring adolescents. They didn't dance—they fl Their feet twinkled in double time. He flu her away and pulled her back, he danc around her, and she around him, and all t youngsters cheered them on. The ba leader spied them and picked up the tem and they flew faster and faster. The mu ended with a rolling crash, a cheer went from the bystanders and Jane and Pet stood, hands clasped, hair down on th

(Continued on Page 176)

"Please! Don't tell me how it ends."

MORE THAN LIKELY you have said that to yourself a number of times—if you're really a coffee lover.

Because, while coffee may be your favorite beverage, you realize what a bad effect the caffein in it has on some people. How it can make them feel irritable and jumpy . . . and even keep them awake at night. Maybe it has that effect on you.

So when you feel jittery or nervous—or if you're sleepless at night—you automatically start wondering about the coffee you drink. Are you drinking too much of it? Should you cut down on it—or, much as you hate the thought, cut it out altogether for a while?

Should you? Not at all! Just try Sanka Coffee.

So rich and full-bodied, Sanka is a grand-tasting coffee that you can drink without worry!

And yet Sanka has all the qualities of very fine coffee—the satisfying flavor—the bracing cheer.

ALL COFFEE - REAL COFFEE -

97% CAFFEIN - FREE

But the big thing is that Sanka is 97% caffein-free. And that means worry-free! There's not the least chance of caffein bothering you—whether you drink two cups or twelve!

So why not try Sanka Coffee tomorrow. You have nothing to lose and possibly a great deal to gain.

Sanka Coffee

Real coffee with the worry taken out. Drink it and sleep!

Products of General Foods

We've Activated Seismotite

in NEW OLD DUTCH CLEANSER to give you

FASTER-EASIER CLEANING

than any other cleanser you've ever used... and it's SAFE!

(THE ONLY CLEANSER MADE WITH ACTIVATED SEISMOTITE)

MORE SPARKLE WITH LESS EFFORT!

SNOWY WHITE

Rinses Away Completely... Leaves No Gritty Sediment!

No other cleanser—only amazing New Old Dutch contains ACTIVATED Seismotite! This remarkable discovery gives you almost effortless cleaning—a gliding action that polishes while it cleans—erases dirt and stains like magic. Economical, too—because just a touch does so much!

Yes, and now we have ACTIVATED Seismotite to give you faster, easier cleaning than any other cleanser you've ever used. NEW Old Dutch cuts grease on contact! And it's safe—kind to the hands. Get 2 cans of Old Dutch Cleanser today—one for the kitchen, one for the bathroom.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HARRIED HOUSEWIVES

PAINTED WALLS AND WOODWORK. To each quart of hot water, add 2 teaspoonfuls of New Old Dutch Cleanser and stir. Wash surface with this solution and wipe dry with a soft cloth. You'll see greasy smudges and finger marks disappear almost like magic—painted surfaces come sparkling, shining clean without hard rubbing.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

CUDAHY Plus Product VALUE TESTED AND PROVED

© THE CUDAHY PACKING CO., 1949

The First Major Cleanser Improvement Since the Introduction of Seismotite!

(Continued from Page 174)

foreheads, their young faces smiling and glistening with sweat.

If I needed a reminder that she belongs in her own age group, I sure got it, Bob told himself.

Dorie was sympathetic and comfortable and made no demands on him. Bob saw her now and then, increasingly as the winter went on. She often invited him over for a dinner of her own cooking, with another couple, usually married, to play contract afterward. They went to the movies and then sat in a booth at Sam's over coffee and cigarettes, talking and talking. Bob played cards at home. He went skating, and went to hockey games with Bill. He went to parties here and there, played poker occasionally. He thought of a friend who had been in a German prison and who told him once, "It wasn't that we were mistreated. It wasn't even the starving. It was the timelessness. The days were so long—each day lasted for an eternity. No day ever seemed to end, and when it did, the long night began." It was a little like that now, he thought. He felt hollow. He felt old.

His work went well enough, although the judge told him once, "You haven't got the sparkle I expected of you, Robbie. You're like an old man. Did the war do that to you?"

"No, sir," Bob said. "Not the war."

This life, he thought—just being a small-town lawyer, a county-seat lawyer! When he was overseas he had lain awake dreaming of it. It was all he wanted. The quiet tree-lined streets, the big, roomy old houses, the familiar faces, the drugstore and the square and the old courthouse. Chess games with the judge, his mother's cooking, clean beds and the sweet smell of honeysuckle of a June night, the winter river frozen hard for skating, and his old friends! It had seemed like heaven to him, in anticipation. All a man could ever want. And now he had it, and the dust and mold of age lay over everything. His renunciation still seemed right to him, but it was about to ruin his life. Jane would soon forget him.

Of course Bob saw Jane now and then. Sometimes at a distance. Sometimes to speak to. He thought she looked a little wan, a little pale, but younger than ever in her paleness. Her dark hair flew behind her. She always moved quickly, breathlessly. She was always busy. There were almost always other youngsters tagging about after her. In snow or rain her dark head was bare, the pea jacket flapped open, the long skirt swished about her slender feet and ankles, and the low-heeled black shoes grew quite shapeless with winter wet and cold. She always spoke to him gladly, sweetly, with her dark eyes coming up to his face, with the glow of her smile—and then she was gone again.

But in February a warm wind came sweeping up from the south and in a few hours scoured off the old snow. Suddenly it was stuffy indoors. People flung up windows and Bob noticed that the days were growing longer. It was daylight now when he walked home from work. A few silly snowdrops put out their pale blossoms and everything seemed surprised, stirred, suddenly remembering that spring could come again—and soon! Even if it grew cold again—and it would—even if it snowed or blustered, the winter would never have such conviction again, such harsh reality.

It was the second day of the warm wind that Bob, walking home from work, heard the quick fall of feet behind him. He stopped. He turned and looked behind him and saw that it was Jane. He faced her and she came, as he had seen her first, running quickly, her hair streaming out, her coat behind her elbows, the black skirt she wore so much molded to her young limbs. She caught up with him and stopped, breathing quickly, a flush on her cheeks.

"I wanted to catch you," she said. "I saw you come out of the office. I—ran after you ——"

"I heard you coming," he said. "I thou it was you. What is it, Jane?"

She stood, still breathing quickly, lool up at him, and suddenly she flushed shook her head. "I've thought and thoug she said. "And now it seems . . . you ou to know, without my telling you!"

"No," he said firmly. "Tell me!"

"It's just . . . do you realize what dar you're in? How can I grow any faster t I'm growing? If you won't wait ——"

"What do you mean, Jane?"

"It's Dorie," she said. "Soon you'll b a position where everyone will be expec you to marry her. She's probably expec it now. Oh, Bob, can't you see? Can't see how the town weaves it all around yo just little by little—and then you'll find expected of you—then you'll be used her ——"

"You shouldn't say that, Jane," he s gently. "You shouldn't disparage Dor

"Why not?" said Jane, with dignity. " my happiness, too, isn't it? It's my life, well as yours and hers. Oh, I know sh grand. I baby-sit for her—sometimes wh she's going out with you. She'll make a g wife. But, Bob, she's had . . . what we have had! She's had it. Now she wants to be m ried—she wants security. She will ma you—or someone else. Not just anyon mean, but someone suitable. And I co grow older and marry Petey, or some like him. And we'd make out. But it woul be . . . what it could be! And I don't care am bold. I have a right to speak—for my li

"Yes," he said, shaken by her outbu "Yes, Janie—you have the right!"

Whenever you meet a man differing from you, remember that you differ from him, and that your difference is to him as great and as offensive as his is to you.

"I'm seventeen toda she said, suddenly los her fire. "I'm not fibb this time. I'm really s enteen. I'll graduate t tenth of May. Then yo not be ashamed to d me."

"I'll never be asham to date you!" he protest a little wildly. "Believe Janie—I've been thinking of you. I've be thinking about how I was at your age a all the fun I had. I want you to have yo pleasures. At the Christmas dance I saw it that you belong with those youngsters."

"I'm with them all day every day! simply live with them. They don't know an thing—those boys. They are just silly. B I like them. They're my gang. But what h that to do with it?"

He stood looking down at her tender ba head, at the little feet in the worn shoes, a the pea jacket which could not conceal disguise her youth and slender grace, and thought how she could always surprise hi He thought about her in the show. thought about her on their first date. S would always be the same, yet always diff ent. Now she stated her case like a you lawyer—she had the constitutional right the pursuit of happiness! And he saw, t that the danger she spoke of was real enou While he had feared she would change, was getting himself involved.

He put his hand under her arm. "I'll wa you home," he said gravely. He walked h to the Flints' door. He said to her, "Jan you just go ahead and graduate. You spe this next couple of months with your ow crowd. Don't expect to hear from me unt after you graduate. Then we'll see if you' changed your mind. Meanwhile—I'll waiting. Never fear."

He stooped and kissed her cheek, and suc denly she laughed out loud with happines She ran into the house. Bob walked hom and found he was carrying something new- a solid feeling of respect for her. She was protagonist who knew what she wanted an didn't hesitate to speak for it! Well, th was her right.

The next week end Bob went to the cit to visit some cousins he had promised to vis for a year. The following Friday he took o for some work in the state law library. The he went to a reunion of his old outfit, an stayed for four or five days. Bill and Eliza beth got engaged and he went to their an finest ingredients... perfectly seasoned . . . delivered to your grocer Kitchen-Fresh.

P. S. Like a touch of garlic and onion in your dressing? You'll like Miracle French by Kraft.

AN IMPORTED DELICACY

Simply Delicious, on French Toast, Waffles, Toast, Popovers, Cake Icings and Ice Cream.

Carson's Coconut Spread

Special offer—Send $1.00 today for 12 ounce Jar. We Pay postage.

THE LEE M. CARSON CO., 2235 Judah St., San Francisco, Calif.

NO WASHING + NO DRYING + NO BREAKAGE + NO HELP OR HUBBY NEEDED FOR DISHES +

PAPER PLATES

Save You Plenty

Paper Plate Association, Room 3702A, 122 E. 42nd St., New York 17, N.Y.

MOTHER'S HELPERS

One morning little Anne and Judy decided they'd surprise their mother by fixing lunch.

"What'll we have?" asked Anne.

"Hot Grape-Nuts Wheat-Meal," shouted Judy. "Mummy just loves it!"

They scampered out to the kitchen and got a box of the cereal down from the shelf. Then they started to rummage through the pots and pans.

"Oh dear," said Judy. "I can't find the jiffy."

"What's a jiffy for?" asked Anne.

"For the cereal," said Judy. "Mummy says one of the nicest things about Grape-Nuts Wheat-Meal is that it cooks in a jiffy!"

(Advertisement)

nouncement party and drank too much and Dorie was very cool to him.

In April his mother shocked him. She told him to look in the glass show window of the local photographer.

"He's made some pictures of Jane," she said. "They are good. Mrs. Halleck is sending them to her old friend, Mr. Dobbs, of Mercury Pictures. Mr. Dobbs is going to be in the state next month and she wants him to see Jane and talk to her. Mr. Dobbs, it seems, has confidence in Mrs. Halleck. When she was teaching at the university she found the Lane girl—Babby Lane—for Mr. Dobbs. He is definitely interested in Jane and says he will send her to Mercury's drama school for two years, and give her bit parts along the way, while she's training—if she's as good as Mrs. Halleck says."

"Well, she is," said Bob. "She's that good."

"The Flints are quite excited. You know Mrs. Flint isn't very well. She looks terrible—such a dreadful color. I think she must have heart disease. Of course Jane is doing all the housework at home, and getting ready to graduate and taking the lead in the class play and writing her valedictory address. So she's pretty busy, but she had her picture taken. Mrs. Halleck told her to wear a white little-boy shirt and her pea jacket and comb her hair just as she always wore it. No make-up but a little lipstick. Of course Jane and Mrs. Parr both thought that was awful. Jane wanted to borrow that red dress Elizabeth loans her, and have Ivy set her hair. But she's a good child and did as she was told—and the results will just put your eye out. That hair! Those eyes. Whee!" his mother said.

Bob stood looking at her and she made a face at him. A disgusted face.

"You had your chance!" she exclaimed. "The child adores you. Now you've probably muffed it!"

Bob went down and looked at the picture in the glass showcase. He went in and tried to bribe Mr. Parr, for a picture. Mr. Parr showed him one, but wouldn't let him have it.

"I can't, Bob. Not unless she says so. You'll have to ask the Flints. I've always been very scrupulous about pictures."

Bob stuck around and argued with Mr. Parr and looked at some other pictures he had made. When he got home he went to his room and took from under his coat—the picture! It was the only thing he had ever stolen in his life and he felt no compunction. He put it in his bottom dresser drawer and went up after supper and sat looking at it. Mrs. Halleck was a genius. That pea jacket—that was strictly the ticket! Her shining, smooth, dark hair, the little quirk of a mischievous smile—the essential youngness.

Why, she'll always be young, he thought. When she's forty, when she's eighty, she'll be in a hurry and out of breath and a little untidy and awfully busy—and always kind and . . . young!

But now things were complicated. He had said he would wait until after her graduation and he was going to keep his word. But how much longer would she wait? She'd be gone—right away, perhaps! He cursed Mr. Dobbs and Mrs. Halleck silently and put the picture away. As soon as Mr. Parr stopped sputtering he'd put it on his dresser and trust his mother's discretion. But now there was something far more dangerous than the chance she might get a crush on Petey—in her senior springtime!

Everybody in town, of course—and that included Bob and his parents—went to the class play, to baccalaureate, to commencement, on Saturday, Sunday and Monday nights. The town was abloom with flowers of every kind, including sweet girl graduates. The boys, their dark or light heads wet with water and every hair in place, with new suits and stiff creaking new shoes, were sufficient unto themselves, but the town went all out for its girls.

The Hallecks had a house guest. Mrs. Halleck had the Flints in for dinner to meet him. The little swarthy man went to the class play with Mrs. Halleck. It was a poor vehicle

(Continued on Page 179)

yes, enjoy

Taste Perfection

in DELRICH

E-Z COLOR PAK Margarine

How glad you are that Delrich—the margarine that gave you the easy, modern way to color—has the finest flavor you ever tasted.

For Delrich is sheer taste perfection—sweet, rich, creamy-smooth! That is why homemakers prefer Delrich for table use—for extra delicious richness in cookies, cakes. Yet, it's thrifty! Nutritious, too, Delrich is packed with food energy—enriched with 15,000 units of Vitamin A per pound. Try it today!

Delrich and E-Z Color Pak are the trademarks of The Cudahy Packing Co. for its margarine.

THE CUDAHY PACKING CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

"THANKS!" SAYS MRS. HOMEMAKER

DELRICH ENDS MIXING BOWL MESS!

A. Pinch the berry. B. Knead the bag. C. Reshape in carton; chill. Easy to slice in attractive quarters or patties for the table.

TRADEMARK

A New American Favorite!

© T.C.P. CO., 1949

THIS MONTH

SPRING CLEANING

must kill dangerous dust-borne* germs

HELP PROTECT your family's health when you clean house this Spring! Remember . . . deadly disease germs by the millions may lurk unseen in ordinary house dust. So—don't merely clean, but clean hygienically, with potent, germ-killing "Lysol" brand disinfectant in every pail of cleaning water. This goes for your daily cleaning routine, too, throughout the year. Dependable "Lysol" is highly concentrated . . . wonderfully economical to use.

*Scientific research has shown that dust is a great reservoir of infection... that various streptococcal and respiratory diseases are definitely connected with house dust.

Every Day*... Clean the Hygienic, Germ-killing Way... with "Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. • Product of Lehn & Fink

SCRUB SHELVES, cabinets, closets with germ-killing "Lysol." These places can be dangerous dust collectors . . . may harbor disease germs in great numbers. Disinfect . . . kill germs as you remove dust!

WOODWORK needs special attention at house cleaning time. Wipe doors, mouldings, baseboards with a "Lysol" solution. 2½ tablespoons "Lysol" to each gallon of cleaning water. Won't harm paint, varnish.

YOUR BATHROOM is full of "danger spots"—surfaces where millions of disease germs may breed. Play safe! For the hygienic cleaning of floor, walls, tub, toilet, all fixtures—use "Lysol"!

DISINFECT BROOMS, brushes, mops, cleaning cloths regularly with potent, economical "Lysol." These cleaning tools must be kept hygienically clean to help you fight disease germs as you clean.

IMPORTANT "LYSOL" CLEANING USES: Bathroom tub, toilet, basin, walls, floor. Kitchen sink, drainboards, garbage pail. • Laundry tub and washer. Closets, cellar, stairs, store rooms, shelves. • All woodwork, floors, walls, doorknobs, rails. Children's rooms and furniture, diaper pail. • Sickroom, including bedding, utensils and linen. Cleaning rags, mops, brooms, brushes.

(Continued from Page 177)

adly done, but the town enjoyed it and thought Jane was wonderful. He ached r, that she had to be judged on that. anted Mr. Dobbs to like her, but he want her to go away. The baccalau- sermon was, as always, interminable. the next night, Jane stood up and gave eech, and it was full of flowery phrases hortations to the future. The class just d looked at her. They had been looking for four years and they weren't a bit of it. No one ever got tired of looking at ob knew!

was wearing his commencement gift. d simply sent it with his card. A slender d wrist watch. His mother had given rhinestone barrette which sparkled in rk hair. Under the gray gown she wore a ht white dress, and she wore new white s!

last it was over and everyone had his na and some personal praise and com- from the high-school principal. It was in Bob's mind that he would wait for fter the commencement exercises.

t when he rose his seat his er gave an excla- on and Bob d back. Mrs. who sat beyond in the row, had ed over in her and as they hed, horrified, lid to the gym- floor and lay b was the first eside her and he ightened her said quietly, Doctor Locker- Stand back, e. She's just ed."

eryone was eous and con- ate and most of moved toward door. Then Jane there, kneeling e Bob, her arms nd her foster ner.

Oh, mother! k to me! Oh, Bob, e all right?"

octor Lockerbie ed over her and "It's her heart. the ambulance, Bob, and a stretcher." ey took Mrs. Flint home and Bob stayed so did his mother. Mrs. Flint was too ill to be moved to the hospital and the or called a heart specialist. A nurse ar- d. When morning came Mrs. Flint was really out of danger, but she was holding own. She had rallied a little, knew them

I believe she'll make it," Doctor Locker- said.

E stood by the bed in her white dress, dark hair thrust behind her ears, her ng tenderness dimmed with fatigue. She ed at her foster father, crinkled her nose im and said, "Wouldn't you like some ee, father? I'll make some coffee now, for f us."

Jane," whispered Mrs. Flint. Jane turned k instantly to the gray-faced figure on bed. Mrs. Flint gathered her strength ether. The oxygen tent over her did not cure her effort to speak. "You mustn't et, Jane. You're to see Mrs. Halleck and Dobbs at nine o'clock. He must leave ay."

All right, mother." Jane smiled at her her, such a radiant smile that Bob's own at hurt. He had forgotten Mr. Dobbs. ob went home, took a cold shower and into clean clothes and went to work. When ot home at noon, his mother was there and nswer to his look she said:

Mrs. Flint is a little better. But she is in a siege. If she makes it this time, it will be a long summer day before she can do any work. She might live for a while if she's perfectly quiet."

"Mother, did Jane see Mr. Dobbs?"

"No," said his mother. "But he came to see her. She told him she could not accept the offer he made her. She's going to stay with her mother. Her father can't afford the nurse for long. The nurse is going to teach Jane how to care for her mother and Jane is going to stay right there and do it. Mr. Dobbs told Jane he would give her until fall, but Jane said no. As long as her mother lives——"

"BUT mother—that's terrible! You don't approve of that, do you? Couldn't you do anything with her?"

"Why would I? Of course I approve of it," said his mother indignantly. "Mrs. Flint, without health or money or anything but love, took Jane and made a daughter of her. I would expect nothing else from Jane, either, knowing her as I do. I would never interfere."

"She's only seventeen," protested Bob. "At her age—the housework, the care of an invalid, the anxiety and confinement, the loss of her big chance—I don't see how you can sanction that!"

"Sometimes, Bob," said his mother, "you sound awfully young, for a grown man!"

Bob could not eat his lunch. He called the office and told them he would be late. He went to the Flints'. No one came to the door and he opened the screen and went in. The modest little parlor was empty, he thought at first, and then he saw that Jane was sleeping on the couch. She was curled up, one hand under her cheek. But of course! She had given her room and bed to the nurse. She would sleep here until the nurse left.

Bob went over and knelt quietly down by the couch and looked at Jane. She slept soberly. He could see now, as he had seen the night of the amateur show, the fine, clear line of her jaw. Her mouth was soft, but her face was firm. The lashes over her dark eyes—the soft hair thrust back from her face. She would waken presently, re-energized. He could feel the strength in her, the elastic young strength and courage. Nothing would move her from the course she had set and she would never regret it. He loved her with all his heart.

Suddenly her eyes opened and she looked at him kneeling there. She was not startled, but accepted his presence at once, and naturally. But she put out a hand to him and her voice was compassionate. "Poor Bob!" she said. "After all this long lonesome winter, you're going to have to wait for me!"

"Never fear," he told her, "I'll wait for you—forever. I want only to serve you now and make all this as easy as I can for you. I'll be right at your hand, Jane. I love you."

She was quite grown up, he realized. He knew now how she would always be. She would cook and clean and scrub floors and bathe her mother and comb her hair, and always she'd be affectionate and tender. She'd rush about—so young and full of love. His heart broke to think of her doing all of it. She would never get to Hollywood. She would always be in a role like this. And she loved him!

He kissed her gently. He tucked the pillow more comfortably under her head. "Rest now, darling," he said. "In a little while they'll need you—you little small young thing!"

THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Little Hand Organ

By Ernestine Cobern Beyer

Sing ho for the organ that's playing
Wherever good people are straying!
Its out-of-tune wheezes embarrass the breezes!
"It's springtime!" it seems to be saying.

Sing ho for the spirited, spunky,
Mischievous, moth-eaten monkey!
He capers and waltzes and turns somersaultses,
And holds out his hand like a flunky!

Sing hey for the hand-organ player!
There's nobody poorer yet gayer!
Yellow his sash is, and black his mustache is—
And he's happier, far, than the mayor!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Shower the Bride

WITH A CRAFTSPUN SHOWER ENSEMBLE

"SAILBOAT" Design

WON'T MILDEW, CRACK OR PEEL

FADEPROOF DESIGNS

SEAMS ELECTRO-HEAT WELDED FOR PERMANENCE

6 STUNNING BACKGROUND COLORS

FOR A BRIDAL SHOWER, give a Craftspun* Shower Curtain of genuine Vinylite*—matched with a Craftspun Window Curtain! This distinctive design by Lurelle Guild, widely known decorator, has a modern flair that young homemakers love. Craftspun Shower Curtains are so sturdy, the designs so permanent, they will be in service long after launching! Shower and Window Curtains illustrated about $3.95 each. *Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

CRAFTSPUN Shower Curtains

ALSO CRAFTSPUN LACE DINNER CLOTHS • WINDOW CURTAINS • KITCHENAIRES*

SEND FOR "FLOWER ARRANGEMENTS FOR LACE" 25¢

Beautifully illustrated book on Flower Arrangements by Mrs. M. Cochrane Cole, nationally known authority. Full-color pictures, easy directions for creating beautiful table arrangements the year 'round.

SCRANTON LACE COMPANY, Dept. L-3, Scranton, Pa.
Please send me "Flower Arrangements for Lace";
I enclose 25¢ in coin.

Name_____
(please print)

Street_____

City_____ Zone____ State_____

. . . and naturally, when he came home from a long trip, Mrs. T. S. was very happy—until she unpacked his bag.

The clean white shirts he took away always came back with a "mourning band" of railroad dust ground into the collars and cuffs. And the job of getting those shirts white again was not only a test of wifely devotion—it was very hard on the shirts.

The happy ending to this story came the first time Mrs. T. S. tried Fels-Naptha Soap Chips. To use her own words, "I never had any white shirts come out any whiter—and no rubbing!"

P.S.—Golden Fels-Naptha Soap gives you THE EXTRA WASHING HELP of TWO CLEANERS—MILD, GOLDEN SOAP and ACTIVE NAPTHA . . . this better laundry soap turns out cleaner, whiter washes in less time, with less hard work. Look for the Fels-Naptha Bar or Fels-Naptha Soap Chips next time you're out shopping.

MADE IN PHILA. BY FELS & CO.

GOLDEN BAR OR GOLDEN CHIPS

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

Maeve and Little Sister wait politely to go with us—no matter where it is.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

SAVING steps or no, I cannot make up a bed by doing one side completely and then whipping just once to the other side and finishing the thing. I get clumps of unreconstructed blankets in the middle. I get one sheet way up by the headboard and the other end midway to the footboard. And I know I am wearing my life away with all that circling the thing so warily as I smooth and tuck.

In my own free-wheeling way, I can get a meal in just a few minutes. And clean up a room pretty fast too. I get tired, but oh, the luxury then of curling up on the couch by the open fire with a couple of dogs and a cat, a copy of Crusade in Europe, and a bowl of popcorn. Maybe it wouldn't be such a luxury if I weren't tired first!

As far as cooking goes, I do a good many timesaving things, but they don't involve measuring my motions. They involve cooking double of most dishes, assembling ahead materials for varied salads on different days, freezing whole meals, keeping a shelf of special supplies for emergency company meals, and filling a casserole corner in the refrigerator. A cup of rice, a few peas, a bit of gravy, a small dish of tomatoes—so many leftovers make elegant casseroles.

It was also an attempt at efficiency that urged us to get the favorite recipes in the book, Stillmeadow Kitchen. And now, alas, a whole new shelf is piled with bits of paper and scraps of letters with new and wondrous recipes, so I still hunt like a madwoman when I want to make Florence Brodman's Strawberry Glaze Pie. It will be under Mushroom and Shrimps with Wine, probably. (I do not mean to be this way, it is just a born trait.) The book itself is so jammed with extra recipes that every time I open it a whole mass falls out.

The Strawberry Glaze Pie is worth anybody's time. This is it:

In a double boiler put 6 tablespoons flour, ⅔ cup sugar, ¼ teaspoon salt, and slowly add 1¾ cups milk. Cook over boiling water, stirring constantly until mixture thickens. Then cook 15 minutes with occasional stirring. Add a little of the mixture to beaten yolks of 2 eggs, then return to boiler and cook 2 minutes—stirring. seems like a lot of stir, but isn't when y get at it. Cool, and add 1¼ teaspoons v nilla and ½ cup whipped cream.

Fill a baked pastry shell with this mixtur Drain a box of frozen strawberries and l berries on top of the cream filling. Mix cup sugar and 3 tablespoons cornstarch f every 1¼ cups of juice. Cook juice ar sugar and cornstarch until thick, and po over the berries to make the glaze (1¼ cu juice glazes a nine-inch pie).

Serve, as if this weren't already enoug with whipped cream.

This is the most delicious and satisfyir pie—and if you want to serve it for a bi dinner, you can make two pies and va them by adding ½ cup coconut to the cu tard and, instead of the berries and juic simply top the pie with a meringue of t egg whites and sugar, and bake as you woul any meringue.

This pie is so rich, and yet so light, tha it makes a perfect finale for a Sunda dinner in May, and it gives you a chanc to use up a box of last year's frozen berrie before the new crop is in too.

LIVING in an old pre-Revolutionary hous is fun, but there are times when our moder ideas make things hard. Currently Jill is re covering from a bout with the stairs. I got the idea that we needed a good stair carpet. The stairs, like all those in houses of our period, are like an enclosed ladder bounding up sharply, and so narrow that you can brush the wall at either side. Long ago we fastened a ship's rope from Provincetown to the left wall, as a handy way to help mariners attain the upper deck.

The stairs were spattered, and had to be repainted every season. A carpet would be fine, I thought, and ordered enough. A set of metal rails came with it, to fasten across the treads and hold the carpet in place. Also puffy cushions to go under the carpet.

Jill had an extra half hour the day it all came. She lugged the roll to the top of the

(Continued on Page 183)

IT'S HERE...

A really new and amazing washing development!

The G-E All-Automatic Washer!

Does the complete washing and damp-drying job all by itself—with one setting of the dial!

THE General Electric All-Automatic Washer is MORE than simply a new washer.

s a sensational, new washing development—a completely tomatic washer that will save you more work than you er thought possible.

Think of this: You simply pop your clothes into the neral Electric All-Automatic Washer, set the dial! at's all!

This new kind of washer runs through these six steps a perfect wash, all by itself:

1. Automatically soaks clothes (if you set it to include soaking) with famous General Electric "Activator* washing action," then empties soak water.

2. Mixes hot and cold water automatically to selected washing temperature —flows wash water through soap dispenser.

3. Washes clothes with "Activator action"; self-cleaning filter screens catch the dirt and lint.

4. Rinses thoroughly with "Activator action" in constantly filtered, constantly circulating water.

5. Spins clothes in General Electric's high-speed spinner until most pieces are dry enough to be ironed at once.

6. Automatically shuts off, saving rinse water for next soak or wash; or turn the control and it empties, shuts off automatically.

t your retailer show you these and the dozens of other artling new features of the G-E All-Automatic Washer.

Then, you'll understand why we ask: How can any woman ss up seeing this wonderful, new G-E All-Automatic Washer? eneral Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

LL THIS AND FAMED G-E DEPENDABILITY!

DARING 5-YEAR PROTECTION PLAN GOES WITH WASHER!

Includes one-year warranty on entire washer—plus four-year protection on "sealed-in-oil" driving mechanism on washer used for household use. You can put your confidence in General Electric.

EXTRA worksaving, clean-washing features! Portable. No bolting down. Ideal balance suppresses vibration. It soaks, washes, and rinses in enough water to keep your clothes completely immersed. Dissolves soap thoroughly—no soap streaks. Can be operated manually for blankets and fineries. Counter-height top opening. "Sealed-in-oil" driving mechanism needs no oiling. *Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

GENERAL ELECTRIC

You've waited long enough for that new carpet!

Now let your Bigelow dealer show you what you've been missing!

A whole wide world of choice is yours at your Bigelow dealer's. Elegant traditional motifs. Gay young modern designs. Rich-looking sculptured effects. Solid shades in exquisite textures! Pick your Bigelow from a whole garden-full of colors . . . and colors that never grew! Today—have the fun of finding your favorite Bigelow Carpet!

Above: A wonderfully adaptable small-pattern carpet, Bigelow's Fervak 9424. Around $7.50 a sq. yd.*

Prices to please your husband! Before he says, "Yes, we need a new carpet, but..." just tell him this...you have a wide choice of Bigelow beauties in every price range. And whatever you pay for your Bigelow . . . from $5.95 a sq. yd. to a luxury-loving $18.95, you can't find a finer value! Today—compare with other carpets!

Left: The essence of luxury underfoot—Bigelow's deep, pillow-soft Sonata 2103-3545. About $18.95 a sq. yd.*

For name of your local Bigelow dealer, call Western Union by number. Ask for operator 25.

A beautiful future that's woven right in! Those famous Bigelow good looks begin on the sheep's back, with top-quality imported wools. They're carefully blended for impressive richness and year-after-year wear . . . carefully treated to retain their natural springiness underfoot. Today—let your Bigelow dealer show you what an all-round-wonderful buy you get with a Bigelow Carpet!

Right: Bigelow's Glentwist 94040. Permaset for long-lasting beauty. About $10.95 a sq. yd.*

*Slightly higher in the West

Bigelow
Rugs and Carpets

LIVELY WOOL SPRINGS BACK UNDERFOOT

Beauty you can see... quality you can trust
...since 1825

(Continued from Page 180)

came down to get the hammer, and nstantly went up to investigate, and whoosh Esmé and the carpet rolled lly down to the first floor. Esmé at the thing with surprise and made emarks in Siamese. Jill rolled up the and lugged it back upstairs. She the top down.

rods were just the width of the treads, e little hooks to slide them in went in
The only catch was that once the two were in, there was no way on earth to e rods inside. Because of the walls! I ted cup hooks instead of the closed
, but Jill didn't cotton to the idea of oks on the stairs.

a modern open staircase, the rods are pushed outside the banister, slid there you are. But since the rods not fold or bend, there was an ab-impasse. For two days Jill worked at oblem; meanwhile, the carpet rolled every little while and nobody could go rs at all except Esmé.

ell," said Jill, "if you don't mind my the house down, I can lay the carpet
I guess it's house or carpet; which do ally want?"

he end, after a few trips to the village, ed finishing nails, drove them in, held ds to the treads, bent the nails over ard and got the thing stapled in place.

ce the puffs are y large for our stairs, you rise to per floor in a series thery bounds, and it very lovely. And, del in the struggle, the ouse has resigned lf to the modern hness.

May we get all kinds ather. We often have ut the furnace on,
he next day it will be d and hot as fire. One ve eat in the garden
e the narcissus is out,
he next we sit by the fire and toast our toes.
t it is apple-blossom
h. All over the green-ills and in the little ys, the old apple trees are young with and-white drifts of bloom. There may omething lovelier in the world some-e, but I can't think what it would be. It ecstasy of blossoming. In itself, it is no than the redbud in Virginia, or the ood, but part of the glory is that it s after a New England winter has chilled ones.

ne land has been bare in March, delicate in April, and suddenly everywhere you
, the dazzling sweetness of apple bloss fills the air. Every old gray-stone wall s a leaning branch of pink and white.
the old orchard is carpeted with violets roofed with rosy color.

ow and then we find morels there, in vio-
ime. These spongy conelike mushrooms ll too rare, and oh, how delicious dipped tter and broiled! It is a mistake to hunt accompanied by cockers. Morels won't d a pounce; they are too delicate.

s possible to go outside the gate and e the cockers behind, but an Irish setter different affair. The only way to go any-re without Maeve is to let her get in the
She will sit half a day in the car. Jill says pretends she is driving.

is strange how all the dogs know in-tly if we plan to go anywhere, even if it o more than run to the village for the . Half a dozen cockers may be asleep nd the house, and suddenly they are all anized into action. Little Sister and Linda from the sofa. Honey pokes a golden around the corner of the bed. Flyer es wildly to the wood basket and seizes ze to bring us. He is one Indian forever ing gifts. The cockers mill around in the ways, but Maeve will be already lifting atch on the front one (which is the right of course) and whooping out to the road.

When we are going to leave them for a whole day, we take the most elaborate precautions. We secrete purses, gloves, coats and scarfs in the front room and close the door. We plug in the night light for Honey when nobody is looking, so if it gets dark before we come in, it won't be blank dark. We shut the stairway door casually in passing by so Linda won't be able to give in to her baser instincts and chase Esmé up the stairs. Eventually we do get away, leaving a mort of absolutely broken hearts behind us. And loud in our ears echoes the banshee wail of an abandoned Irisher.

But oh, when we return, the scurryings and swishings and skidding of rugs! The bounds and leaps and the plump loping about of Honey! Wonderful welcome, and what better place to come to than a house of cockers and cats and setter? It is such a pleasant thing to be well loved!

This summer Linda and Little Sister and Hildegarde and Melody, if there is time for her brushing up, are due to go to the dog shows and try for their CDX degrees. Life being the way it is, the triumphs of last summer when they won their CD's are far behind and forgotten. Maeve is still occupied with her CD, being younger and only starting her career.

Anyone who doubts that dogs love obedience work and shows ought to see the real hugger-mugger that goes on on show days. We can hardly eat our breakfast, for the small fry are hurrying us off, and woe to us when we have to leave Melody or Hildegarde at home. They all want to go to every show. The car windows are smudged all summer from eager noses as they travel back and forth. Sister's little dumbbell and Maeve's large training collar and the vacuum kit and the feeding pans all rattle around on the floor. Hildegarde sits up front because she gets nervous in traffic. Linda rides on the shelf in back where she can see better. Maeve sits with her arms elegantly crossed and as much of her nose as possible out the window. Somehow she gets the air of a Gibson girl, feminine but healthy, vigorous in a ladylike way.

There is enough to do in May, its own kinds of jobs. The barbecue to open, the summerhouses to clean and polish, the studio haymow to reconvert from winter dog-jumping center to writers' and sketchers' and readers' retreat. And the lawn furniture, which is especially shabby this year, to be repaired, painted or burned up as the case may be.

The garden seems to burgeon with weeds as soon as it is planted. The fresh earth smells good as the weeds come out. The rosy rhubarb and lucent green asparagus are ready to gather. Asparagus on toast with plain melted sweet butter, and rhubarb sauce for dessert, is a spring supper.

Also, we can begin to load the freezer. The youngest tips of asparagus and the first shoots of rhubarb make the best frozen products.

The evenings are longer now, just right for pottering around the yard, although not yet warm enough to sit under the trees. Sometimes we drive through the valley past the little white villages. Men and women and children are out, the older folk raking or weeding, the children playing jackstones on the steps or jumping up and down in that purposeful aimlessness of children.

All over America, families are doing just the same, supper being finished. And at such an hour, I feel one can hold the whole of America in the curved fingers of a lifted hand. Surely this is our land, families at home in the spring of the year, and bountiful summer ahead. This is the meaning of our democracy, and let it never again be threatened.

How silvery the moon hangs in the night sky above the stilled fountains of the apple blossoms!

THE END

FORSYTHIA

Forsythia was discovered by Mr. Robert Fortune in a garden in China and in the Province of Chekiang. He brought it to the Horticultural Society in England, where it was given the name of a famous horticulturist, Mr. William Forsyth, who served as director of the Royal Garden of Kensington from 1737 to 1804. In New England, forsythia is sometimes called "sunshine bush" or "golden ball." Like the lilac, it belongs to the olive family.

—SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

This bedtime story's not for kids!

No dragons or fairy queens in this bedtime story.

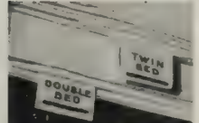
It's a strictly-for-grownups story that Mrs. Wood Sanford of Homewood, Illinois, was "driven" to write us after she read a recent Pequot Sheet advertisement.

"I think you deserve to hear about my Pequot crib sheets. In and out of the wash continuously, those six sheets lasted through my daughter's crib years. Then straight through her brother's, too."

And Mrs. Sanford mentions another important point to remember when comparing wearing qualities... the number of sheets in use:

"The fact that I had only 6, and two of them are still fresh and white and whole, makes my bedtime story even better."

Made for Years of Extra Wear



You simply can't beat Pequot high-count, plus-service muslins . . . for crisp, fresh appearance, for smooth, close-woven softness, for year-in, year-out wear that makes them a real value. Pequot plus-service muslins... America's most popular sheets . . . are made to outwear any other sheet you can buy at any price.

Pequot Mills, Salem, Massachusetts
Also makers of Pequot Fine Combed Percales

so good-looking . . . . so long-wearing

PEQUOT PLUS-SERVICE SHEETS PILLOW CASES

Pronounced "PEE-KWAT"

Projecting size tabs for quick finding on the shelf.

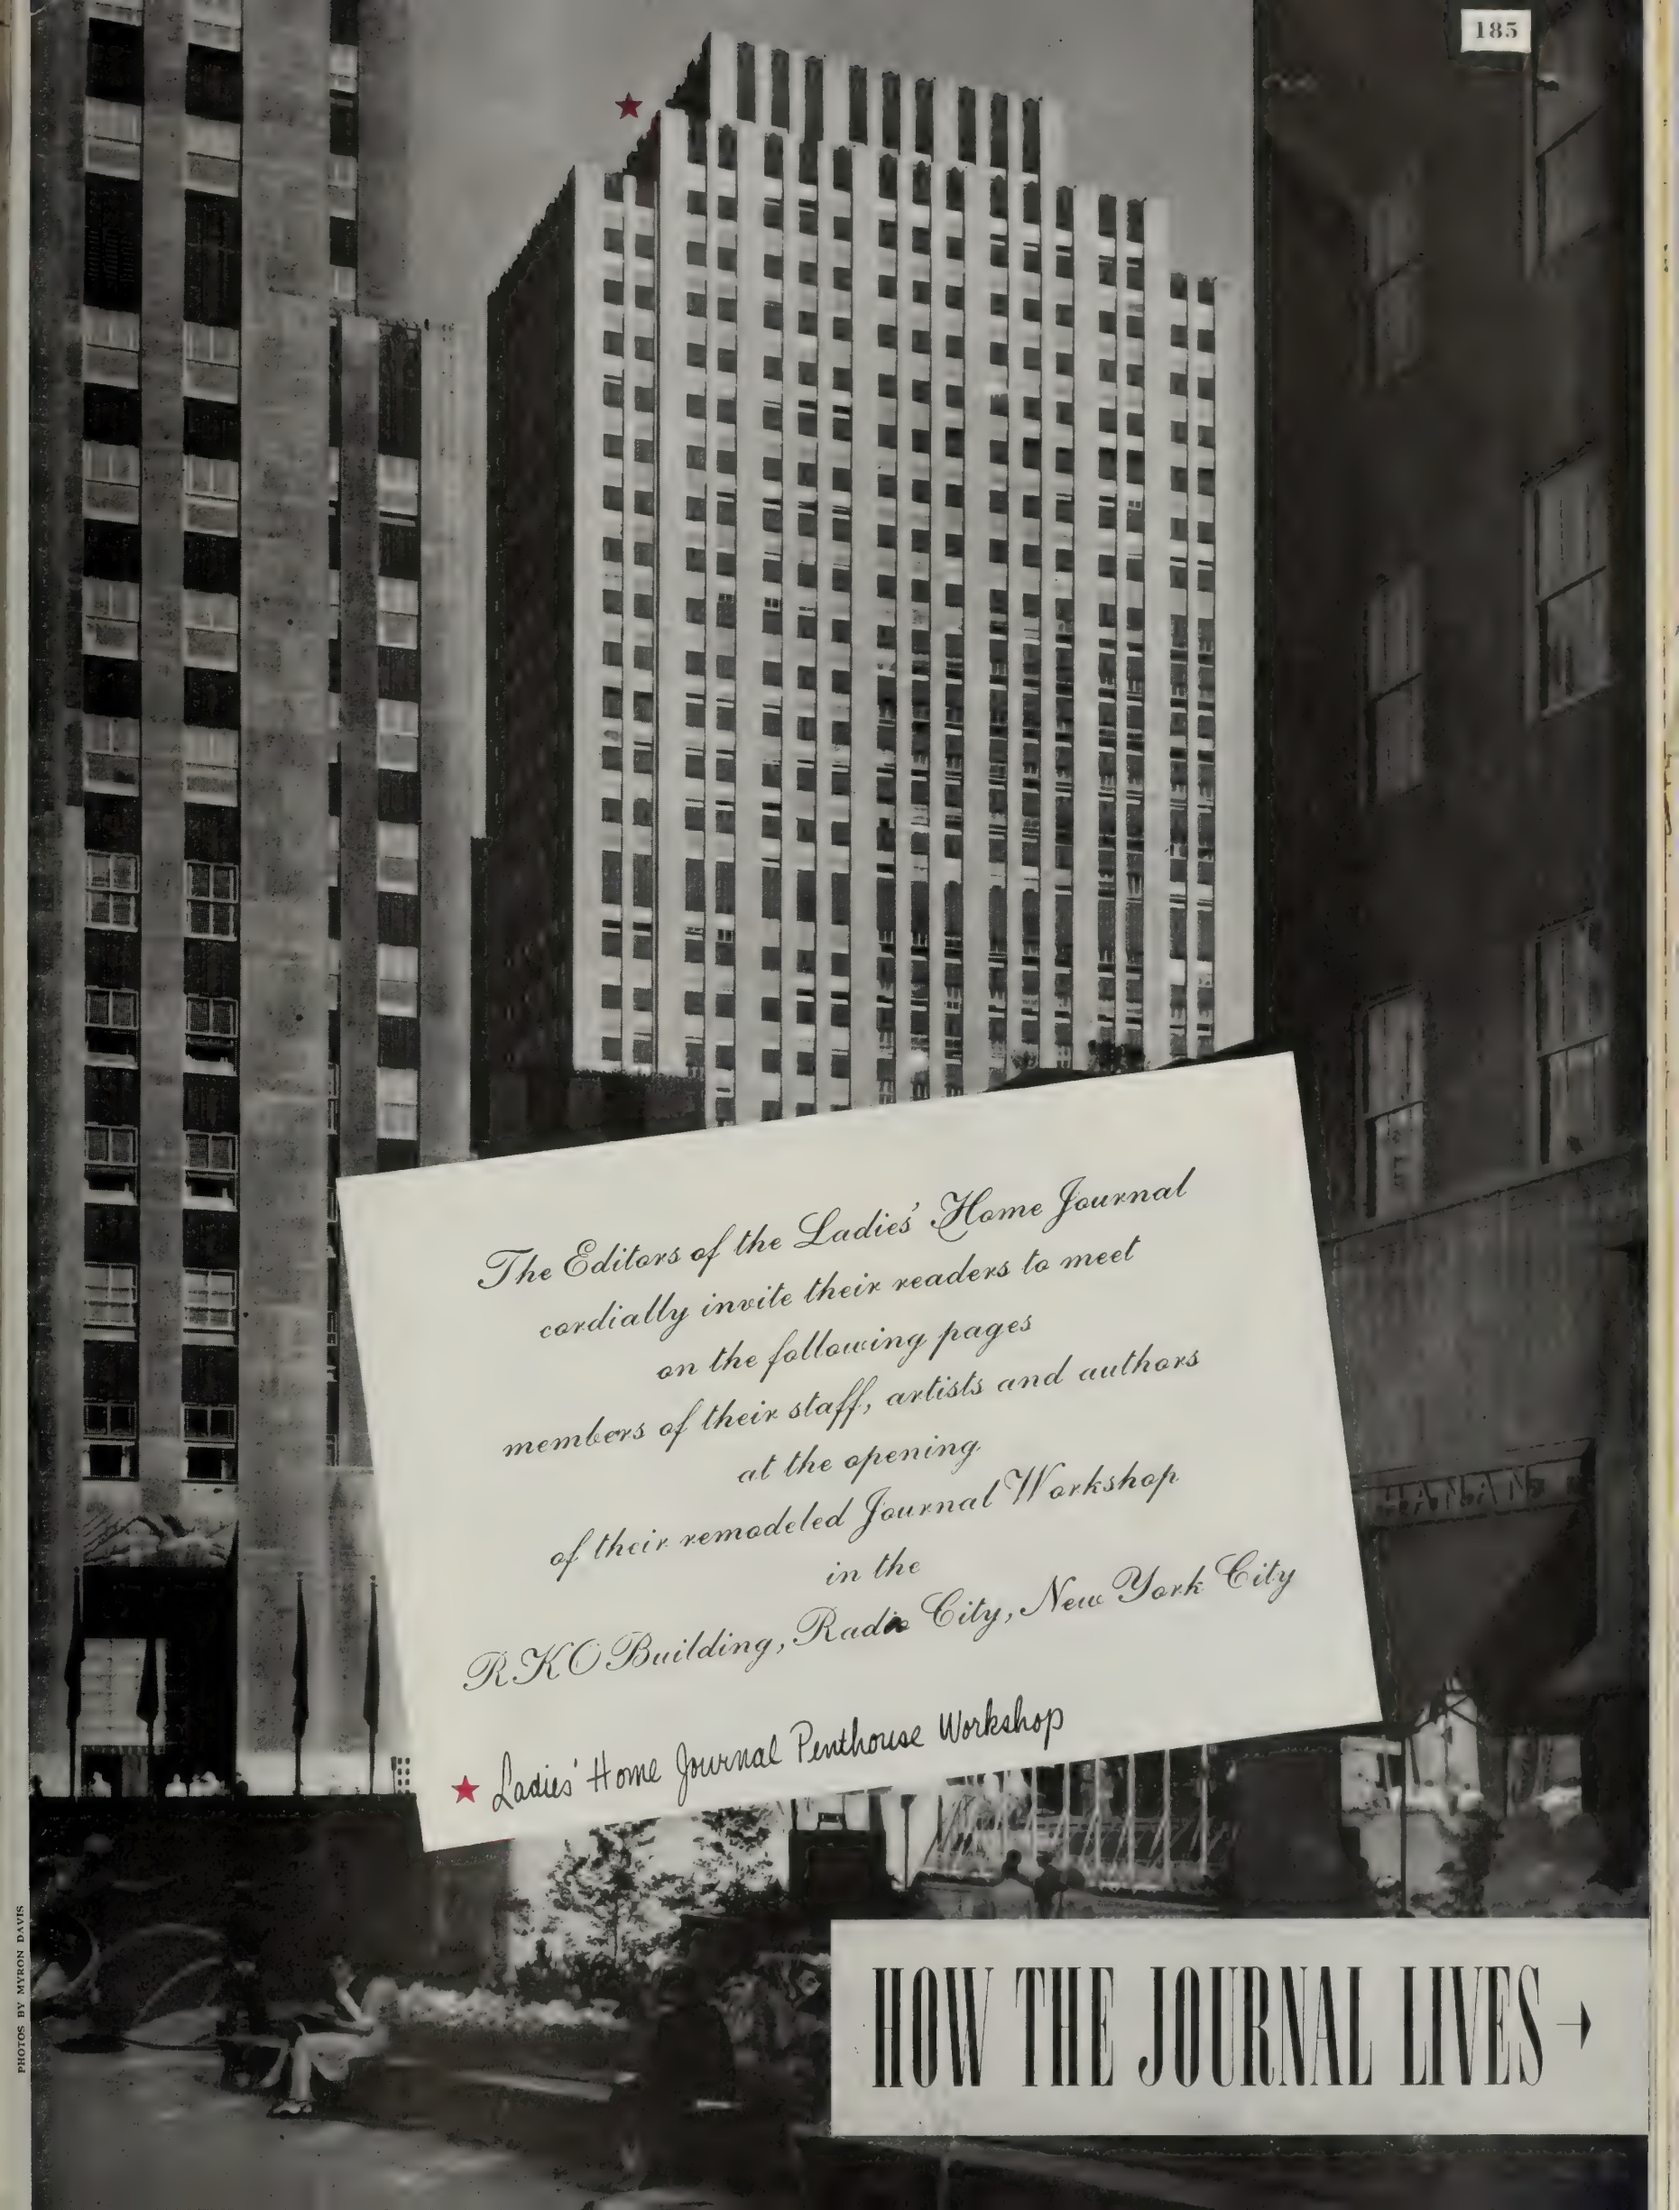
Double-tape selvages to give extra strength.

PEQUOT SHEETS

High-count muslins have the thread count and weight that give the longest service.

BY APPOINTMENT
PERFUMERS TO H. M. QUEEN MARY.
YARDLEY, LONDON

As modern as the art of tomorrow



Lotus

a colorful new perfume

by YARDLEY

Lotus Perfume, $5.00 to $17.50. Cologne, $1.50 and $2.50.
Sachet, $1.50. Dusting Powder, $1.65. Plus tax.

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U.S.A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

HOW THE JOURNAL LIVES →

PHOTOS BY MYRON DAVIS

Distinguished stage stars Helen Hayes, José Ferrer; beautiful models; top-flight illustrators Jon Whitcomb, Coby Whitmore are guests of Editors, Mr. and Mrs. Gould.

A Workshop Housewarming

Shows our skyscraper home and conducts a backstage tour to tell you what we do, and how.

Bright lights outside, luminaries within. John Dall, Broadway and movie star, chats with Mrs. Gould.

Left to right: Wilhela Cushman, Dawn Crowell Norman, Nora O'Leary looking quite as chic and attractive as their models.

The rector came to tea. Alice Blinn pours and the silver gleams against white lilacs and stock, a foil for pretty faces at the party.

HELEN HAYES had powdered sugar down the front of her gown from nibbling hot doughnuts in our experimental kitchen. Eleanor Roosevelt was expertly turning switches in the all-electric laundry. Peering into ovens and explaining how he was building himself a new super deluxe kitchen was actor and amateur chef José Ferrer. John Gunther was fascinated by the automatic dishwasher. The occasion: a housewarming for JOURNAL contributors and friends at the newly remodeled Workshop in Rockefeller Center, New York City.

Since it was manifestly impossible to invite the 4,275,000 of you who buy the JOURNAL to the party, you are hereby invited to make the same tour of inspection of our home via the pages of this magazine. Here you will meet the editors who help you to make your job as homemaker what it should be—the most meaningful and satisfying work in the world.

You arrive at the thirty-first floor of the RKO Building, with its magnificent view of the Hudson, the great ship docks and the bustling panorama of America's largest city. Here in the penthouse are the attractive JOURNAL entertainment and dining rooms (photographed in color on Pages 204 and 205 of this issue) where the Editors, Bruce and Beatrice Gould, interview at breakfast or lunch such divergent personalities as Prof. Alfred Kinsey, Lady Astor, Eve Curie and Mrs. Roosevelt. Here editors' offices sing with colors like "hot pink," moss green and black violet. Here are the spacious modern and experimental kitchens and laundries of the food and household departments.

Down on the twenty-ninth floor of the RKO Building are other editors' workshops. The week before closing date you might find the Interior Decorating Editor on the floor cutting out slip covers while her assistant paints lamp shades, the Fashion Editor about to dash out to catch the Super Chief to California for early-summer fashions, and the Architectural Editor surrounded by heaps of camera equipment, just back from photographing two historic

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

Virginia homes near Williamsburg for a future JOURNAL. And like a steady song in the background you would hear the whir of sewing machines as another JOURNAL dress pattern is born.

Few department editors are ever at their desks more than two weeks a month. On How America Lives assignments they have personally visited over 125 families in as many towns and cities—sometimes staying a week or longer with each—studying their problems with the view of learning your problems, and trying to help solve them according to each family's needs, desires and pocketbooks, whether it be steelworker or millionaire. At the start of the series nearly nine years ago, Executive Editor Mary Bass herself covered 300,000 miles selecting and interviewing families. Ruth Matthews is now the assistant editor who acts as talent scout for JOURNAL families, traveling by chartered plane, if necessary, to find America's most typical homes for this popular feature. From three to six families are interviewed extensively for every one selected; none of them is paid; and of course no family is chosen which does not enter into the idea with wholehearted enthusiasm.

Often when editors are absent from their desks, and not flying about the countryside, they are "in the market"—New York City being one of the best and largest sources of all the thousands of articles a family may have to choose from during a lifetime. The Interior Decorating Editor, for instance, sees all the new furniture and rugs and fabrics in New York—both wholesale and retail—four times a year, walking as much as twenty miles a day and carrying tucked under her arm an extra pair of shoes.

The Workshop was first opened in 1935 and now, with the end of most wartime shortages, has been brought completely up-to-date. The main JOURNAL editorial offices are Executive Editor Mary Bass, Taylor Caldwell, novelist, Mr. Gould and Roger Butterfield (see June How America Lives) enjoy Workshop canapés.

Rubbing elbows at the party are artists and authors of 31 JOURNAL best sellers of past six years. Alex Ross, below, illustrated Marquand's last.

Al Parker, cover artist who originated Mother and Daughter series for JOURNAL, with pretty model Kathy Dennis, who wears a suit from fashion pages.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt ate piping-hot doughnuts in our kitchen while she investigated freezer food wrapping, demonstrated by Margaret Davidson.

Photography Editor Morris and Art Director Fink obviously appreciate Selene Mahri, glamorous blond cover girl.

Mrs. Gould shows the Curtis president, Walter D. Fuller, why our coffee is so famous, while Louise Benjamin pours.

Edward Steichen, American dean of photographers, discusses art with Bruce Gould, comments on glittering sky line from window.

At 8:50 A.M. sharp, the secretaries sign in, looking fresh and smart. Some become editorial discoveries, marriage rate is high.

It's a Colorful Workshop

Flooded with sunlight, with a vista of the sky line, rivers, ships and Central Park, a beehive of busy, talented personality, reflected in streamlines and in chintz in Philadelphia, where all manuscripts are read, articles edited, and the magazine is printed.

New York was chosen for the Workshop because it is the hub of fashions, beauty, home decoration, architecture and housewares industries. Its purpose is to provide a workshop which duplicates as closely as possible an actual home where food can be prepared and served, clothes washed, floors scrubbed. Thus, the sum total of what is new, reliable and good in methods as well as in equipment can be passed on to our readers.

As Nora O'Leary says, "You will never find us saying, 'All you have to do is ——' because we do everything ourselves and know how hard it is." For instance, every single pattern photographed on Miss O'Leary's pages has been cut out and fitted by the Pattern Editor herself. The same philosophy holds true with all other JOURNAL pages—everything we tell you to do has been tried out, not once but many times, in the JOURNAL's own Workshop.

A department page is originally conceived from three to six months before publication, when the various editors present their ideas for approval to the Goulds. From the department editors' first conference with Mary Bass, who heads up the Workshop, to the final appearance of the page, the Goulds on the two days a week they spend in the New York editorial offices (balance of the week at Philadelphia headquarters) check it all down the line, from samples of fabrics to sketches to copy outlines.

Editors Bruce and Beatrice Gould meet with writers and artists in the Workshop, often suggest subjects, help develop ideas. Here Al Parker scores hit with new Mother and Daughter cover. Models were his own wife, small daughter and ruddy-haired son.

The Goulds divide their week between Philadelphia headquarters and the N York Workshop where, in a wood-paneled room, Mr. Gould negotiates such scoops as John P. Marquand's popular new novel, Point of No Retu Tuesday is staff meeting day; policies are discussed with associate editors in Mr. Gould's office. Dick Pratt (left center), gets tips for Journal About Town.

To illustrate the intense interest the Goulds take in every aspect of homemaking: A new washable wallpaper was being considered for one of the kitchen pages. Mrs. Gould expressed skepticism that any wallpaper near to stoves and sinks would wash satisfactorily. Accordingly, Margaret Davidson, Household Editor, retested the paper, by tacking a piece on the wall and splattering it with fruit juice, coffee, bacon grease, butter and other kitchen stains, allowed it to dry thoroughly and then did a job of scrubbing with soap and water. The paper was then taken off the wall and shown to Mrs. Gould. Since it showed no greasy stains it was okayed to appear on a JOURNAL page.

From their farm near Princeton, New Jersey, the Goulds divide their week between the Workshop and the main editorial offices in Philadelphia. When a reporter asked Mrs. Gould recently when she first became interested in women's magazines, her answer revealed a great deal of the basic philosophy behind the JOURNAL:

"I used to feel that women's magazines were edited by men for some insipid imagined female and not for real flesh-and-blood women. As my own life developed, as I realized more and more the complexity and fascination of housekeeping and motherhood, I became intensely interested in the opportunity of women's magazines—to interpret the present world fully and richly in women's terms; to bring women the best present information on nutrition, child guidance, home care, marriage, and to bring them also stimulation and fun through articles and fiction."

To bring fiction and serious articles to you in addition to homemaking, fashion and frivolity, three editors rotate with outstretched hands among about fifty New York agents and forty book-publishing houses each week. Hugh Kahler, head of this JOURNAL department, and Managing Editor Laura Lou Brookman, who cuts the novels down to magazine size, personally read at least half of the 4200 short

Mrs. Bass and Mrs. Gould "work their way" to Philadelphia from New York every Thursday morning, a one-hour-forty-minute trip.

Hugh Kahler (left), short-story writer and novelist, heads fiction staff, including Mary Lea Page and Lonnie Coleman. They lunch with authors, visit 50 agents, carry whopping bags of manuscripts to Philadelphia for reading.

Quite a contrast from New York's skyscrapers are the Goulds' offices in Philadelphia, just across from historic old Independence Square.

Wilhela Cushman goes to Paris for fashion openings every year and to California or Florida twice a year.

The Journal Staff Gets Around

We visited 37 states in the Union, went to Paris, London and Lebanon in past year; remodeled rooms in 12 actual homes; tested 960 recipes stories and 550 book-length novels submitted by agents every year. This does not include the hundreds of manuscripts submitted by aspiring authors, all of which receive careful readings. Of the 55 short stories published last year, 9 were from authors whose work had never before been published.

Reader mail at the JOURNAL is an industry in itself—thousands of letters arrive each year, some frantic, some humorous, some really bursting with excellent ideas. All of them get a sympathetic, personal answer.

There was the day an urgent appeal came from a woman marooned in the mountains of California 53 miles from a town during the bitter weather of last February. Her entire winter's supply of canned goods had frozen; was it safe to eat? A telegram dispatched that day from the JOURNAL assured her that if the cans were in no way broken the contents were perfectly safe.

Some readers can't wait for the mails and pick up the nearest telephone. In the food kitchen the phone rings all day. A housewife calls frantically that she has been beating divinity fudge until she can't bend her arm and it still won't harden. (The staff advises starting all over and cooking it longer.) Another woman phones that her husband has just proudly arrived home with a 30-pound salmon for the two of them; what should she do with it? A bride-to-be phones that she is planning to serve supper to 200 friends on her wedding day all by herself; how should she go about it? ("Give up the idea," advises the horrified staff.)

Our kitchens differ from your kitchen at home mainly in that we have both electric and gas ranges and refrigerators, with plenty of room left over for a freezer. They are also fully equipped with measuring devices, stop watches, metered service and scales, so that accurate answers can be found to questions which housewives can only guess at. How much does it cost to run a home freezer? How long does it take a particular-type range to heat to 375° F., and how constant is that temperature once it is reached? Does it cost more to bake potatoes on top of the range or in the oven?

In the JOURNAL laundry some 16 or 17 kitchen uniforms, 85 dish towels and dozens of white aprons, as well as soiled "family washes," are laundered each week. When in New York, Mr. Gould sends his shirts to the JOURNAL laundry, knows at firsthand whether they are washed and ironed with just the right amount of starch to suit a man. He says the problem has been solved by JOURNAL tests to his satisfaction, and, he hopes, for millions of JOURNAL husbands too!

Ann Batchelder's inimitable personality mirrors her own extraordinarily zestful and adventurous life. She had been a justice of the peace, country postmistress, poet, actress for a 10-20-30-cent road company (Nellie the Beautiful Cloak Model) before she Usually, Ruth Matthews interviews three to six families from Florida to Oregon for How America Lives articles. Here she visits the Hunts, Quaker family in Pennsylvania.

Effervescent Biffy Page picks those cartoons for Journal; above, buys one from top-notcher Ted Key. After seeing some 300 in one day, she can still laugh at the funny ones.

OTTO HAGEL

Picture journalism is an important part of our magazine. John Morris, who authors series such as Your America, is "shooting" Cherokee Chief Moses Walking Stick.

Executive Editor Mary Bass heads up Journal Workshop, plans pages with department editors once a month. Editor Dawn Norman is pleading for a "double spread" (two pages) for pretty new hair-do's in a summer issue.

was 30, when Alice Blinn came upon her making a spectacular success of running an inn at Northampton, Massachusetts. On her birthday Miss Batchelder receives birthday cards from every state in the Union as well as overseas. Let her mention somewhere that as a child she loved Tolman apples, and a box is on its way from some reader's orchard. Her dislike of carrots is known all over the country, and so is her enthusiasm for water cress!

Before a Batchelder food spread is photographed each month a meal rehearsal is held with Miss Batchelder, Miss Blinn and the rest of the food staff on hand. Everyone eats and criticizes freely. Last-minute-changes are made. Two days later, the entire menu is again prepared, the stage again set, and her actual color photograph taken. Although the food, by the time the picture is taken, is cold, it is generally eaten!

Louella Shouer, Food Editor, commutes from her country place 80 miles a day round trip to supervise the cooking activities on the JOURNAL, then rushes home to prepare dinner for her husband, a ready source of inspiration for her Quick and Easys for Because few readers start from scratch, buying all new furniture, our Decoration Editor, Henrietta Murdock, devotes time, effort and pages to make-over ideas, buys many pieces in secondhand shops or at auction.

Pattern Editor Nora O'Leary drapes material for a dress on assistant, Marion Plummer. Her well-equipped workrooms whir with sewing machines and ideas you will see in Journal pages later.

The incredibly lovely old houses in the picture-article series, Regional Houses, produced headaches aplenty for Architecture Editor Pratt. This one had no electric wiring, almost a must for cameras.

Tension mounts as the meal of the month faces the camera. Planning, testing and tasting are over. This is the final dress rehearsal. Editors Batchelder, Blinn, Shouer, Gray, photographer Stuart give final criticism. O.K.! Shoot! On picture day there's always a waiting line of eager eaters.

Homemaking in Action

Editors, assistants and secretaries, as well as readers, find the food and household departments helpful in solving their own homemaking problem

Two. Every recipe which appears in the JOURNAL is prepared in the food kitchen, and eaten by members of the staff.

Recipes are mostly created from the staff's own ideas, often in their own kitchens. Once Ann Batchelder was sent home with a bordering-on-pneumonia cold. She phoned right back to say that she had finally hit upon the now popular dressing for avocado—pickled pearl onions and cut-up orange in French dressing.

The staff always cocks an interested ear for ideas from men. Mr. Gould on a trip discovered Death Valley Pie—a double-decker pie with chocolate and rum-cream layers. Hugh Kahler learned of a good quick-and-easy fruitcake from canned mincemeat and gingerbread mix.

Mrs. Gould once came back raving about the pot de crème she had for lunch at "21." A member of the food staff was dispatched to the restaurant to order the same dish and to try and figure out the recipe. Then seven or eight different varieties of the dessert were made up and each sampled by Mrs. Gould, until an exact duplicate was found and the recipe filed away for use on a JOURNAL page.

The Interior Decorator's work is frequently done in actual homes, which means that Henrietta Murdock contends with every headache known to homeowners—ill-proportioned rooms, not enough light, hot-air registers which cannot be concealed by carpets, ugly radiators, exposed pipes and the rest.

When a How America Lives family is selected, Miss Murdock visits them for several days to discover how they would like their living or dining or bedroom to look. Sometimes all the redecorating is done on the spot. Sometimes, however, when the angles of the room make it impossible to photograph, she will have a carpenter faithfully reproduce the room in every respect in the JOURNAL "loft" on 61st Street. This set is photographed in color, and later the room is completed in the family's own home, an exact replica of the photograph, by the time an issue of the magazine goes on the newsstands.

Around the corner from Miss Murdock's office, in a pale green room with fragile French antiques and bowls of fresh freesia and white tulips, you are apt to find Fashion Editor Wilhela Cushman in her stockinged feet taking photographs. Her helpers, adjusting klieg lights or holding reflector screens, also are shoeless, to prevent marking the ten-foot-wide roll of white paper which provides a background for the model and extends over half the floor. Mrs. Cushman, a perfectionist in all her employments, which have included being a dress designer for one of New York's biggest Morning conferences with Louella Shouer over the coffee cups are everyday occurrences in the food kitchen. Hugh Kahler drops in with a recipe idea. This morning Mary Bass has come in to discuss plans—perhaps to inquire why copy is late.

On this morning juicers were spotlighted in the household kitchen. During juicing, time and quantity of juice are recorded; later the staff will gather to taste. Other days the kitchen is a proving ground for many kitchen devices, large and small.

Midway in a kitchen-remodeling project, editors Nancy Crawford, Margaret Davidson and Elizabeth Goetsch check plans on location and consult with builders. Topsy-turvy now, it will be beautiful and workable.

Scorched on purpose! These patterns of heat tell Jeanne Scribner how evenly irons heat. Temperature records and home-style ironing complete study of irons—a small part of activity with laundry appliances.

Measuring and regulating devices, shown with a toaster but used with many appliances, enable Household Editor Margaret Davidson to answer such fact questions as How hot? How cold? How long to heat? How costly to use?

We go to Press

Everybody is happy—the Editors, Art Director Fink and the whole staff! "The book is closed"; that means 250 to 300 pages of Journal have gone to press.

Before "closing date," the Goulds review every detail of the magazine in the Philadelphia Art Department wholesale houses, an editor for Harper's Bazaar, and an expert buyer on the Paris scene, works closely with artists, supervises fashion sittings with such famous photographers as John Engstead and George Huene. This is an exacting business. A wrinkle in a skirt, an awkward angle of a foot—any of these flaws may mean a retake. Mrs. Cushman thinks nothing of photographing until two or three in the morning when a deadline is near. Assistant editor Ruth Mary Packard often appears at the studio around six, trailed by messengers with boxes of clothes, borrowed from manufacturers after 5 P.M., to be returned by 9 A.M. the next day. Careful notes must then be taken—while the camera clicks—on colors, fabrics, silhouette, to tell the fashion story. (Continued on Page 214)

Morgan-Jones
TRADE MARK
Morgan-Jones
PROGRAM
r your bedroom this summer
ON STAGE, CIRCLING FROM LEFT.
The "Heiress" . . . supersize candlewick bedspread, about $10.50*
"Nantucket" . . . a new lightweight bedspread, about $8*
"Fairfield" . . . an heirloom bedspread, heavy with punchwork, about $27.50*
"Sampler Rose" . . . highly decorated with skip, loop and punchwork, about $16*
"Imperial Hobnail" . . . America's most cherished bedspread, about $7.50*
*Slightly higher priced in the West
STARRED AT YOUR FAVORITE STORES COAST TO COAST!
SHOW OF THE YEAR IN BEDSPREADS

Dear Beauty Editor -

We are well acquainted with you, you know, through your many letters. These requests for help on diets, hair-do's, make-up and other beauty problems are our reassuring measure of your confidence in us. They also give us future inspiration. Here are your questions which spotlight the beauty topics of the year.

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

PHOTOGRAPH BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

Our Beauty Department testing new ribbon curlers. Left to right, Dotty Robinson, "guinea pig"; Leone Seastrom, editorial assistant: and at desk, Dawn Crowell Norman.

Two out of three letters are on weight control:

With this year's tiny-waisted clothes I need to lose 2 inches around my waist . . .

Here are some waist-cinching exercises to help you:
Lie on back, arms stretched out at shoulders, palms down, legs straight. Twist body from waist down to the right, keeping upper back and shoulders as close to the floor as possible. Repeat, going to left. Each side 10 times.
Kneel, supporting weight on right knee, with left leg stretched sideways. Raise arms over head. Now, turn torso sharply toward stretched leg, bend and touch toes with hands. Raise torso, turn body sharply to right. Reverse position, repeat 5 times both sides.
Stand up, legs apart, arms raised overhead. Turn upper body sharply to the right, bend and touch right foot. Stretch way up again. Turn sharply to left, bend and touch left foot. Repeat on each side 5 times.

When it comes to hair, this year's questions are on length:

Are there any do's and don'ts for today's short hair?

The smaller you are, the shorter your hair can be. Newest cuts are from 1½″ to 2″ in length, brushed back into a V shape. If you are a large woman: Beware of the short cut which may make your head look too small for your general appearance. . . . If your face is round: Add height by having your hair shaped in a long line beginning high on the temple and gradually shaping down toward your neck. Hair brushed away from your face will slenderize. A center part with hair waved high at the temples will add length. . . . If your face is long: The "square" or "round" cuts are prettiest for you. Try a center part with bangs across your forehead . . . a low side part to add width. Brushed up curls are good for you. . . . Proper cutting and shaping can help camouflage a too long or too short neck, a low or high forehead, large ears, other facial irregularities. So be sure to have your first cutting and shaping done by an expert!

Readers' letters show they are aware of a new look in make-up:

Are there any rules to follow to achieve today's popular, fresh-faced look?

The opaque look is out—the transparent look is in. If your skin has a slightly yellow cast, try pinky beige colors. . . . A truly light skin (in color and texture) requires delicate application. . . . If creamy make-ups seem heavy for you, try applying the color with a piece of absorbent cotton moistened with water. . . . A florid skin is softened with a clear beige color. . . . Olive complexions brighten with a golden touch in make-up. . . . Always continue your make-up in an even flow right down over your neck and all exposed areas. . . . Stir and fluff up your powder in the box at least once a week—use fresh powder puffs. . . . Don't "spot" your make-up in naturally oily areas of your face. Instead, blend gently toward those areas from your forehead, cheeks or jaw line. . . . Select your lipstick depending upon what it does for your own coloring. . . . "Groom" your face by blotting off excess make-up, cleaning your eyebrow line, maintaining a powder-free hairline, using your eye make-up tastefully. Always check your make-up in the bright light of day.

Diet is the subject of 75 per cent of our queries:

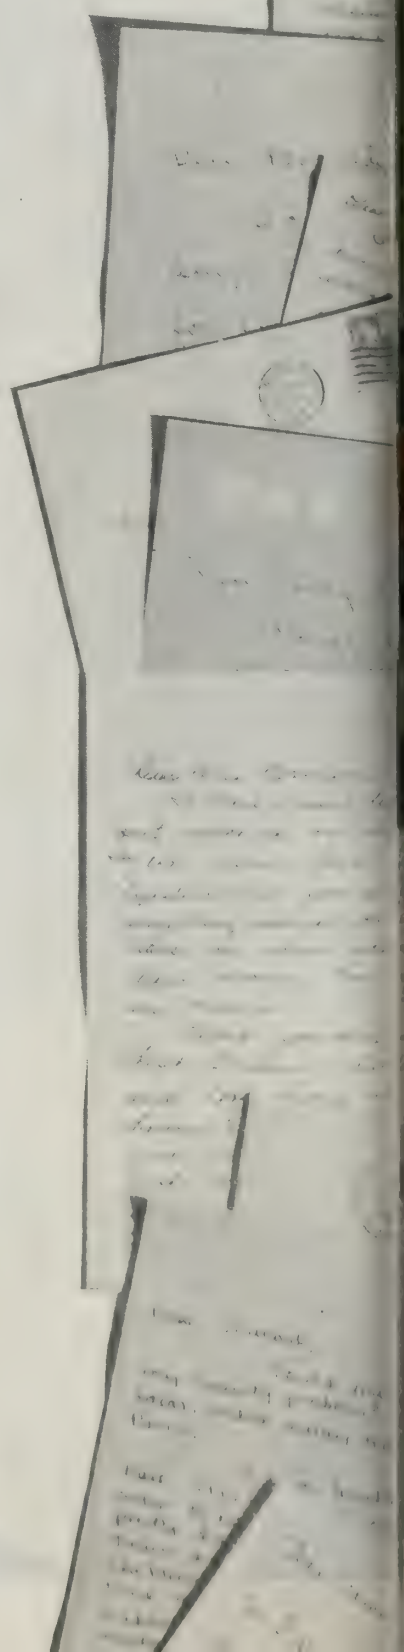
I would like to lose ten pounds. Do you have any diet suggestions?

In most reducing diets, breakfast consists of one serving of citrus fruit or juice, a slice of thinly buttered whole-grain toast or medium serving whole-grain cereal, black coffee. Dinner includes medium serving lean meat or fish, one yellow or green vegetable, salad without dressing, fresh fruit or a simple custard dessert, black coffee, tea or skim milk. Diet luncheons, especially for the working woman who often eats at lunch counters, can be a problem! Here are 5 workday reducing luncheons, each under 300 calories:

Glass of tomato juice (8 oz.)
2 poached eggs on 1 slice toast
Black coffee or tea (no sugar)

Sliced-chicken sandwich on whole-grain toast
Tea or black coffee

Fresh-fruit salad on lettuce
Melba toast
Tea or black coffee



1 cup chicken broth
Cottage cheese and chives (½ cup)
Tomato slices (3)
2 slices Melba toast
Black coffee or tea

1 cup soup
2 plain crackers
Any fresh fruit
Tea or black coffee

The postwar rush of marriages and babies has made wives aware of their hands:

Does a housewife and mother ever really manage to have hands that don't look five years older than the rest of her?

Yes, if she is willing to give them a little attention every day—a manicure one evening a week. Here are some tips: Protect your hands by wearing gloves for work such as gardening, laundering. Cream your hands and put on a pair of white cotton gloves to wear when you are out walking, wheeling baby, shopping, and even sleeping. Distribute your hand lotion and creams around the house as constant reminders, and use them quickly every time you take your hands out of water. Always dry your hands thoroughly to prevent chapping and roughness. Spend two minutes before bedtime giving your hands a deep, stirring massage with cream (Continued on Page 253)

It's all in a day's Work

By Wilhela Cushman
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Cynthia McAdoo, one of the Journal's young fashion editorial assistants, has a "full-time" (sometimes fifteen-hour-a-day) job. In the language of the trade, she goes "into the market" from New York to California, helps set up a "sitting," sees models, "pins them in" the clothes, lunches with a telephone in one hand and a sandwich in the other, often ends the day at a late "collection" or a photographic studio.

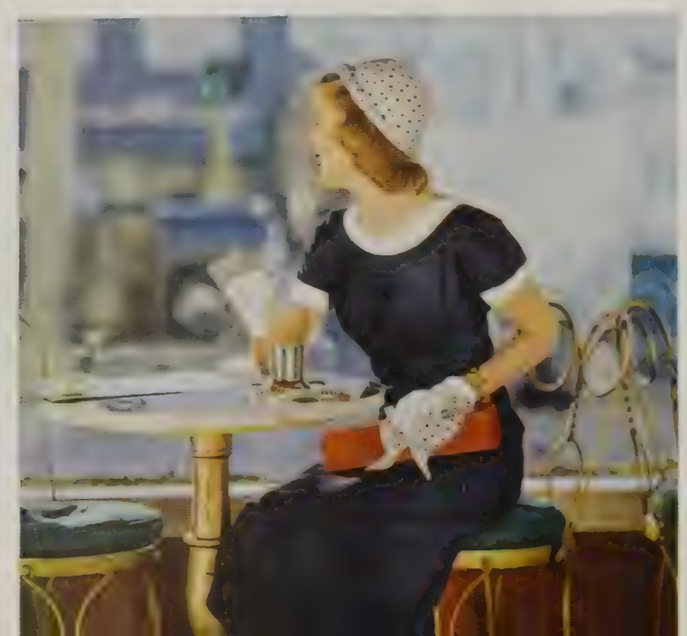
Her own clothes reflect the fashions she sees—but with her own touches. She could live in sweaters, night and day, wears them with "globs" of pearls, an armful of gold bracelets, a scarf pinned or tied a new way every day. She'd be lost without her jersey dress, her big gold safety pin, her collection of skirts—jersey, tie-silk or cotton for day, shantung or taffeta for evening—worn with white or bright-colored shirts or a pet sweater. She chooses a dress for its "line" and what she can "do with it," pulls in her practically invisible waistline with a patent-leather belt or a gay sash. Her gloves are short washable cottons, her shoes often red kid, natural linen or raffia with "walking" heels, her bag the latest "find."

Like the rest of our fashion staff, she travels a lot, always has one good suit and a cross-country coat which goes with everything in her wardrobe. Pursued by the inevitable "dead line," she can pack all these adaptable clothes and doodads in a half hour in one suitcase—to catch a plane, ship or train.

PHOTOGRAPH BY LEOMBRUNO · BODI

athia, in her braid-trimmed cashmere sweater, dresses a del for our fashion editor, Wilhela Cushman, to see.

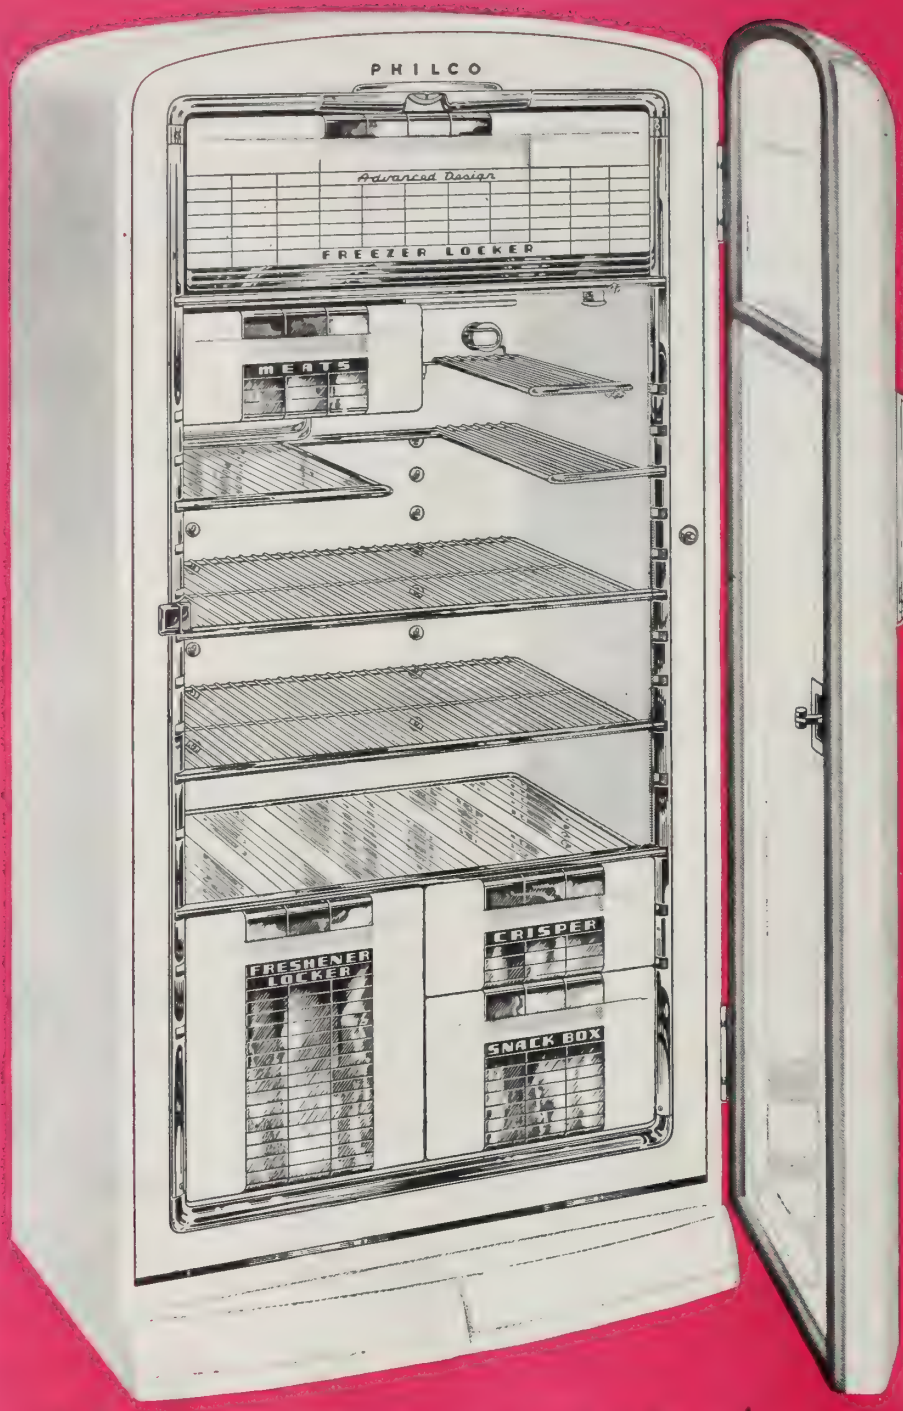
Summer two-piece, $49.95: polka-dot silk skirt, linen shirt, red shoes.

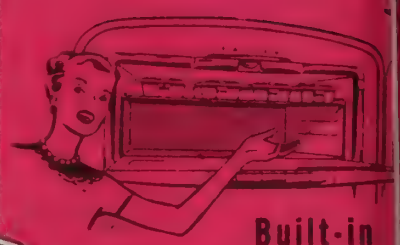


PHOTOGRAPH BY LEOMBRUNO · BODI

Selecting hats at Mr. John's: velvet-collared suit for spring, fall, travel.

Cotton-tweed skirt, $29.95; short cardigan, about $22.95.

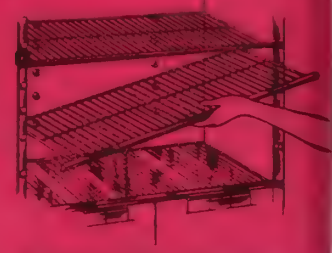




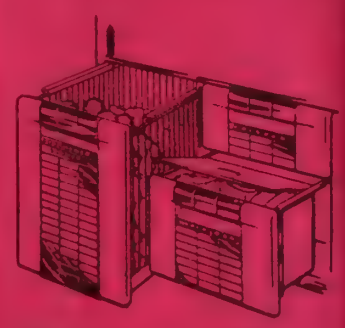
Quick milk shake, hectic day. Navy-blue rayon linen dress, around $17.95; cloche, $7.95; scarf, $1.95.

PHILCO

FOR 1949 BRINGS YOU



New Triumphs OF Advanced Design IN Refrigeration



Built-in Home Freezer with Zero Zone Temperatures

Huge, unobstructed, frozen food freezer space at real Zero Zone temperatures . . . separate, fast-freezing, ice tray shelf.

Adjustable Shelves

Completely flexible shelf adjustability, arrange the shelves to suit your needs. Accommodate any size and shape food.

Freshener Locker and Snack Box

Jumbo Freshener Locker for storing beverages and bulky foods. Snack Box for cheeses, spreads, sandwiches—or butter. Guards against odor transfer.

Every Inch a Refrigerator... right down to the floor!

New triumphs of Philco engineering give you the first true down-to-the-floor refrigerator ever built. Every inch of cabinet space is used for real refrigeration, bringing you a huge increase in capacity with no increase in size . . . plus Advanced Design features new to refrigeration . . . sensational extra value. Before you buy, COMPARE. See the amazing Philco 1095 today.

10 Cubic Foot Capacity in the Cabinet Size of the Usual "8"

Revolutionary Achievement in a Low Priced Refrigerator

PHILCO 794 . . . The greatest ADVANCED feature in refrigeration now yours in a low priced refrigerator, a full width frozen food compartment, at a saving of $70 to $100. Adjustable Shelves; 2 Crispers; Cold Storage Tray and, more fully usable space than any other refrigerator in its size and at its price.

7 Cu. Ft. Capacity in the Floor Space of a "4"

PHILCO
Famous for Quality the World Over

"IT'S a WONDERful Refrigerator!"

Listen to DON MCNEILL and the BREAKFAST CLUB Monday to Friday, 9:45 A.M. in the east, 8:45 A.M. everywhere else. ABC Network

Come Into Our Kitchen

Betty Gray, of the Journal food staff, checking in the supplies for our week's budget meals. At left, an artist's sketch of our return from the shopping trip.

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

CKSTAGE of the JOURNAL food pages is our URNAL food kitchen. You know we cook and hat we cook if you read the JOURNAL. Ours is chen much like yours, except that it's —big enough for four or five people to work ne time. It's not a scientific laboratory but a ome kitchen in every respect. We measure the lients in a recipe by cups and tablespoonfuls— not weigh them in grams. We serve meals— f them—often many more than your three a snack luncheons for busy editors, party lunch- when they entertain writers. Our JOURNAL y is large enough so we never lack for tasters. come to taste but stay to eat. We have a cooky nd have the same trouble you do keeping it We cope with unexpected guests, borrow when we have a big party. We bake birthday for staff members; honor engagements and ings; never miss making a big batch of fruit- to divide at Christmas. We believe in the s of home, and though we have homes of our our JOURNAL kitchen is home to us too.

e cook with our hearts as well as with our s. When we develop a recipe, we make sure every detail is foolproof, and we like to think e compliments you will have when you serve ur families and friends are guinea pigs too. n we have pronounced a recipe or a menu per- we try it out on our families at home. If y Gray's young son, Stevie, laps up a new cereal bination, or our husbands make favorable re- ks about a new dish, we feel more confident ever that it will please your families too.

eaders who write us for help know that it will iven. We know about your daughter's wed- —didn't we plan the menu for the wedding kfast? We think about those of you who have t meals in a hurry, when we get home from the e and do the very same thing. We are more than pathetic when you write that you just can't e your food money go around—that you get so l of cooking the same foods.

ecently we had an SOS from a reader. There four in the family—a boy, nine, a girl, twelve. nty-five dollars has to suffice for a week's food. entire family is home for all meals. This stimu- us to see what we could do on a similar budget.

Following the Government guide to an adequate diet for a family with school children, at moderately low cost, we listed the quantities of foods needed by all four members of the family for good nutrition. Next we planned the meals based on these needed foods with one eye on the price list. Because choice is limited where money is short, we tried to make the meals as interesting as possible. Changes had to be made here and there where we'd splurged too much. It takes considerable figuring, as you well know who do it week after week. Checking again on the nutrition provided, we found that we had actually managed better nutritionally than the basic requirements for an adequate diet.

Next we went shopping in a supermarket, discussing our purchases and choices as we went up and down the aisles. If some foods were cheaper than the ones we'd planned, we changed the menu on the spot. We chose the best we could afford at the time we shopped. When our shopping bags were full—we had six—we loaded everything into a taxi, not having a car as you perhaps do. Back in the Workshop, everything was unbundled and stowed away in a refrigerator and a cupboard, emptied on purpose for this project.

Then came the true test of the goodness of the meals. Each meal through the week was cooked and served and eaten. We made notes of our staff family's comments: wouldn't a little more orange rind improve the pudding—wouldn't the fish taste better with a little less bay leaf? We hoarded any leftovers and usables often thrown away. Even the core of the cabbage and tough ends of kale were added to the soup bag. Changes were made in the recipes and menus. We discovered our family wanted more milk than we'd allowed. We had bought more margarine than needed—we couldn't afford butter in these particular meals. We borrowed and paid back a couple of eggs from a neighboring refrigerator instead of an actual neighbor. When Friday's good Clearance Soup, made from next to nothing, was finished, it was a thrill to discover that we'd saved a few cents from our estimate—extra pennies for next week's kitty.

No, it's never dull in the food kitchen. There's always something cooking, and sooner or later it comes to you through the pages of the JOURNAL.

Here are the menus and key recipes. Menus are planned for a family of four: two adults and two children—a girl twelve years, a boy nine years. Limit, $25 a week. Actual cost—$24.35 [mid-March].

FRIDAY

Dinner

Creamed Eggs and Fish—Spinach
Potato Puffs
Bread and Margarine
Sliced Oranges—Grapefruit Sections
Milk—children Coffee—adults

CREAMED EGGS AND FISH—SPINACH

Hard-cook, shell and slice 2 eggs. Simmer 1 pound haddock, cod or other fish fillets (whatever happens to be cheapest in your market at the time) in 1 cup milk with 1 slice onion and ¼ bay leaf. Drain—save fish liquid. Remove onion and bay leaf and flake the fish.

Make 2 cups medium cream sauce, using the fish liquor for part of the milk. Add eggs and fish and 1 tablespoon prepared mustard. Season to taste with salt and pepper.

Clean and wash 1¼ pounds fresh spinach. Cook just until wilted in just the water that clings to the leaves, adding salt, of course. Drain (save any liquid in jar). Chop and season with salt, pepper and 3 tablespoons margarine. Arrange in bottom of a shallow casserole or ovenproof platter. Cover with creamed eggs and fish. Sprinkle with grated cheese and put in hot oven, 425° F., to brown, about 15 minutes.

POTATO PUFFS

To 1½ cups mashed potatoes add 2 well-beaten eggs, ¾ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon baking powder. Reseason, adding ¼ teaspoon nutmeg and a little grated onion. When nearly ready to serve, drop by spoonfuls in deep hot fat, 390° F., until golden brown. Drain on unglazed paper. Keep hot in the oven with the fish until all are fried.

SATURDAY

Breakfast

Orange Juice
Farina with Apricots
Toast—Margarine—Jam or Jelly
Milk—children Coffee—adults

FARINA WITH APRICOTS

To 1 recipe farina for 4 add ½ cup dried apricots cut in strips. Cook as usual.

Lunch

Canned Cream-of-Chicken and Celery Soup
Boston-Brown-Bread-Pimento-Cheese Sandwiches
Canned Applesauce
Orange Cookies
Milk for all

Use canned condensed soup. Add equal amount of water. For sandwiches, use canned brown bread—soft-spreading pimento cream cheese.

(Continued on Page 206)

Journal Garden

PHOTOGRAPH BY PRATT • DESIGNED BY JAMES C. RO

Decorated with cypress vine, dwarf marigolds and fig trees, this garden is a Journal-first idea from trellis, pools and paving to sunken sand pit.

Project

By RICHARD PRATT

Garden editor and Project manager, Ben Horowitz, in greenhouse.

Two hours out in the country from the Workshop, the JOURNAL operates a unique open-air studio of several acres, complete with workrooms, greenhouses and flower fields, where garden ideas grow along with the plants to make our pictures.

A GREAT photographer who used to take pictures at the Garden Project happened to speak of it one day as a horticultural Hollywood, which would make it appear more glamorous than it actually is, but serves to give some notion of what the place is like. The performance the Project really puts on, however, goes far behind the photographs like that of the garden for parents and children on the opposite page; it rehearses season after season for each picture, developing the ideas and testing the plants, trying out the structures from year to year, and watching how everything works and looks, until it is right for the camera. By that time we have learned a great deal about each garden we do, and can pass along the information, as certain of its soundness as the homemaking department is of the rightness of the recipes behind the JOURNAL food pictures.

The mother-and-daughter garden here is a good example of what I mean. Take the cypress vine, for instance, which climbs up and over the trellis-arbor to make a feathery screen between the grownups' part and the play space. This is a fast-growing annual vine that springs from a row of seeds sown as soon as settled warm weather arrives. Well, the first season, no sooner was it nicely started, two feet high, than its succulent filigree foliage was eaten right off to the roots one night by what we figure were either rabbits or woodchucks; anyhow, it was too late to make another planting that summer. The second season we used a little temporary wire-mesh protection, and the vines got off to a good start, but then wound themselves tightly around the uprights and rafters—simply wouldn't spread to make the even screen we wanted. We tried stretching string between the supports, but again too late: the vines' minds were already made up for that year as to how they'd grow, but we could tell the string idea would work.

So the third season, with the vines fortified for the first few weeks against rodents and provided with a pretty pattern of twine to which they took like magic, we finally got the effect you see in the picture.

(Continued on Page 260)

Landscape architect James C. Rose, garden editor and Project manager set up future tea garden.

ENTERTAINMENT ROOMS

At the Journal Workshop

Visitors enjoy the new-type color schemes used in our entertainment rooms. On the left, Persian violet contrasts the sea-blue backgrounds, with dark floors silhouetting the light furniture. Notice the informal charm of arrangements that curve into friendly circles to make plenty of room for moving guests.

Black violet is the name of the new color used as the basis of our dining-room scheme. The sharp pink chairs give a party look in contrast to the darker backgrounds. The room is used for luncheons and teas and is equipped with silver and china, as in a home.

In these pleasant rooms our editors get together with JOURNAL writers and artists, old friends and visiting celebrities for occasional tea and talk. In step with the times, these rooms are friendly, yet spirited, expressing somewhat the lively temperament of the JOURNAL pages themselves. For gala occasions there are lots of flowers, picturesque cakes and sandwiches from JOURNAL kitchens, and additional touches to lend a party air. Guests like the surprise of finding decorated rooms thirty stories above the street with busy editors laying down their pencils to pour tea and visit sociably.

PHOTOS BY EZRA STOLLER

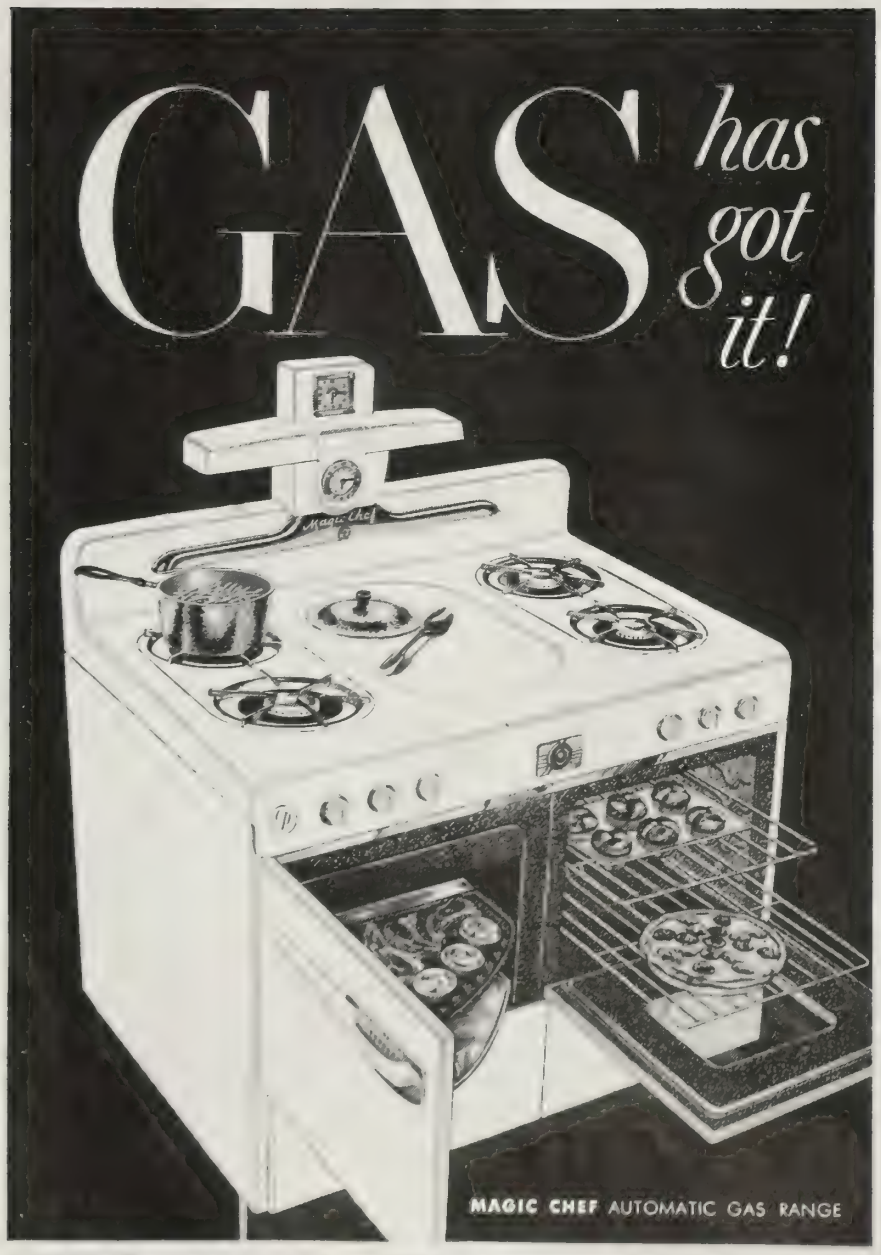
A paneled wall of black lacquer with sprays of delicately carved and painted garden flowers centers interest in this end of our entertainment room. As an art feature it charmingly decorates the unbroken wall and as background pleasantly contrasts the lighter furnishings.

for a rosy future!

Look Forward to the finest, fastest, most economical cooking ever with a new Gas range built to "CP" standards!

New Freedom is yours! Simple clock control turns Gas on and off—cooks complete oven meal automatically!

New Success in baking! Only an air-circulated Gas oven has both automatic heat control and even-heat distribution!



New Automatic speed! Top burners, oven, broiler—everything lights to full heat instantly—without matches!

New Cleanliness! Smokeless broiling! Non-clog, rust-resistant burners! New type oven and broiler vents!

New Coolness! No waste heat—Gas is out the second you turn it off. Entire range is extra-insulated all over!

EVERY DAY more Americans are enjoying the unparalleled ease of cooking on new Gas ranges! Join them by choosing this MAGIC CHEF "CP" Gas range or any of the other performance-tested Gas ranges built to "CP" standards. Look for your favorite "make" at your Gas company or appliance store. And don't miss the new silent Servel Gas refrigerator. It's another must in your "New Freedom Gas Kitchen!"

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

COME INTO OUR KITCHEN

(Continued from Page 201)

ORANGE COOKIES

Sift 2½ cups flour with 1 teaspoon baking powder, ½ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon baking soda. Cream ½ cup shortening with 1 cup sugar. Add 1 well-beaten egg. Beat until fluffy. Add the sifted dry ingredients alternately with ½ cup sour milk or buttermilk and ¼ cup orange juice. Add ¼ teaspoon grated orange rind. Mix well and drop by teaspoonfuls several inches apart onto greased cooky sheets. Bake in moderately hot oven, 375° F., for 10–12 minutes.

Remove from pans—frost while warm with an orange glaze. This is optional if you haven't time—but it adds to the attractiveness and flavor of this cooky. Blend ½ pound confectioners' sugar with 4 tablespoons orange juice. Add ¼ teaspoon grated orange rind.

Makes 5 dozen. Those that aren't eaten for regular meals will be good after-school snacks later in the week.

Dinner

Pork Shoulder Steaks Creole
Mashed Potatoes
Green Beans with Corn
Coleslaw
Bread and Margarine
Canned Apricots—Orange Cookies
Milk—children
Coffee—adults

PORK SHOULDER STEAKS CREOLE

Have 4 pork shoulder steaks cut from the blade at the market. Because of the bone, these will weigh 1½–2 pounds altogether, but will still be less expensive than buying loin chops. Dust chops with flour. Brown in 1 tablespoon hot drippings. Season on both sides, using ¼ teaspoon pepper, 2 teaspoons salt. Add ½ cup chopped onion, ½ cup chopped green pepper, 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce and ¼ cup water. Cover and simmer 1½ hours, adding 2 cups canned tomatoes in last half hour of cooking. Remove meat. Skim off excess fat. Thicken gravy with 1½ tablespoons flour, blended smooth with ½ cup cold water. Add meat and simmer 5 minutes.

CHOCOLATE-CHIP CAKE

Cream ½ cup shortening with 1 cup su[gar] until light and fluffy. Add ¾ teaspoon va[nilla] and ¼ teaspoon almond flavoring. Sift [2] cups cake flour, ½ teaspoon salt and 3 [tea]spoons baking powder. Add alternately [with] creamed mixture with 1 cup milk. Be[at] egg whites until they stand in peaks. Ad[d] cup sugar by spoonfuls, beating well a[fter] each addition. Fold into batter. Last, fol[d in] 1½ squares unsweetened chocolate, sha[ved] Grease bottoms of two 9-inch layer-c[ake] pans. Line bottoms with wax paper [and] grease paper. Pour in batter. Bake layers [in] moderately ho. oven, 375° F., 20–25 m[in]utes. Cool and frost with creamy choco[late] frosting.

CREAMY CHOCOLATE FROSTING

Heat 4 tablespoons cocoa and ½ tablesp[oon] margarine with ½ cup milk. Beat u[ntil] smooth. Add [2] cups sugar to 2 w[ell] beaten egg yo[lks] and stir into cho[co]late mixture. C[ook] about 10 minute[s] until thick, stir[ring] frequently. Rem[ove] from heat, add 1 [tea]blespoon marga[rine] and 1 teaspoon [va]nilla. Allow to [cool] without stirring [un]til lukewarm; t[hen] beat with a sp[oon] until thick eno[ugh] to spread on ca[ke]. Be careful not [to] get it too thick o[r] will be like fud[ge]. Fill, frost top a[nd] sides of two 9-in[ch] layers.

A Quaker Family

HOW can a man know what the good life is and achieve it for himself and his family? Like many another young American, John Hunt had pursued this question through the restless years of the '30's. Pursued it in such jobs as radio announcer, advertising salesman and Methodist preacher. In a brief, not happy, marriage.

But today, he has triumphantly found the answer in a home, a profession and a faith. The home is a 35-acre Pennsylvania farm where he and his second wife, Mary, raise a family of four and most of their own food. The profession is serving as principal and teacher in a small local school. And the faith is that of the Quakers, to whose sect he was admitted in 1942.

Roger Butterfield tells the story of a couple who found purpose in their world and peace with themselves.

The Hunts, of Downingtown, Pa.

How America Lives

In the June Journal

SUNDAY

Breakfast

Sliced Bananas on Ready-to-eat Cereal
Scrambled Eggs
Corn Bread—Table Sirup
Milk—children Coffee—adults

Dinner

Carrot Sticks—Celery Bites
Roast Stuffed Shoulder of Lamb
Browned Potatoes—Gravy—Peas
Bread and Margarine
Jellied Fruit Squares
Chocolate-Chip Cake
Milk—children Coffee—adults

Use pimento cheese left from Saturday's lunch to stuff 1-inch pieces of celery. Have a 5-pound shoulder of lamb boned. Stuff with bread stuffing. Brown bones with roast—take out before putting potatoes in with roast. Cool—wrap and save for soup.

MONDAY

Breakfast

Stewed Prunes
Hot Oatmeal
Toast and Margarine
Milk—children Coffee—adults

Lunch

Cream-of-Tomato Soup
Leftover Fruit Salad with Sliced Oran[ges] and Stuffed Prunes
Bread-and-Margarine Sandwiches
Cookies—Milk for all.

Dinner

Skillet Supper
Hot Biscuits
Celery, Carrot and Cabbage Salad
Baked Rhubarb Tapioca Pudding
Milk—children Tea or Coffee—adu[lts]

HOT CALIFORNIA SANDWICHES

Grate ¾ cup chee[se]. Dice 1 mediu[m] sized tomato. Ch[op] 1 small onion an[d] tablespoons gr[een] pepper. Combine green pepper, cheese, [to]mato and onion. Add 2 teaspoons vinegar, [½] teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon chili powder, d[ash] of pepper. Blend together. Butter 4 sli[ces] toast. Spread with mixture right to the ed[ge]. Place sandwiches on baking sheet and b[roil] under moderate heat until cheese melts.

(Continued on Page 208)

Make cooking more fun for mother!

(GIFTS FOR MOTHER'S DAY, MAY 8)

It's FUN to watch things come out right!

Give Pyrex Ware for Mother's Day . . . Mother will love watching what's going on inside the saucepan! She'll see when the cooking's done just right . . . soups heated to just-before-the-boil . . . muffins a perfect golden-brown all over . . . tea a rich and glorious amber. She'll get more fun out of cooking with Pyrex Ware!

PYREX SAUCEPAN 1½-quart size $2.25

It's FUN to show off the food at the table!

Mother'll bring the food to the table right in the dish she cooked in! Pyrex Ware is so good-looking, it goes with her nicest china. And food looks so wonderful through the glass, it's bound to raise the family appetites. Pyrex Ware really holds the heat, keeps food piping-hot for second helpings.

PYREX CASSEROLE (2-qt.) pie-plate cover 98¢

It's FUN to find the EXTRA uses!

Give Mother a Pyrex Refrigerator Set . . . she'll find the big dish makes a handsome casserole. She'll use her Pyrex Mixing Bowl for salads . . . her Pyrex Percolator to cook asparagus, serve iced coffee, make cocoa. She'll find a dozen uses for every Pyrex dish. Pyrex Ware won't stain, won't hold flavors from one food to the next.

PYREX REFRIGERATOR SET 4 covered dishes $2.95

It's FUN to save dishwashing time!

Pyrex Ware means fewer things to wash. (It goes right to the table, then to the refrigerator to hold the leftovers. One dish serves as three!) Dishwashing time is shorter, too, because sturdy Pyrex Ware is so easy to clean! With its smooth surface, rounded corners, practical design, there's just no place for dirt to hide.

PYREX WELL-AND-TREE PLATTER $1.50

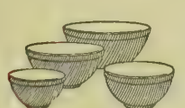
Get Pyrex Flameware for the top of your stove...

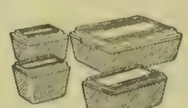
Double Boiler $3.45

6-cup Percolator $2.95

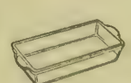


2-qt. Saucepan $2.45

Teapot $1.95



Get Pyrex Ovenware for baking and roasting...



Colored Bowl Set $2.95

"Flavor-Saver" Pie Plate 59¢

Oven and Refrigerator Set $2.95

3-qt. Utility Dish 98¢

DOZENS OF OTHER SIZES AND DISHES..EXTRA STRONG FOR LONG SERVICE!

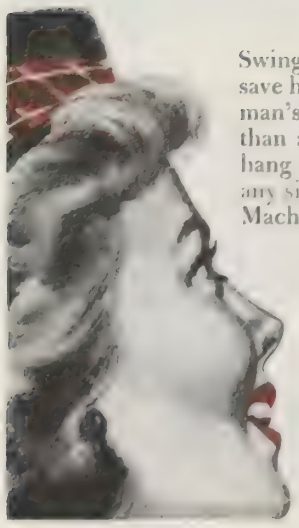
"Corning", "Pyrex" and "Double-Tough" are trade-marks in the U. S. of Corning Glass Works, Corning, N. Y.

3 EXCLUSIVE EXTRAS AT NO EXTRA COST!

NEW...with Built-in Water Filter

Cleans water before it washes and rinses clothes. Exclusive "Cleanflow" Filter removes rust and similar water supply-pipe impurities that spot and stain clothes. Only Easy gives you this protection...for a sparkling clean wash!

NEW...with 3-minute Automatic Spin-rinse



Turn a tap and Easy double-rinses a full load right in the spinning basket. Takes just 3 minutes. Uses just 3 gallons of warm water. Then the famous Easy spinner damp-dries your clothes ...as much as 25% drier than any wringer.

New!

NEW...with Swing Faucets and Two-tub Action

Swing a faucet to fill and empty tub, rinse, or save hot suds for re-use. Thrifty as a Scotchman's dream. A week's wash done in less than an hour. Clothes are lighter, easier to hang up, dry faster. Portable? Wheel it to any sink! See Easy in action! Easy Washing Machine Corporation, Syracuse 1, N. Y.

Every day more women say-"It's EASY for me!"

(Continued from Page 206)

SKILLET SUPPER

Open 1 can pork or veal luncheon meat. Cut into cubes. Sauté in 1 tablespoon fat. Add 1 can whole-kernel corn, 1 teaspoon prepared mustard, ¼ cup diced green pepper, 1 onion, chopped, and 1 can condensed mushroom soup. Mix well. Add 1 cup water and blend smooth. Heat well and serve on hot biscuits.

BAKED RHUBARB TAPIOCA PUDDING

Combine ¼ cup quick-cooking tapioca, ½ cup sugar, ¼ teaspoon salt and 1¾ cups water in saucepan. Bring to boil, stirring constantly. Dice 1 pound rhubarb. Sprinkle with ¼ cup sugar. Dot with 2 tablespoons margarine and sprinkle with ½ teaspoon grated lemon rind. Pour hot tapioca mixture over rhubarb. Bake in hot oven, 400° F., 30 minutes, or until tapioca is transparent and rhubarb cooked. Pudding can be cooling while you bake biscuits.

TUESDAY

Breakfast

Grapefruit Juice
Ready-to-eat Cereal
Toast and Margarine
Milk—children
Coffee—adults

Lunch

Macaroni and Cheese
Cooked Green-Bean Salad
Raw Apples
Milk for all

Dinner

*Lamb Stew with Parsley Dumplings
Green Salad
Bread and Margarine
*Baked Orange Pudding
Milk—children
Coffee—adults

LAMB STEW

Cut leftover roast lamb into 1-inch cubes (there won't be much stuffing left). There should be about 2 cups. If more—fine. Brown in 2 tablespoons shortening. Drain off excess fat. Add 1½ cups water and any leftover lamb gravy, 1 clove garlic, minced, 1 onion, chopped. Cover and simmer 30 minutes. Season with salt and pepper. Add 1 cup cubed, peeled potatoes, 1 cup diced, scraped carrots and additional water, if needed. Cook until vegetables are tender. Reseason. Bring to boil. Drop dumplings on vegetables. Cover and steam 15 minutes. Lift dumplings onto platter. Thicken stew, if desired. Serve stew in center.

PARSLEY DUMPLINGS

Sift 2 cups flour, 1 teaspoon salt and 3 teaspoons baking powder together. Crumble in 1 tablespoon shortening very fine and add 1 cup milk and ¼ cup chopped parsley all at once, mixing with fork and using as few strokes as possible. Bring stew to boil. Drop dumplings on vegetables. Cover tightly and cook over moderate heat 15 minutes. Don't be tempted to remove lid during this time or your dumplings will be soggy and not light and fluffy as they should be.

BAKED ORANGE PUDDING

Slice or section 3 peeled oranges into bottom of baking dish. Sprinkle with 3 tablespoons sugar. Prepare 1 package vanilla pudding according to package directions. Add 1 teaspoon grated orange rind; cool. Pour this mixture over oranges. Make a meringue with 2 egg whites and pinch of salt and 4 tablespoons sugar. Heap onto pudding. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 10 minutes. Cool and serve.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Song for a May Morning

BY BETTE RICHART

Cherish not the dream of love.
  The remotest bird
Flying the clear cold heights
  Could be caught and heard

Speaking of well-known things
  In a familiar way,
Ere love, the alien and winged
  Could be pledged to stay

In even the highest tree;
  For the lure of space
Would call him back too soon
  From this narrow place;

And in a blowing cloud
  Of music like bright rain
The snared one would escape,
  Not to be caught again.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

WEDNESDAY

Breakfast

Orange Juice
Ready-to-eat Cereal
Toast and Margarine—Jam or Jelly
Scrambled Eggs
Milk—children Coffee—adults

Lunch

*Rice-and-Cheese Custard
Raw-Spinach-and-Carrot Salad
Bread and Margarine
*Molasses Cookies
Milk for all

RICE-AND-CHEESE CUSTARD

Cook 1 cup washed rice in boiling salted water until tender. Drain and rinse with boiling water. Add 2 beaten eggs and 1 cup milk, ½ cup finely chopped parsley, 2 medium onions, chopped, 6 tablespoons melted margarine and 1 cup grated cheese. Season with 1½ teaspoons salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Pour into casserole and bake in moderately hot oven, 375° F., about 45 minutes or until set. This can be baked in square pan and cut into squares for serving.

MOLASSES COOKIES

Cream ½ cup shortening and ½ cup sugar. Add ½ cup molasses. Sift 1 cup flour with 2 teaspoons baking soda, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, ¼ teaspoon nutmeg, 1 teaspoon ginger and ½ teaspoon cloves. Add alternately to creamed mixture with ½ cup sour milk. Mix and add 1¾ cups flour. Chill dough.

Drop by spoonfuls several inches apart on greased cooky sheets. Press each spoonful down with fork dipped in flour. Sprinkle with sugar and bake in moderate oven, 350° F. about 10-12 minutes. Makes 5 dozen small or 3 dozen larger cookies.

Dinner

*Scalloped Potatoes and Hamburger
Bread and Margarine
Mixed-Vegetable Salad—Dressing
*Fudge Bread Pudding
Milk—children Coffee—adults

SCALLOPED POTATOES AND HAMBURGER

Sauté ½ pound hamburger and 1 cup sliced onions in 2 tablespoons shortening until meat is browned—don't let onions burn. Peel and slice 6 potatoes very thin. Arrange potatoes and meat and onions in layers, sprinkling each layer with salt and pepper and flour—about 3 tablespoons flour in all. Heat 3 cups milk in pan in which meat was browned. Pour over potatoes. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 1–1½ hours or until potatoes are tender.

FUDGE BREAD PUDDING

Heat 3 cups milk and ½ cup cocoa in double boiler. Beat with rotary beater until well blended. Add ¼ teaspoon salt and ⅔ cup brown sugar, 1 tablespoon margarine and 1½ teaspoons vanilla. Pour over 2 slightly beaten egg yolks (leftover) gradually. Add 6 slices stale bread cut in ½-inch cubes. Pour into greased baking dish. Set in pan of hot water and bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 30–40 minutes or until set.

(Continued on Page 210)

..see no evil

Lady, a better way not to see ugly toilet bowl stains is to chase them away. Get rid of invisible, germy film, too. Use Sani-Flush. Cleans toilet bowls fast without scrubbing. Disinfects, also.

Safe in all toilet systems. Works in hard or soft water. At your grocer's—two sizes. The Hygienic Products Co., Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

GET TWO CANS TODAY

(whatever is cheapest—cod and haddock cheapest at time we shopped); 2 lbs. shoulder blade pork chops (cut into 4 big chops); 1 can pork or veal luncheon meat (12 oz.); 8 oz. hamburger; 1 lb. beef kidney; 5 lbs. shoulder of lamb. Of the meats and fish, cuts are boneless, with exception of pork chops and lamb shoulder. Total quantity of solid meat would about come out even with 7¼ lbs. needed.

Fats and oils

Minimum nutritional need—6¼ lbs. Used—5 lbs 13 oz. Cost— 1.92.... 3 lbs. margarine; 1 lb. 12 oz. vegetable shortening (a portion of this was used for frying potato puffs and can be reused for frying as a dividend another week); 2 oz. bacon; 2 oz. salad oil; 13 oz. salad dressing. (NOTE: Though the above is 7 oz. less than requirement, additional whole milk used would make up for additional fat needed.

Milk, cheese

Minimum nutritional needs—19 qts. Used—26 qts. Cost—$4.95. . . 1 lb. 4 oz. Cheddar cheese; 5 oz. pimento cream cheese; 3 oz. cream cheese; seven 14½-oz. cans evaporated milk; 13 qts. fresh milk. In figuring your own diet, 1 oz. cheese is equivalent to 1 cup milk. 17 ounces by weight of evaporated milk, when diluted with an equal quantity of water, may be counted as equivalent to 1 qt. milk in food value. For additional savings, you could substitute part dry skim milk, but it is not equivalent to whole milk in food value, because it lacks the butterfat.

Flours, cereals and meals

Minimum nutritional need—13 lbs. 4 oz. Used—13 lbs. 14 oz. Cost $2.14. . . . 3 lbs flour; 8 oz. cake flour; 1 can Boston brown bread (1 lb.); 6 oz. rice; 8 oz. macaroni; 8 oz. corn meal; 1 package muffin mix (10 oz.); 8 oz. oatmeal; 1 package assorted ready-to-eat cereal (10 individual packages—1 oz. each); 4 oz. farina; 2 loaves whole-wheat bread (2 lbs.); 3 loaves white bread (3 lbs.) 1 loaf rye bread (1 lb.).

Sugars and sweets

Minimum nutritional need—3½ lbs. Used—6½ lbs. Cost—$.89. . . . 4 lbs. sugar; 12 oz. grape jelly; 8 oz. confectioners' sugar; 4 oz. brown sugar; 8 oz. molasses; 8 oz. table sirup.

Miscellaneous foods. Cost—$1.66

Many of the following would contribute to the nutritional value provided in the other food groups, but they are grouped together here for practical purposes. 1 can each of condensed cream-of-chicken soup, celery soup, mushroom soup and tomato soup; 1 package vanilla pudding; 2 oz. quick-cooking tapioca; 4 oz. cocoa; 2 oz. unsweetened chocolate; 1 package lemon-flavored gelatin; 4 chicken-bouillon cubes; 1 dill pickle; 1 envelope unflavored gelatin; 1 lb. coffee; 4 tea bags. (More tea and less coffee could be used if desired.) Incidental seasonings, vinegar, mustard, and so on. THE END

I was very ill when I was married, altogether a wreck on crutches, and in an old jacket the crutches had worn to rags. I had asked my friends, Mr. Graham Wallis and Mr. Henry Salt, to act as witnesses, and of course in honor of the occasion they were dressed in their best clothes. The registrar never imagined that I could possibly be the bridegroom: he took me for the inevitable beggar who completes all wedding processions. Wallis, who is considerably over six feet high, seemed to him to be the hero of the occasion, and he was proceeding to marry him calmly to my betrothed, when Wallis, thinking the formula rather strong for a mere witness, hesitated at the last moment and left the prize to me.

—GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

...I've used many others but my DEXTER Twin Tub gets clothes cleaner, quicker!"

There's no secret why Dexter Twin washes clothes cleaner—quicker—easier. It's the only washer with two washing tubs. Washes, rinses, wrings all at the same time. Turns out a tubful of super-clean clothes ready for the line, every four minutes, and saves soap, hot water, and electricity. It's TODAY'S BIGGEST WASHER VALUE.

DEXTER TWIN TUB

CUTS WASHING TIME IN TWO

2 INSTEAD OF 1

Free! Before you buy any washer, get DEXTER'S interesting 16 page illustrated booklet on DOUBLE SUDSING.

MAIL COUPON TODAY—

DEXTER CO., Dept. L59, Fairfield, Iowa

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

Scrubbing got you down?

Here's how Bruce Floor Cleaner and the Doozit brighten wood and linoleum without scrubbing!

First you pour a little wax-rich Bruce Floor Cleaner on the wood or linoleum, and use a few easy strokes of the Doozit to loosen the dirt. Next, drop a cloth under the Doozit Pad and wipe the floor surface dry. Then, replace the moist Doozit Pad with a dry one and polish the wax film to the desired lustre.

Just that easy—and in only minutes—your entire floor care job is finished. Your floors are brighter, cleaner, more lustrously lovely, unharmed by the destructive effects of soap and water. And you, you're fresh as the moment you started. Happily free of the fatigue and backaches of old-fashioned floor scrubbing and waxing. No wonder thousands of smart homemakers are switching to modern Bruce floor care. You will too!

Bruce Floor Products are featured at all leading stores. The Bruce Doozit is only $1.89. Extra pads, 19c each. Bruce Floor Cleaner, 68c quart and $2.10 gallon.

BRUCE floor products

Bruce Tuf-Lustre Wax | Bruce Paste Wax | Bruce Self-Polishing Wax

E. L. Bruce Co., Memphis, Tenn. . . . World's Largest Makers of Hardwood Floors

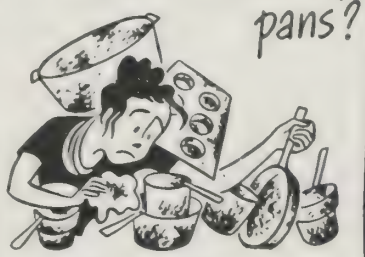
As friendly as the kitchen next door, although planned for practical research in homemaking, these Journal kitchens work full time for millions.

Journal Kitchens

By GLADYS TABER

THE JOURNAL HOUSEHOLD KITCHENS have almost every device and gadget you could dream of, for our busy staff experiments with all types of equipment under conditions as much like those in any reader's new kitchen as possible. With kitchens and problems of our own, we are as eager to know the answers as you are. From ranges to freezing materials, mixers to refrigerators, juicers to waffle irons, nothing is too large or small to be put through its paces. The kitchen has both electric and gas units. Equipment is checked and rechecked for value to homemakers, then replaced as new appliances appear in the proving ground. Although a network of conduits and pipes leading to dials and meters which record data is concealed in the wall, the kitchen itself has a homey feeling. A happy, busy background in which I'm sure you would be glad to share in the work with the household equipment of today and tomorrow.

EVERY DAY IS WASHDAY in the JOURNAL laundry! But the girls have everything that's made to work with. All types of washers, ironers, driers, irons and boards; new soaps, detergents, starches and cleaning materials are used here in order to keep up with all the new things that eventually find their way into your homes. JOURNAL workers, from editors to photographers, come to the laundry to ask how to wash a fancy sweater or blouse, to have a spot removed, a skirt pressed or even a shirt laundered! Behind this everyday washing are concealed devices which record the amounts and the temperature of the water used and the evenness of temperatures of irons and ironers. Green, blue and coral accent this laundry designed to do away with washday backache.



PHOTOS BY STUART

IN THE FOOD KITCHEN we can have our cake and eat it too! Here recipes for the magazine are born, new food ideas, new food products tried out. . . . This is a living cookbook—with two complete kitchen centers for adventures in cooking. One day such elegancies as a strawberry mousse (perhaps for your daughter's wedding) may be concocted in one half of the kitchen, while in the other, quick and easy dishes are being cooked and served. In the eating corner, JOURNAL recipes and menus must pass their real test. There is always an eager group of tasters and eaters willing to give the final proof of the pudding! . . . Instead of a pleasant view of a neighbor's garden, our skyscraper kitchen faces on the sunny south terrace with its distant view of the harbor. Pink, gray, green and white make a gracious scheme for this, the busiest kitchen in town!

Buried under scorchy pans?

Stop sloshing messy, scorchy pans with a limp, greasy dishrag! Let Brillo do your dirty work. Brillo cleans pots and pans shiny-bright in a flash!

Shine 'em quick with BRILLO

A spunky Brillo pad-with-soap whisks off stubborn scorch. Fast! Neat! It's so easy to make your pots and pans really sparkle with a square, metal-fiber Brillo pad. Brillo shines 'em clean and bright as new! Use Brillo every day!

There's jeweler's polish in BRILLO!

There's a good reason why it's so easy to keep pans gleaming with Brillo! It's because Brillo's special-formula soap contains polishing ingredients that jewelers use to shine their precious metals! Get Brillo today!

★ GREEN box — pads and cake soap
★ RED box — soap-filled pads

Shines aluminum fast!

HOW THE JOURNAL LIVES

(Continued from Page 194)

Fashion pages are the last ones to go in the JOURNAL. They are run through the presses just long enough before the magazine is actually in your hands so that the costumes displayed on JOURNAL pages are on sale in the dress shops throughout the U.S.A. But the selling of clothes is not the JOURNAL's motivating interest. The slavish following of fashion—the continual hunt for the "latest thing"—is a trivial and costly pursuit. What the JOURNAL tries to show is that simplicity and taste are always in fashion, that ingenuity and good grooming—the polished shoe, the straight seam, the brushed shoulder—count far more than the size of your pocketbook. Whether it is a $650 gown by Christian Dior, or a moderately priced ready-to-wear gray jersey, or a pattern you can make yourself with 79-cent calico, the JOURNAL puts them all to one test: is it a distinguished dress, not so extreme as to "date" quickly, easy to change with accessories? Does it exemplify the becoming and the beautiful?

No other JOURNAL department can approach the total mileage walked by the fashion staff. You know yourself how weary you can be after one day's shopping. The fashion staff spends days and days going from showroom to showroom, from floor to floor, sifting out with a sure and practiced eye what is new and what is good. As many as 1000 spring costumes may be seen before 25 are selected. Then, when these dresses are at the JOURNAL and the models chosen, the staff is sent flying into the market for handbags, shoes, belts, artificial flowers, scarfs, blouses and jewelry.

Nora O'Leary, a Massachusetts Art School graduate, heads the JOURNAL Pattern Department. Her assistants, at two sewing machines and a pressing board, make up the patterns Miss O'Leary selects from Vogue Patterns or designs herself—first in muslin, then in various fabrics, choosing colors and textures with infinite care. Thus all the snags and hitches in the design are thoroughly ironed out before the pattern is offered to JOURNAL readers.

When Miss O'Leary designed a pattern for a page called Two Hours Plus Two Yards Makes a Dress, she handed two yards of material to several secretaries about the office, conducted them to a sewing machine, and timed their amateur efforts. When she features a page of make-overs they are actual out-of-date clothes languishing in the closets of the JOURNAL staff before her ideas skillfully modernize them. Some of the best-dressed girls about the office sport suits lengthened by contrasting yokes, and dresses nearer the ground by several rows of braid or ball fringe.

DAWN CROWELL NORMAN, Beauty Editor, has the distinction of being one of the youngest and prettiest in the business; she was just 24 when Louise Paine Benjamin became a contributing editor and Dawn took over this entire JOURNAL department. Dawn (her real name, by the way) was hired as a receptionist, soon caught Mrs. Cushman's eye with some sketches she did for sub-debs. One of the greatest pleasures of her job, according to Dawn, who is a housewife herself when she leaves the office, is "beautifying" How America Lives housewives. She has never seen an HAL housewife yet who made the best of her good points, nor one who, after a strict regimen of dieting, exercise and advice on hair and make-up, didn't gain an immeasurable lift of spirit. "They seem like different people—they stand straighter, their eyes shine, they have ever so much more self-confidence."

Dawn's most ambitious JOURNAL page since she took over the department was one on insomnia: "I read until dawn for a week on how to get a good night's sleep." For three weeks she interviewed psychiatrists and psychologists (including one in Chicago by phone), visited the famous Sleep Shop in a New York specialty store, and secured reams of statistics from insurance companies ("They have statistics on everything") and the Mellon Institute ("They told me the only people who sleep like logs are the insane").

An important part of Mrs. Norman's work is keeping abreast of new research in the beauty field. Home permanents were tried out on willing victims (volunteers) around the office when they were first introduced.

Mrs. Norman also designs many JOURNAL covers. "Sometimes it's seeing a new face or hair-do, sometimes it's a hat." She picks up a simple little red-and-white-checked gingham bonnet lying in a nest of tissue paper on her desk. "Now this, with a white piqué jacket and gingham bag—kind of fresh and pert-looking—it might go. You never know."

Her cover ideas are generally the inspiration of the moment. Once, when casting about for an accent on an ermine muff, she noticed a diamond horseshoe pin on Johnny Watts, head of the JOURNAL messenger room, a former famous jockey, whose advancing years have not impaired his speed on his interoffice errands. It turned out that Johnny's diamond horseshoe was a gift from King Edward VII and looked right at home against the ermine.

Also on the 29th floor of the RKO Building is the JOURNAL's Photography Department, with two full-time photographers and Picture Editor John Morris, who looks incredibly young to have been co-ordinator of all press photographers on the Western Front in World War II. But picture journalism is a relatively new profession; until the mid-thirties photographs were chosen with the idea of dressing up a magazine page, with only a slim connection with editorial content. Today the JOURNAL strives for realism and accuracy. Unwed Mother (June, 1947), an article about illegitimacy, stated that one in twelve children is born out of wedlock. In the JOURNAL picture of twelve babies, one was actually illegitimate and obtained through a foundling home. The child was, of course, in no way identified.

Some of the top photographers in the country have worked on the JOURNAL's How America Lives series—Munkacsi, Robert Capa, Fons Iannelli, to mention a few. The recently published Photographic 1949 devotes 20 pages to reproducing the pictures Mr. Iannelli took of a Harlan County, Kentucky, coal miner. To get these outstanding pictures, the photographer spent two weeks with the family before he even snapped a picture, eating with them, talking with them, and slowly, day by day, gaining their confidence. How America Lives pictures are in the main not posed, the photographer taking over the spare bed, and the extra chair at the dinner table, and blending into the background so successfully that the family finally does not even notice the clicking of a camera.

Hard by the Picture Department in the Workshop is Richard Pratt, Architectural Editor, in his strictly functional office, s rounded by color pictures and plans of h dreds of houses and of the gardens that has created and photographed for the ma zine at the Garden Project described on pa 202 and 203. The house pictures hung on walls and spread out on the worktables re sent not only the great old historical ho that have been going into the Regional Se for the past two and a half years, but finest examples of modern homes from over the country, which Mr. Pratt is prep ing now for publication—each house, old new, having been personally selected by h on location, involving months of travel t and photographing, not to mention mon of research in advance and months of writ afterward. As an instance of the high este in which these JOURNAL houses are he apart from their appearance in the magazi it may be interesting to learn that in the fo of pages, photographic prints and color sli they have been requested, according to M Pratt, by practically every major art m seum and library in the United States, a by scores of colleges and schools for th courses in art and architecture.

LIKE all persons who are successful at th jobs, JOURNAL editors enjoy what they doing. Most of them are young—two thi of the Workshop personnel are thirty or der—and they care for a total of 13 yo children. The majority come from large fa ilies, keep house and do their own cooki Whatever their impressive specialized lege degrees (31 different art schools and leges are represented), their most popu hobbies are knitting, sports and sewing, that order. Music and gardening come next just about the same as with the reade who believe in the magazine they edit.

Mary Bass, who correlates all the myri of activities going on in the Workshop, is fu another housewife away from her desk. Aft a hectic week end caring for her home, hu band and two-year-old son, she is apt to mark with real feeling, "With all the inte ruptions, how do housewives ever get an thing done? You just can't run a home li an office; it's the emotional demands of family which must always come first a make it impossible to run a house on a rigid schedule."

When Cyrus Curtis first started the JOU NAL back in 1883, he wrote, "We propose make it a household necessity—so good, brave, so complete that a young couple wou no more think of going into housekeepi without it than without a cookstove."

When Mrs. Gould was offered the edit ship of the JOURNAL along with her husban in 1935, she accepted on condition that s could spend part of her week at home cari for her family, since she decided early in h marriage that the worst-reared children a the product of nurses and governesses. Hous wives, in the Goulds' opinion, have one the best and most important jobs in t world, and need not only the skills of hom making but an awareness of all the problem outside the four walls of a home which drastically affect their families. Thus t Goulds launched, through the pages of t JOURNAL, the first courageously outspoke attack on syphilis, gained the first country wide support of women for the hot scho lunch, and have consistently brought to the readers the best available information, phy ical and emotional, on health, child guidanc education and political topics of the day.

Everything which goes on in the Work shop, every department page in the JOURNA reflects Mrs. Gould's own personal philos phy of what a housewife can and should b

She says: "I believe it is a woman's job t be as truly womanly as possible. I mean t nourish her family, and to rest them, to guid them, and to encourage them. To be as pretty as possible, as helpful as possible, as loving a possible, so that if the whole rest of the world blacks out, each family has one center warmth and comfort and cheer and toleran good sense."

THE EN

★ ★ ★ ☆ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Spring Song

By Lucile Stubbs Graham

Oh, life is love and love is sweet,
And it is good to be so young;
And in my heart I feel the beat
Of all the songs the stars have sung.

The old may say that life is sad,
But happiness is all I find:
The sun pours gold before my feet,
My curls are tangled in the wind.

By night's white magic I shall see
The world in ghostly mantle hung;
But one I love is flesh and blood—
Oh, it is good to be so young!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Everyone's Singing The Praises Of Hotpoint's "Pushbutton-Cooking"

With Wonderful "Talking Colors"

New Sensation Of The Range World Makes Cooking Easier, Better!

SEE the greatest range advancement in 20 years —the exciting new Hotpoint for '49 with Pushbutton Controls and "Talking Colors!" Everyone is praising this new wonder-range with automatic temperature controls! Everyone is cheering Hotpoint's 36 new "miracle" features that set new standards of speed, convenience and accuracy!

● Now you just push a button. Instantly a light glows and tells you by its color which unit is on and at what cooking speed.

● You'll be thrilled by such advantages as the world's fastest broiler that cooks steaks for 12 persons in 10 minutes—and the famous Sealed-Heat Oven which bakes to perfection. And you'll also enjoy such superior features as Raisable 4th Surface Unit—60-Minute Time Measure—Smokeless Broiler Rack and dozens of other advancements which Hotpoint, the world's leader, has engineered into this most beautiful and complete of all ranges!

● Ask your Hotpoint dealer to demonstrate "Pushbutton-Cooking" and "Talking Colors" in either single- or double-oven ranges. Also available are other outstanding Hotpoint Ranges for '49—packed with modern features—priced for every budget! Hotpoint Inc. (A General Electric Affiliate), 5600 West Taylor St., Chicago, Illinois.

Call Western Union—Operator 25—for the name of your nearest Hotpoint dealer.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

1. Pushbutton Controls
2. Sealed-Heat Oven
3. Calrod Units
4. Hi-Speed Broiler

nly Hotpoint Gives You All These—

Pushbutton Controls and "Talking ors". All you do is push a button! Colored nts show you exactly what unit is on and what speed.

Sealed-Heat Oven. The heating unit is led out of the way under oven floor—king oven bigger, easier to clean, and far re accurate for baking and roasting.

3. Calrod Units. World famous for instant starting, Hotpoint's Calrod® Units have a pan-hugging construction that puts heat into the food—not into the kitchen!

4. Giant Hi-Speed Broiler. Hotpoint's broiler, the fastest ever developed for home-cooking, broils steaks for 12 persons in 10 minutes, seals in all the flavorful goodness.

Everybody's Pointing To

Hotpoint

Automatic Electric Ranges

RELIEVE PAIN INSTANTLY
COMBAT INFECTION from minor BURNS
WITH SOOTHING CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

Use this modern, stainless antiseptic for relief of all minor Cuts, Burns, Scratches, Skin Abrasions, Pimples

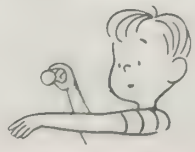
Avoid nasty infections from little skin injuries. Quick! Apply soothing Campho-Phenique. It stops pain—instantly. Kills many germs on contact. Aids healing by combating infection. Use Campho-Phenique also to relieve cold sores, fever blisters, itchy insect bites, pimples. Many doctors, dentists and nurses prefer this famous liquid antiseptic. So do children. It does not smart or sting like ordinary antiseptics . . . and it's stainless! Recommended over 50 years.

Apply generously with cotton

CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

(pronounced Cam-fo-fi-neek)

THE ANTISEPTIC THAT RELIEVES PAIN INSTANTLY



The handiest, finest thing in cotton . . .

RED CROSS* COTTON BALLS!

• In the Nursery!

• For First Aid!

• For Cosmetics!

Important: Red Cross* Cotton Balls are made of Johnson & Johnson Red Cross* Cotton . . . the softest, whitest, most absorbent surgical cotton obtainable. It's the sterile, long-fibered cotton mothers trust . . . the cotton preferred by 7 out of 10 users of absorbent cotton!

STERILE! ABSORBENT! UNIFORM IN SIZE!

65 individual applications for 29¢!

On sale at drug and cosmetic counters everywhere!

Johnson & Johnson

. . . the most trusted name in surgical dressings

*No connection whatever with American National Red Cross

SHUT THE DOOR AFTER YOU

(Continued from Page 43)

"Always," she said, and it was true. There might be an article from Norway on some new discovery about glaciers, or something from Mexico about mines.

"More than I can say of mine," Helen said. She was a public stenographer, with a little office of her own next to Fiona's. She sat on Fiona's desk and confided, "Mine's no career, it's just a job, and I'd swap it for a man any day. Of course, it's got to be the right man, and that's where the delay seems to be."

Fiona looked at her. "You're not worried that he won't come along, are you? Where's that old Benedict assurance?"

"I've misplaced it today," Helen said. "But maybe tonight's date will bring it back—I hope!"

She drifted off at last, and the afternoon dwindled down to twilight, and Fiona walked home through the Public Gardens, and down Charles Street, the shopping center and the thoroughfare of Beacon Hill. At this hour, small rosy-faced children were still being wheeled or wheedled home from their afternoon outing, toward supper, and bath, and bed with a Teddy bear. Older children roller-skated or tricycled along, making loud sounds, like fire-engine sirens or truck horns, as suited individual fancy.

Why should hearing Skid is going to marry make me so depressed? Fiona asked herself. We'd broken up anyway. We wouldn't have seen each other again.

But she was depressed, and she knew it, and would not give in to it without a struggle. There were things she could do, learned in loneliness—recipes for a long evening, when tree branches brushed against the bedroom window, and one listened for footsteps.

Her first stop was at the Personal Bookshop, at the corner of Mt. Vernon Street. There were several librarians, but one of the two on duty now, and until eight-thirty, was Anne Farquar, whom Fiona knew moderately well. They often dined together, as they had a date to do tonight, somewhere in the neighborhood, because Anne had to be back in an hour. Their friendship was casual, but they knew a great deal more about each other than was ever discussed, or admitted, just from the passage of years, and mutual observation through the shop's plate-glass window.

"Nice suit," Anne said.

"It may be prejudice," Fiona answered, because one of their admitted bonds was Scotch ancestry, "but I always think Scotch plaids are the best."

Anne Farquar was Scotch-Irish, and had come down from Canada years before to live with an aunt in Somerville, which is one of the flat-spread areas of Greater Boston, abounding in two-family wooden houses with small porches and back yards. Anne was fair-haired and very thin, and Fiona noticed tonight with a pang that she did not have her fluctuating bright color any more; somewhere in the last years she had lost her air of country health and vigor. She looked tired to the visible bone. Poor Anne! she thought.

The phone rang at the back of the store, and several other people came in, which kept the second librarian, older Mrs. Matson, busy.

While Anne answered the phone, Fiona went to the shelves and chose two murders to get her through the evening. She would light the fire, and settle down with her murder for the evening. When it was time to go to bed, she would get ready, and tuck herself into bed with her second murder, and the bedside light at a comfortable angle, and pillows behind her. She could read all night, if she chose, and not disturb anyone. She lived alone, and there were compensations. Anne Farquar wanted to share the apartment, but it was cheaper for her to go on living with her aunt, and she earned so little as a librarian at the Personal, nickels counted. She could see more of her man if she did share the apartment, but somehow Fiona was just

REALSILK MEANS QUALITY

FOR MEN Socks
Neckwear
Shirts
Underwear
Pajamas
Sportswear
Accessories

FOR WOMEN
Hosiery
Lingerie
Dresses
Suits
Rainwear
Sportswear
Accessories

Your Realsilk representative brings this famous line to your home or office.

Profitable full-time or part-time sales opportunities for men and women.

Contact local Branch Sales Office or write . . .

REAL SILK HOSIERY MILLS, INC.

Dept. J-1, Indianapolis 6, Indiana

SUPER-B COMFORT IN

round-the-clock styles

THE FASHION-BILT ARCH

See your nearest dealer or write for literature

SIZES 4 to 11
WIDTHS AAA to E

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

FASHION-BILT SHOE CO., PONTIAC, ILL.

KNITTING YARNS

for over 40 years
WRITE FOR FREE SAMPLE CARD
Spun in own mill

WRITE DEPT. J-1 CLIVEDEN YARNS 711 ARCH ST. PHILA. 6, PA.

lad that Anne couldn't afford it, although eant more expense for herself.
What else have I to spend it on but my living angements? she thought. And who else have spend it on but myself? Such a cold shudwent down her back at that, she decided, ust find someone! I'll send someone a birth-present tomorrow!
Her ears were so sharpened by habit and lerstanding she could fill out the whole ry from Anne's brief, quiet telephone con-sation, layered through requests for books l "Fifteen cents, please, on that," from
s. Matson. Anne's man, who was unhapmarried, and childless, but who never med to get divorced, wanted her to go to dinner with him, late, after work. He denly had a free evening, and he had ed Anne at once, of course.
'All right," Anne said helplessly. "All
t. Of course. I'll wait here until you ne." She came back, looking upset.
iona, you don't mind if I don't have din-with you tonight, do you?" she asked.
hat was Alan."
'Tomorrow's just as good," Fiona said, again senseless grief welled up in her,
l envy, because Anne had a date, however satisfactory, and because she, Fiona, was ne. "I'll take my murders and go along," said. "Have a good time."
Anne smiled briefly. "Thanks."
She wouldn't, Fiona knew. She and Alan l got to the stage in a disintegrating love air that Fiona knew well, when there were arrels, and silences, and reunions in de-iring hope. She's a member of the good-by ers' union, all right, ona thought, walking ng the sidewalk patched
h light from drugstore ndows and fish-store
ndows, from cafeterias l antique shops. She's d good-by at least half a en times. Of course, if ight he should tell her t, he's really left his e —— Why, then Anne rquar would be a dif-
ent person, one with a ure given back to her. She would smile, l make little jokes, and throw her head k in the old way, free and easy in her e, instead of tied by it.
But would that make him a decent guy? ona asked herself. No! Would Anne care? wonder!
She thought again, as she had thought bee, What makes a woman stick to someone she spises? What makes her mess up her life, and ow good years after bad, after she knows she's de a mistake? Anne ought to break it off, d she knows it—it's part of her misery—but e doesn't, and time keeps going by. I suppose, re than anything else, it's the fear of being ne.
And how justified that fear was! How ter-le it was to be alone, turned back on one-f after having once been part of a human mbination!

HE familiar route of lonely women. Din-r at the Colonial Corner. The meal was mplete with sugared small rolls and paper ilies, but short on substance and seasongs; it was just as well to eat it, as Fiona did night, with a book propped up against the gar bowl. She ate with reasonable slowness, t for all her delays and a second cup of cofe (five cents extra), it was still only sevenirty when she got up to leave.
Dark on Charles Street now. Couples, arm arm, walking toward the Common, on their ay uptown to the movies. Couples, walking gs toward the Esplanade. Clusters of stunts, laughing together.
Fiona thought, It's going to be such an end-ss evening; I'd better do something drastic out it when I get home.
She let herself into her apartment, scoop-g a letter or two out of the mailbox down-airs first, then taking in the empty wasteaper basket and garbage pail which silently waited her return.
It was a nice apartment, with wavy Bea-on Hill floors. People who lived with their others-in-law, and slept on spare sofas, and had furnished rooms (no company after eleven, share the bath, linen provided, no cooking in room) would have wept with pleasure to have it for their own. Fiona liked it too. It had a small, square living room with fireplace, a tiny kitchen, a small, dark bedroom, and a Beacon Hill bathroom, full of inexplicable pipes, raging hot, always making inexplicable noises.

Fiona hung up her clothes neatly, and changed into corduroy slacks and a rose-red jersey that looked nice against the slate-blue walls and white woodwork of the living room—even if there was no one to see.

"A decent respect for one's appearance is as much a part of culture as music and painting," Fiona's grandmother had told her once. But Fiona had had to fall in love before she learned to bother about her looks with any particularity.

ON one living-room wall hung a very small and indistinct Diego Rivera original, which Skid had brought home from Mexico. He had gone on a new job. He was going to send for Fiona when he was established, and she would get work there at some university or museum, and they would live in a white plaster house, with flowers flung all over its balconies. But in less than three months he was back in Boston, sitting on Fiona's doorstep one evening, pale, with a three days' beard, and not a dollar in his pocket, looking so sick and tired Fiona had nearly wept to see him.

"Fiona ——" he began, and "Hush, darling," she answered. She cooked him a steak dinner, and it had all been to do over again, the reassuring, the self-condemnation for being critical and afraid, the search for hope, the promises. . . .

No more, Fiona said abruptly. It had to be over, don't you see? A wedding one way or the other doesn't make much difference.

She read her mail—the most interesting letter was a hasty note from her former roommate, Bernie, now busily married, inviting her out for Thanksgiving week end. Then Fiona made up her mind how she would spend her evening.

She went to the small desk in the corner and took out the bundle of letters with "Ernest Eliot Skidmore" in each upper left-hand corner, but with so many addresses under the name—Providence, Charleston, Taxco, Mexico City, Chicago, Detroit. She put the letters down beside the fireplace, and put a match to the fire, which she had left ready to light. Her hands were as steady as her purpose. The fire burned brightly; she sat down in the red wing chair, and threw the letters in, one by one, so they would burn brightly, and not smolder on top of a log.

Tomorrow there'll be a Mrs. E. E. Skidmore, and it won't be I, Fiona thought. I don't mind, but it's a funny feeling just the same. And I feel it. What's the good of saying I don't?

It was a hackneyed scene she was playing, she knew; but her feelings were fresh and sharp, and she knew herself for what she was, in sudden clarity. Fiona Duncan, twenty-seven, alone—but not quite free. And that was because, a long time and a love affair ago, she had been Fiona Duncan, twenty-three.

Fiona had always been a girl of hesitant manner, slow to mature. Big for her age, and good at her books; somehow it had worked out in school, and in the social life of the small Ohio town where she grew up, that she was the awkward one in a group of older girls. She was too advanced mentally for girls her own age, and not caught up emotionally with older girls. She hung in the balance, until her very gestures were unsure, until she dropped things, and stumbled, and blushed, and hesitated in her speech.

"Awkwardest child I ever saw!" her aunt cried. The aunt's daughter, Fiona's cousin, was the ideal of girlhood in that community—small, dainty, feminine. "She'd better be brilliant, because otherwise I don't know what's going to become of her!"

The people I have known who have most exquisitely tasted the joy and rapture of living are those who have known most of its discipline of pain.

—HAVELOCK ELLIS: My Confessional.
Copyright, 1934, by Havelock Ellis. Reprinted by permission of Random House, Inc.

Free! Just mail a postcard today for your free copy of "Money-saving Tips on Marketing"—a 24-page guide to buying vegetables, poultry, fish. It tells you exactly how to judge quality—what to look for and what to avoid. Address: N. A. I. I., Dept. BM, 1706 L Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ICE INDUSTRIES

On Her Day

Illustrated is the new 6-quart PRESTO COOKER "MEAT-MASTER" . . . lighter in weight . . . larger in size . . . lower in price . . . made of extra heavy pressed aluminum.

HOUSEWARES DEALERS FEATURE PRESTO COOKERS IN 10 MODELS:
3-quart "VEGE-MASTER"
4-quart "COOK-MASTER"
6-quart "MEAT-MASTER"
*The "FRY-MASTER" and
*12, *16 and *21-quart COOKER-CANNERS

PRESTO COOKERS are priced from $10.95

CHOICE OF CAST OR PRESSED MODELS.
*CAST MODELS ONLY.

Give Her a Presto Cooker

The most practical gift imaginable for homemakers, on any occasion, is a PRESTO COOKER. Give one, several or a complete matched set of these best-of-all-kitchen-helpers to Mother on her day. Give them to the Bride so that she, too, can serve more vitamin-rich, more economical meals, three times a day, every day, in a fraction of ordinary cooking time. PRESTO Cooking, too, saves money on food and fuel bills. ONLY PRESTO COOKERS have the HOMEC Seal and the "Pressure-Tru" Indicator Weight . . . shows exactly how much pressure there is in the cooker at all times . . . cannot fall off . . . automatically releases excess pressure. No guessing . . . no listening!

More Presto Cookers have been sold than all other makes of pressure cookers combined.

NATIONAL PRESSURE COOKER CO., Eau Claire, Wis.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN — REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

UL

Presto COOKER

PRESTO COOKERS WORK WONDERS WITH ALL FOODS.

Stewed chicken is ready to serve in 35 minutes; a 4-pound pot roast in 35 minutes; peas, asparagus, etc., in 1 to 2 minutes; beef-tomato soup in 1 minute, etc. Combination dishes and desserts, too, are rare treats when PRESTO Cooked.

GIVEN! 128-page Recipe Book containing hundreds of pressure cooking and canning recipes, time tables, and easy-to-follow illustrated instructions included with each PRESTO COOKER. COPYRIGHT 1951 N.P.C. CO.

PRESTO MINUTE TIMER

Times intervals from 1 to 60 minutes. Pleasant clear bell sounds when "time's up". Ideal for all cooking or baking and for many other uses.

Price $3.95

PRESTO COOKER COLANDER COVER

. . . makes your PRESTO Cooker a perfect corn popper, too. Locks securely on cooker for easy draining and serving of food. See it now!

Price $1.45

Made by World's Largest Manufacturer of Pressure Cookers and Canners

PRESTO COOKERS, COLANDER COVERS and TIMERS are available at Department Stores, Hardware Stores . . . wherever quality housewares are on sale.

"Ugly ducklings sometimes turn out swans," her grandmother replied placidly, of the orphan Fiona, whom she raised in her turreted, stained-glassed, wooden castle.

But Fiona wept and said, "Sometimes they turn out ugly big ducks too!"

She had no brothers or sisters; only dainty blond cousins, whose competition did not stimulate, but almost destroyed her. Her school A's did not comfort her.

"Never mind, when you get to the university things will be different!" someone assured her.

But she wasn't seventeen, and was ready for the university. She looked more an overgrown fifteen, with her dark hair in a Dutch cut, and a skirt humped over her childish, plump tummy, and her hands always dirty, from explorations and work in the chem lab.

"I don't want to go to the university!" Fiona cried, with bitter tears in her eyes. "I know just what it's going to be like—like high school, only worse, and more of it!"

THAT was true. The university was heaven for those girls who would be invited to proms and football games, who would go riding in roadsters, and come home, first with a fraternity pin, then with an engagement ring, and life plainly marked out before them. Commencement. June wedding. Honeymoon. Secure domestic life.

"I want to go away, East, to a big women's college, where nobody'll notice me!" poor Fiona cried.

Her grandmother looked at her thoughtfully. "Perhaps that's what you ought to do."

When Fiona was accepted at Smith, her grandmother kissed her good-by and said, "I'll miss you, but I want you to be happy and turn out well. I hope you'll find out inside of a week that there are other standards than the ones this town, and especially your Aunt Elsie, holds to. It will be a relief to your feelings."

"I love you, granny, and I'll come home often to see you," Fiona cried in gratitude. But granny died when she was in her sophomore year.

College was the first comfortable corner Fiona had ever found for herself. Smith was a big place, in beautiful country, and it was full of all kinds of girls: other bright ones, particularly, so that, for once, Fiona had people to understand her, to laugh and talk with, and even to feel superior with.

There were the other kind, to be sure. Girls who had dates every week end, who got passionate love letters, who had men beside them when they walked around Paradise Pond; girls in dark, parked cars; girls who wept and laughed, and had a whole range of emotions that were, as yet, all blank to Fiona. Fiona had never had a date in her life, unless she counted those few relative-arranged ones, that meant only misery and shyness.

Four years in college, and Fiona grew up, thinned out, hardened into her own rather distinguished shape, of body and mind. She had a good figure, and she did her hair more becomingly, but still her face launched no ships—not even canoes on Paradise—and sometimes she wondered if half of life would always be closed to her. But it didn't worry her nearly so much, because she was successful and happy. She had college honors, and good friends, and she went to Europe, and took trips in summer, and no longer quite despised herself.

"What are you going to do now?" her friend, Bernice Green, asked her.

"I'm not quite sure," Fiona said. But she was. She couldn't bear to leave college so soon, when she was just learning her way around the world of people.

"I've got a job lined up, in Boston," Bernie said. "Don't you want to come and share the apartment with me? We'd have a wonderful time—you know we get along, and two's more fun than one." There was a light in Bernie's bright blue eyes, however.

Fiona grinned at her. "You should know," she said. "Tom's in Boston, isn't he? You were offered a job in New York, too, weren't you? And yet you've decided it's Boston?"

Bernie agreed, unperturbed. "But I still need a roommate, to share expenses on the apartment."

Photo by Underwood & Underwood

Smiling at you from friendly shelves and pages

One of the many things that makes home the best place in the world is the array of old and trusted friends, always there to greet you . . . in the kitchen cabinet, the medicine chest and on all the shelves of the household.

Every family has its coterie of favorite brands, familiar packages and products that have made life comfortable and enjoyable for many years. No two family assortments exactly match—and that is as it should be, since tastes differ. Your brand friends mirror your tastes and unique requirements.

The circle is by no means so exclusive that new brands are not always welcome. Every so often another name joins the trusted group. You greet new candidates for your loyalty with open minds and a ready welcome if they "make good."

This magazine, too, is brighter for the messages of many of your old brand friends and quite a number of new ones asking for your friendship.

Brand Names Foundation
INCORPORATED
119 West 57th Street, New York 19, N. Y.
A non-profit educational foundation

Not this year, I guess," Fiona said, and he first time she felt a little reluctant to eft behind on the campus when her ds were going out to jobs and marriages independence.
nat year was not so good as the underuate years had been, and Fiona was disented and restless. She had been at her s too long, and she was tired of being ng so many women. She had thought of g on, getting a Ph.D., and teaching after-l. ist before commencement Bernie phoned and said her roommate was going to New
, and half the apartment was again free
iona, if she wanted it.
I do!" Fiona cried. "Oh, Bernie, I'm so l of what I am and what I'm doing! This wonderful chance you're giving me."
Hurry!" Bernie cried. "We'll have a won-ul time—you'll see!"
here was Fiona Duncan, then, at twenty-e, in Boston. Grown up, educated, full of gy and vitality, and yet still encased hyness and ignorance. She was full of nalities, as yet untouched; but they ed within her, and made her restless and tisfied with only half of life. She walked ver Boston, exploring it, day and night, n she first got there: full of the sense of enture, and unafraid, looking, listening, ing.
Vaiting for someone to love. She had lly kissed a boy in an adolescent game, she was twenty-three. She had a big,
-breasted body, and long legs, and a long throat. She wore colors too dark, and she 't use make-up. But Bernie made her buy d hat, and when she had it on Fiona was tled.
Why, I could be quite handsome! she thought.
*pretty—that's not my school, but everyone
n't have to be that. I could be . . . attractive.*
ernie said, "Tom's coming to dinner toıt," and Fiona suppressed a yawn. Tom a grand guy, but he was so much Bernie's when he came Fiona was relegated to bechildishly in the way. She was just learn-how to retire tactfully to bath and bed, n what she wanted to do was to stay up talk and be part of the gathering. "He's ging a friend of his, named Skid—he has ng, formal name, ending in Skidmore," nie said. "He's quite nice. I've met him.
l he wants terribly to meet you. We've ed about you, of course, and he'd have n over to meet you before now, except that he's been in and out of town on various jobs."

How well she would come to know his in-and-out-of-town habits! But first, how well she would come to know love!

Skid was small and quick-moving, dark, too, with a small mustache, and a great many crooked white teeth, so that his smile seemed unusually big and bright.

"I've wanted to meet you since I first heard about you," he said, and he meant it, and made Fiona feel that he meant it. She had been desired, even before the meeting, and warmth and pleasure stirred in her and brightened her eyes, and instead of starting off with her usual awkwardness, she talked quite naturally, as if she were alone with Bernie.

Fiona and Bernie cooked dinner while the boys made a fire and conversation.

There was no flaw in the evening, and when the door closed on departure at midnight, Fiona leaned against it and smiled radiantly at Bernie, who was emptying ash trays almost in her sleep.

"He is nice," she said temperately, but there was a dazzle over the words, and over her looks. Bernie noticed that even the way Fiona moved was different, as if the warmth in her blood slowed and steadied her, so that she was more graceful.

"You like him, don't you?" Bernie asked. "I thought you would, and Tom thought so too."

So she and Tom had discussed it? Fiona vaguely realized that she was a problem for the engaged couple: necessary, because without her Bernie could not afford to keep on the apartment, and still get ready for a June wedding. She would have to go home and stay, far from Tom.

"I like him terribly," she said, and drifted into the bedroom.

How easy it was! He loved, and she loved, and those around them wanted them to love, and helped them be together! No opposition. Just the warm happiness of being wanted, of being looked to and looked after: just the wonderful feeling of not being alone, but of having human attachments.

I love him! Fiona cried, from the first. She was a generous lover, and she loved entirely, with a sureness that had been missing from her in everything else. She had so much to give, and now she had someone to give it to; she learned in enormous strides how and where and what, and she didn't care why.

"Of course, half the fun is refinishing the old pieces yourself."

Be sure it's a Toastmaster Toaster

FOR YEARS OF SATISFACTION!

You'll enjoy perfect toast every time—for a long, long time—with the famous "Toastmaster" Toaster. We often hear from folks whose "Toastmaster"* Toasters are still going strong after twenty years . . . and more! Yes, you'll be endlessly pleased with flawless performance—and with jewel-like beauty, too. For here, in glittering chromium, is the toaster that mirrors many a happy mealtime. So enjoy years of satisfaction with the favorite—America's most-wanted toaster. Own the finest and expect many a compliment from your friends. Be certain to . . .

Look for the TOASTMASTER name on your toaster . . . others will!

PERFECT TOAST ALWAYS
The famous Superflex toast timer automatically pops up perfect toast every time.

EASY TO KEEP CLEAN
Touch the button and the crumb tray opens instantly for quick, easy cleaning.

SAFE, COOL HANDLES
Lift the toaster easily and safely by the large, cool, finger-fitting handles.

TOASTMASTER Automatic Pop-Up Toaster

*"Toastmaster" is a registered trademark of McGraw Electric Company, makers of "Toastmaster" Toasters, "Toastmaster" Electric Water Heaters, and other "Toastmaster" Products.
Copyright 1949, Toastmaster Products Division, McGraw Electric Company, Elgin, Ill.

preview of
The Carefree Life with furniture covered in Boltaflex
Trademark
ALL-PLASTIC UPHOLSTERING MATERIAL

Furniture Manufactured by: INTERNATIONAL FURNITURE CO., Chicago, Ill.

Send 10¢ now to Dept. LHJ-5 for Samples and your illustrated booklet "At Home With Boltaflex".

BOLTA PRODUCTS SALES, INC.
LAWRENCE, MASSACHUSETTS

She felt as though all discoveries were hers alone—desire and awareness, longing and surprise, marvel and pleasure. She lived all her loves together, adolescent and adult, as though she and Skid were alone in the world.

Would she have loved anyone else who had come her way? Was it just the fortunes of love that it had happened to be Skid, with his special chemistry that could fuse a shy girl into an eager woman? She couldn't tell now. It had been Skid.

Skid was good with a shy girl who met strangers reluctantly. "Why, I feel every stranger's a challenge," he said, smiling. "Come on, let's go to the party. What difference does it make that we'll know hardly anyone there? We'll get to know them."

Skid took pains to put Fiona at ease. He did everything that she had never known about; the simplest courtesies that high-school girls take as their right were new to Fiona, the late-blossomer.

"Skid's so thoughtful!" Fiona said.

He brought her flowers, he called her on evenings when he didn't come to see her, and she sprang from the tub and stood dripping to talk to him for a quarter of an hour. He came suddenly to her office and asked her to lunch, "because I happened to be in the neighborhood," changing it, when they were alone, to, "because I happened to need to see you, right now, Fiona, darling!"

"Always need me!" Fiona cried.

Almost before she realized how utterly in love she was, and long before she began to consider what kind of man she loved. Fiona was aware of a new world: the complex world of related men and women, with emotions woven back and forth, with traditions and ceremonies and customs.

Suddenly, because she had a man of her own, Fiona belonged to this world, and in its intricate atmosphere she bloomed as she had never done before. The change was visible; her looks almost startled people sometimes. Yesterday she had been drab and muffled. Today she was clear in outline, bright and lovely. It was audible. Her voice deepened and softened, as if all it had needed were kind and loving words to say aloud. She walked differently, moved differently, felt differently.

At first, if only for the details and furnishings of this world—the dates, the being part of a group, the being met instead of going alone, the telephone call for her and not always for someone else—Fiona found new richness in living.

BERNIE called her at noon to say, "Tom's got theater tickets. Don't you and Skid want to come with us? We can have dinner at the apartment first—something quick."

"I'll call Skid and find out," Fiona said importantly. "He may have made some other date for us."

They went to the theater, if Skid could afford it; if they stayed at home, they had the apartment to themselves in mock domesticity that is an essential part of courtship, a kind of trying on to see if permanence fits.

"You're turning into a wonderful cook," Skid said appreciatively.

"You have to cook for men, to learn how," Fiona told him.

If they went to a movie, they walked home holding hands, through the Common or the Gardens, and when they got to the apartment they found Bernie and Tom there. They joined them, and talked, and when Tom kissed Bernie good night, Fiona and Skid kissed in the other room, or out in the hall.

"I hate to leave you, even for a few hours!"

Fiona was happy. She was not only in love but grateful for being in love: grateful for having her powers set free. The ugly duckling becomes a beautiful swan. The beast comes a handsome prince, freed of his enchantment. The lonely heart finds love.

Perhaps no one but someone so skillful maneuvering people could have done so for a girl like Fiona, inexperienced and awkward. Skid was careful of her, because he soon utterly to depend on her: with the instinct of the weak, he had found a person lean on, one who would welcome every made on her strength and resources.

"IF you're going to buy a new dress for party, I'll come with you," he said, and th had a delightful afternoon while Fiona tr on dress after dress, as she would never ha dared do alone, until they found just right one—velveteen, full and soft-colore low-necked.

"Now, you see!" Skid said in triumph when she was dressed for the party, a Bernie looked almost startled at what t dress did for her roommate's looks. "M often have better sense about what a woma should wear—women just don't realize."

"You're wonderful!" Fiona said, turnin so that all her brilliance was for him. "I never looked like this before!"

"But you will, from now on," he sa gently, and took her in his arms.

Wonderful to go to a party with a ma Wonderful to have him look at you, and s that you met pe ple to talk to, i stead of cowering the first corner yo came to. Wonderf to have someone go home with.

Skid loved h too. Otherwis what came lat could not have bee borne at all. Ther was no deceptio there. He loved her but in his own way selfishly, takingly complainingly an absorbingly.

Perhaps his wors fault was immatur ity. He said proudly that he was always discontented— "that's why I'm not satisfied with a job like the one I've got right now"—but he was unwilling to make sacrifices or compromises, wanting to keep himself comfortable. He made a fine first impression, with his pleasant manners, and his deep voice, and his attentiveness; but Fiona learned that he annoyed a great many people, and had few friends. He was curiously conceited—that was what made him have trouble with his jobs. He was not always accepted at his own estimate, and if someone crossed him he left the job instantly and haughtily.

"Why, he said to me this idea I had wasn't practical, and I took a whole hour, showing him just where and how he was wrong! I convinced him, too, but, of course, being mean and small and petty—I'm out of a job. It doesn't matter. It wasn't the organization for me. I'm more a small-organization man. These big outfits don't appreciate ——"

The first time, yes, Skid. Sympathy, and consolation, and reassurance. What did the job matter? There were others. Plenty of others.

But the second time, and the tenth time, it was harder. Each time Skid was misunderstood, it meant marriage postponed, and excuses to be made, to herself and to others. More practically, it often meant Fiona's salary had to help Skid, in inconspicuous little loans made so as not to hurt a man's very proper pride—but made, just the same, over and over again. Too minor to mention in a loving relationship, too minor to be repaid. Just forgotten.

Fiona buying the theater tickets and giving them to Skid before they met Tom and Bernie. Fiona slipping a five-dollar bill into Skid's pocket without his seeing it. And yet he put his hand to that pocket with such sureness later, knowing must have been part

(Continued on Page 222)

A SPECIAL GIFT
For a Very Special Person

Here is an easy way to remember mother on her day: Give the JOURNAL! It will be welcome, practical—and bring renewed pleasure every month.

All you need do is send a remittance of $3—or only $5 for your own renewal and a gift. An attractive card, in your name, will be mailed to announce your gift.

Send your remittance to Dorothy Baker, Box 846, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

*ZENITH TELEVISION

Plus FM-AM Radio and "Twin Cobra" Combination

SO SENSATIONALLY DIFFERENT IT DEFIES DESCRIPTION. Only Zenith† Television has the GIANT CIRCLE SCREEN . . . the largest, brightest, clearest direct-view picture area in any set of similar size . . . and BULLS EYE AUTOMATIC TUNING—one knob, one twist, there's your station, your giant picture, your sound. These Zenith developments are found in no other television set. You must see it—operate it—yourself—to appreciate the startling difference!

*Zenith "Twin Cobra" Tone Arms. Now two famous Cobra† Tone Arms—the sensational new way to play records! One Cobra Tone Arm for the new 45-minute Long-Playing Records. Another Cobra with famous Silent-Speed Changer, for regular records.

*Zenith FM-AM Radio. A superb full-powered radio—combining Genuine Zenith-Armstrong FM for static-free, "living broadcast" tone, and famous Zenith AM, for powerful, long-distance reception.

The Zenith GOTHAM. Zenith Television, Twin Cobra Record Changer and FM-AM Radio are combined in this console of breath-taking beauty in imported mahogany veneers. Available with Zenith "Big B" television screen. See it at your Zenith dealer's.

†®

ZENITH
TELEVISION and long distance RADIO

©1949

ZENITH RADIO CORPORATION, CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS

Beauty is my business—

SAYS LEONA FREDERICKS, ALLURING COVER GIRL:

AND SWEETHEART BEAUTY CARE MAKES MY SKIN LOOK SPRINGTIME FRESH AND YOUNG! IT FEELS SOFTER AND SMOOTHER, TOO!

• "Yes, it's true that my face is my fortune! So I can't afford to take chances. I'd been getting along with casual skin care. Then I decided to use only SweetHeart Soap for daily complexion care. And in just one week my skin felt far softer and smoother. It looked radiantly young, and fresh as spring flowers."

Take a tip from pretty Leona! Change to SweetHeart Beauty Care. Each night and morning, massage your face with SweetHeart's creamy lather. Rinse with warm—then cold water. In seven short days see and feel the difference!

For the gentle Floating Lift of SweetHeart's soft, billowing lather is a remarkable beauty action. Countless bubbles bathe the outer pore openings. Lift off—float away—dirt and rough skin flakes. In one week your skin looks softer . . . smoother . . . younger. It's thrilling to see!

Beauty is my business, too!

• Posing in a sun suit and a SweetHeart complexion all over, Karen is already a model at 7 months. Her mother, a smart New York housewife, has always bathed her with pure, mild, fragrant SweetHeart Soap.

For baby's bath, her mother finds SweetHeart's tube and shower size are just right. But SweetHeart Soap in the new, large bath size.

SWEETHEART

The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

(Continued from Page 220)

of the gesture. Fiona, proud to have a man who needed her.

More and more often, meals cooked at home, so Skid wouldn't have to spend his money. After a few months, Bernie was a little annoyed, but how could she complain, in justice?

"We arranged it, and we encouraged it," she said to Tom, complaining about never seeing her alone any more. "We're responsible. But I never knew Skid very well. I worry now. Is anything going to come of it?"

Tom said, shrugging, "Skid will stick, like chewing gum. If Fiona can take it, he's hers for life, I imagine."

There was always a new job in sight, at first. The one that would mean security, advancement, a future. Somehow, that job always ended like the others, sometimes with startling speed.

"But, Skid, darling! I don't mean to criticize—but how could it happen so quickly?"

"What do you mean, Fiona? Surely you don't feel ——"

"Skid, you know I love you and believe in you. It just puzzles me—you were so hopeful."

"Too hopeful"—dourly, and with a bleak sigh. The self-deceived. The sensitive. "Easy for you, Fiona. You're practical-minded, and you have a specialized education, a queer profession. I'm more a free-lance type, an idea man. Sometime I'll find just the right place; maybe this Hayes outfit I'm seeing Monday—they're developing, branching out."

"Yes, Skid. Good luck, darling. Call me Monday evening, and let me know how it goes."

"We'll celebrate."

"Oh, just come here to dinner—we'll celebrate later."

So much to be thankful for. Understanding what girls talked about. A man to think about, plan for, please. Wonderful to be loved, but more wonderful to be allowed to love, at last, at last.

Skid took a room on Beacon Street, not far from the apartment, a fifteen-minute walk, and a view of the Charles River. Their favorite walk was over the Pepper Pot Bridge, and along the river to the next bridge and back down the Esplanade. From the bridge, the best view of their Boston.

"If we were strangers, and this were Europe, we'd say, 'How charming!' whenever we looked at the view," Fiona said, sighing. The piled rooftops, green and bright with newer copper edging and slates, the rosy brick buildings, clustered close and irregularly against the greenish evening sky; the gold State House dome, the spires and spikes, and the reflecting river.

"We'll go to Europe someday," Skid promised. "We'll go everywhere, Fiona, and have a wonderful life. I wasn't meant to be tied down, or tangled in routine—you know that."

"I know," Fiona said gently. "Europe will be wonderful, together. Anywhere will be."

AFTER a while, the longing to know it was real and secure; the fear, whenever Skid left another job: the fear of being left, along with the old job. But Skid never wavered in his affection and attention for Fiona: the more he tired of other things, the more he clung to Fiona.

Bernie went home in May, to get ready for her wedding. It was a tearful parting.

Fiona said, "I'll miss you, Bernie. Life isn't ever going to be the same. It will be better, probably, when we're married, and have families—but we'll never have this queer, in-between-time freedom in all our lives again."

Bernie looked at her. "Are you happy, Fiona?"

"Yes—and no," Fiona said. "I begin to worry. You know

There was the case of the tramp who went into the "George and Dragon" and asked for a glass of water. The harridan behind the bar said: "We don't give water to tramps." The tramp went away and half an hour later timidly poked his head in again at the door. "What do you want now?" asked the harridan. "I want to see George," said the tramp.

—C. E. M. JOAD:
More Opinions
(John Westhouse, Ltd.)

"I know," Bernie said, and looked dow at her hands. "Sometimes I feel pretty r sponsible about you and Skid," she sa "You were so lonely—you needed someo so badly. And there was Skid. It all work out, didn't it?"

Fiona said passionately, "It did, and will! I'll never have any regrets, Bernie, you needn't! Skid's the most wonder thing that ever happened to me!"

"I hope he'll deserve you," Bernie sa "You're an awfully good person, Fiona."

"Skid is, too," Fiona said, and for the fi time there was a little consciousness in h loyalty: the words sprang to her lips unbi den, but she thought about them when th were there.

WITH Bernie gone, the situation was not easy. Fiona had a small-town backgroun and sometimes it haunted her when she l herself into the apartment and found Sk already there.

"I had to do some telephoning," he e plained. "It's hard to talk properly in booth in a drugstore, so I came over here little early."

"Of course, darling."

He wrote impressive letters of applicati on Fiona's typewriter at the apartment, to and pressed his clothes, to save tailor bills. they could only marry, the apartment w there, ready and waiting.

"Perhaps we ought to marry now," Sk said one day, and Fiona's heart jumped.

"Should we?" s asked. It was thrilli to think of having ma riage between them: know that she would a wife. The easy succe of the girls of her hor town would be he after hardship, and th more appreciated. Ar yet, there was a terrib reluctance about ma rying in despair; to d it because it was con venient. "I'll wait, Fiona said. "Let's d it the right way—whe you have a job, and are settled, and we ca have all the pleasures of buying furnitur and finding a house, and planning a family.

There were problems that came with a lon love affair, and Fiona found herself doin just what had annoyed her when friends di them. She sacrificed friendship for love, ever time, breaking dates for Skid's sake, givin false excuses. She didn't answer letters, be cause she seemed to have no time of her own Sometimes a friend called Fiona unexpectedl and it was awkward to put her off because Ski was working at the apartment that evenin

But always, in spite of everything, the were the magic hours of love and being to gether, when Skid came back from Chicag or Mexico. If Fiona's heart sank when sh first saw him waiting for her, because sh knew it meant another failure, still there wa the joy of reunion.

"I love you," Fiona said. "It doesn't ma ter. Next time ——"

Still, a change in their relationship. A growing sense of discomfort when there wer other people, and she seemed to be seein him through their eyes, hearing with the ears. So that, after a while, what she wante most was to be quite alone with Skid.

She didn't know how she gave herself away when she confided to Bernie one week end (Skid out chopping wood with Tom, an talking about next week's trip to Charleston to look into the best prospect in a long while "Somehow, we get along better when we're not with other people. Skid shows off a little and people misunderstand. They don't giv him credit for his fine qualities, as I do, an of course it hurts him."

Bernie was silent. How could she tell Fiona she thought Skid had behaved abominably ever since he had arrived, and that she didn't like the way he treated her best friend any way?

It was about this time Fiona and Anne Farquar, of the bookshop, became friendly

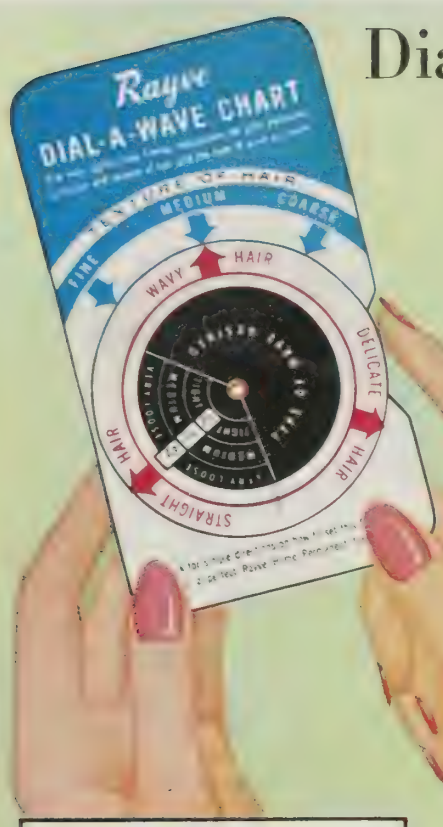
(Continued on Page 225)

All through babyhood, his tender skin needs your wisest care.

He Trusts You to Protect his Thinner Skin

ou need to clip his baby nails at least once a eek. Soft and tiny as they are—they might easily cratch and hurt his tender skin. Even the sturdiest aby's skin is thinner than a grownup's. Skin udies show that it would be injured more quickly. e puts his faith in you to always keep his thinner kin from harm.

You change him "a dozen times" a day—his comfort depends on keeping that tender skin dry. Another comfort you can bring him is a soft, fine bathroom tissue—one with all 3 "tender skin" qualities. Gentle softness that doesn't chafe. Instant absorbency for quick cleansing. Exactly the right strength to prevent tearing or shredding.



More mothers every day are finding this ideal combination of "tender skin" qualities in ScotTissue. You can trust ScotTissue's softness in caring for baby's tender skin. Up to 6 months, try padding his diapers with 20 or more sheets of fluffed-up ScotTissue. Just flush away the soiled tissue. Less laundering for you—more comfort for baby.

Trade Marks "ScotTissue," "Soft as old linen" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

SCOTTISSUE IS SOFT AS OLD LINEN

Dial your "Rayve Number"... and wave your hair at home without guesswork

YOUR "RAYVE NUMBER" IS YOUR GUIDE TO THE ONE RIGHT WAVE FOR YOUR KIND OF HAIR

You're sure of a perfect home permanent when you find your Rayve Number on the easy-to-use Dial-a-Wave that's in every Rayve kit. You just set the dial for the texture and condition of your hair—and up comes your Rayve Number. It's your personal guide to the correct timing procedure for your type of hair and the amount of wave you prefer.

Rayve ... the new personalized HOME PERMANENT with exclusive Dial-a-Wave is faster, yet gentler ... far easier, too!

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

COMPLETE RAYVE KIT has everything you need for a perfect permanent, including 60 "easy-wind" plastic curlers, step-by-step directions, and the "Dial-a-Wave". $2

REFILL KIT with "Dial-a-Wave"—complete except for curlers and hands. $1

At all leading drug and cosmetic counters

FROM THE FAMOUS PEPSODENT LABORATORIES

THERE'S NOTHING HIT OR MISS about a Rayve creme cold wave. It's personalized . . . for your hair. You can be confident of the most perfect permanent you ever had . . . for the unique Dial-a-Wave is an easy-to-use guide to the professionally correct timing procedure that's best for every type of hair.

RAYVE WAVING TIMES ARE UP TO TWICE AS FAST as ordinary home permanents. Yet Rayve's modern, improved formula makes the waving action noticeably gentler. And it's so easy. You don't even wear a turban . . . and the picture-booklet directions make it all as simple as putting your hair up in curlers.

LONG-LASTING—YET SOFTER, MORE NATURAL—No frizz, no fuzzy ends with Rayve. From the very first day, your hair feels satin-soft. And it looks so natural . . . behaves so beautifully . . . that once you've tried a Rayve Home Permanent you'll never be satisfied with any other kind of wave.

(Continued from Page 222)

Sometimes Anne and her married Alan met Skid and Fiona to go to a movie. Alan was a charmer, but Fiona didn't like him and hated having to compare her own situation to Anne's.

She said to Skid, "Isn't it strange that a girl as nice as Anne should get so tied up by someone so obviously a heel? I'm not talking about his being married. I mean his character, and the way he treats Anne."

"She doesn't have to go on seeing him," Skid said, reasonably enough.

"I know," Fiona said. "That's the puzzle."

The puzzle of the woman who realized her situation was hopeless, and still went on with it, without self-deception. What did she get out of it?

The usual things, Fiona thought. The wanted things. Someone to love. Someone to be important to. Beautiful girls never need be afraid, but ordinary girls, or shy girls, or scared girls—we're the ones who always get in deeper than we realize, and when we do, it's too late.

Now letters began to gather more thickly on Fiona's desk, long, loving, explaining letters, from wherever Skid was, letters that told how much he missed her, and how he longed to come home to her. "I can't live without you, Fiona," he wrote.

Yet once she looked at the words quite coldly and thought, If you loved me, you could be without me just a little while, long enough to make this job last, Skid, couldn't you? I'm tired of this. I want us able to marry.

That time, on Skid's return, Fiona began to face the situation. Maybe Skid's never going to do better. There's some flaw in him that keeps him changing jobs. If you love him, hadn't you better marry him now, rather than later? If nothing's going to change, and you're going to go on working ——

It was a dismal future, looked at that way, but she could better face it than face the loss of love. And yet, should she value herself at so low a figure that she could think there was no other future, and no other alternative?

When Skid told her that he had made a date with Ed Martin for the next day, Sunday, Fiona protested. "I don't like Ed, and you know it."

"I've already made the arrangements," Skid said coldly. "Surely you could do what I want to do, just this once?"

Tears rose to Fiona's eyes. What she really regretted was losing a Sunday of their own, when they could be together from morning until night. From what they were hiding, or from whom, for what reason, Fiona hardly knew. Other people interfere with the special sympathy there is between Skid and myself when we're alone, she thought.

THEY got off at the end of the streetcar line and walked along the sanded pavement until it disappeared in slate-colored sand. It was cold, and a morose, autumnal wind seemed already to have blown away the surface adventure of this unseasonable picnic. Ed, Skid had explained, was still in his summer cottage at Revere Beach, with the family.

"Almost there now," Skid said. This was his plan, and he was bound to defend it, so already his voice was loud and challenging. "It's the house with the orange shutters."

They went by closed and shuttered houses and shacks that might have been gay in summer. In this bare November, they showed in brutal disenchantment the poverty of the lives of many decent people, who worked hard all year to get two weeks at the shore.

"I've been on the lookout for you!" a cheerful voice cried, and an orange door opened to reveal a pleasant-looking woman, perhaps in her thirties, but so tired she seemed older. "Hello, Fiona, I'm so glad to meet you at last."

FIONA bit back the words, I didn't know Ed was married. Whenever she and Skid saw Ed in town, she never much liked his jovial ways or his girl friends. She was amazed to see he had such a nice wife and two such darling children, perhaps nine or ten years old. The girl had braids and wide eyes, the boy was thin-faced and solemn.

"Well, well!" said Ed. "Here are the Bohemians from Beacon Hill! Louise, I've told you about Skid and Fiona—here they are!"

It was a long day, and a dreadful one. Louise and Fiona went walking with the children, while Ed and Skid consulted over some small job they were doing together. They went to the only store within miles and bought picnic hot dogs and rolls and pickles for Sunday dinner. It was obvious that Louise was miserably short of money, and Fiona insisted on adding luxuries the children longed for—chocolate bars and cookies and orange soda.

They liked each other so much. Fiona and Louise talked intimately by the time they got to doing the dishes—rose-flowered, summer-cottage china.

"You mean you're going to stay out here all winter?" Fiona asked.

"It's miserable," Louise admitted. "But Ed only has one room in town—a good place for him, and he wants to keep it. You know he had a girl, I suppose? Well —— And we haven't been able to afford a bigger place in town, and this is cheap, out of season, and healthy enough, in summer, for the children. They go to school on the streetcar. The children are what worry me. I'd divorce Ed, only he'd never support us then, and I'm helpless. I wasn't trained to work at anything; I have no money to take a course in stenography—and who'd look after the children while I worked out all day, anyway? I have no decent clothes."

She spoke, not complainingly, but with an utter, desolate realism that appalled Fiona. "Can't you ——" she began, but every suggestion she could make fell short of the dreadful necessity. This attractive, but not glamorous, middle-aged worried woman had to live, somehow, and keep her children with her. You could see why she didn't want to trust them to their father and his girl friends. She was stuck with Ed, and he knew it. He treated her with mocking, jovial brutality.

"How did you ever happen to marry Ed?" Fiona asked abruptly. Because today it was brought home to her that marriage did not solve problems of character.

Louise smiled at her. "I was in love," she said. "He was the football hero, believe it or not, and I was the campus belle. I never thought about the future. I never thought what Ed was like. It's my misfortune that

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Answer to a Foolish Question

By Eleanor Alletta Chaffee

Why am I sitting so, here in the garden,
When all my work is piled up and to do?
Because I heard thrushes astir in the hedges;
A palmful of sun is splashed on my shoe.

I'm sitting idle, because I'm reminded
That maybe this moment will not be again:
This sky that is clear might be suddenly clouded,
And all of this beauty be faded by rain.

Why am I sitting here, aimless and witless,
Thinking of nothing, of nothing at all?
Because so much louder than whisper of duty
Sound the shy cricket and gay robin's call.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

It's never been seen before . . .
the radiance of satin dramatized into Brush Sets of fabulous new beauty

Satin-Glo
BY Hughes

Breathlessly beautiful on your dressing table! And wait till you see the new excitement a Satin-Glo brush brings to your hair! "Deep-action" nylon bristles wake up your scalp . . . polish every lock till it shines like satin!

Exclusively Hughes . . . Satin-Glo brushes are designed in all the famous Hughes styles. Blue, bridal white or pink. All gift-boxed with matching comb. $3 to $5.

Glamor Groomer Gift Set

For Mother's Day . . . for a lovely bride or graduate-to-be. Satin-Glo hair brush, comb, complexion brush, hand brush. Choice of colors. $6.50. At fine department or drug stores today. Tek Hughes, Inc., 500 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

PARTNERS IN BEAUTY...

the sheerness of fine nylon combined with

Mojud's perfect fit... partners, indeed, for your hosiery happiness...

in Summer 1949's Fashion Harmony Colors...

STOCKINGS by

MOJUD®

Of course, smart women prefer Mojud Lingerie, too!

he's what he is—and I suppose he does the best he can. It's too late now, anyway."

Before they left, Fiona made a date to take Louise to lunch in Boston when she brought the children in to the dentist. "I'll cook supper for you and the children, too," she said. "They're dears. It's no trouble."

Louise accepted, and Ed went back into town with Fiona and Skid. "Got a heavy date," he said, with a wink, and waved good-by to his wife. The children stood beside her, unsmiling, until the orange door closed.

Fiona was so depressed that even Skid's arms could not cheer her that evening. Louise was so plainly what might become of Fiona herself; it had shocked her into the thought that if you married and had children, you had responsibilities for a long time: you must consider what kind of man you were giving your children for a father.

"Skid," she said abruptly. "Why did you take me out there today?"

"Oh, I don't know," he said easily, sure of his powers to change and warm her to consideration of himself. He ran his hand over her hair gently. "I thought you'd like Louise."

"I do," Fiona said. "That's why."

"Why what?"

"Why I feel so sick and depressed," Fiona said, and she got to her feet, and leaned her head against the mantel, staring into the fire. "There, but for the grace of God ——" she said.

Skid laughed. "Ed's a good fellow. Louise complains, but she likes him well enough to stick. She must get something out of the relationship."

Fiona turned angrily. "She's got two children, and she'd stew herself in oil to give them a chance," she said. "That's plain. And it's equally plain she can't count on their father to give them food and clothes, let alone a fair chance at education, or anything else."

Skid raised his eyebrows. "All upset?"

"Yes," she said, and ground her hands together. "It isn't just today, darling," she said. "It's been coming on. All these jobs you give up, all these trips—even all the money we haven't got, on my salary ——"

He flushed darkly, and she reproached herself for reminding him, ungenerously.

"I can't go on any more," she said. "This time, I want us to separate, and to stay apart until you really are established somewhere—or else we've got to break up." She was crying now. "Heaven knows I don't want to," she said. "You know that. You know I love you, and trust you—but ——"

"But you haven't faith enough in me to stick by me," Skid said, white-faced. "I see."

"It isn't that," Fiona said. "I can't take this any more, that's all."

"I'll go," Skid said, and when he had gone, Fiona cried until her head felt leaden, and when he called her the next morning, very subdued, to say he was going to Detroit, something had come up, this time it would really last, she was perfectly right, he was treating her abominably—if only he could say good-by ——

"Of course, my darling, and forgive me!" she cried. "Come to dinner. Oh, I'm so glad you called me! I was feeling so miserable."

"Love me?" he asked softly.

"Don't you know?" she answered.

There she was, crying again. But by the time Skid came to roast-lamb dinner, she was cheerful, for his sake.

Later, they came to the problem again. "You know I love you," she said. "It isn't that. But this time I want a genuine proposal that I can accept, Skid, and I want you to have a genuine, bona-fide job."

"I know," he said. "I haven't done well by you, Fiona. It's just that my abilities outstrip my actualities—you know how it is. I'm ambitious, and impatient—but I'll manage better, from now on, for your sake. I'll hold this job, and I'll send for you, and we'll be married right away. If you want a child soon, I ought to be earning enough so you can stop working and do that."

She said earnestly, "I can edit and write articles at home, you know. I'm in wonderful work for combining with family life."

"It'll all happen, and soon, darling," he said.

She believed him, again. She saw him off and went to work, almost relieved to be alone for a time, because it was only for a time, and she had obligations of her own to catch up on.

Traditionally easygoing, Dutch employers of a few centuries ago raised no objection when those who worked for them addressed them familiarly as baas (uncle). The word gradually came to be an equivalent of "overseer" or "superior," accompanied early settlers to the New World. English colonists, who had paid a dear price for freedom, resented not only the old forms of authority, but also the very terms by which they were expressed. They were not only unwilling to remain subject to the king and noblemen, but many of them also objected to the very word "master." So early New Englanders, thrown in contact with the Dutch, adopted their word baas—taking it over with the spelling slightly altered. The typically American term boss therefore stands as one more monument to the independent spirit of the founding fathers. —WEBB B. GARRISON.

LOUISE was the picture of what could happen if you married a mistake. And Anne Farquar was what happened, eventually, if you did not marry. But Fiona pushed away all doubts, saying she must not be disloyal, and many a good man was unsuccessful financially—surely she wasn't turning into a gold digger?

When Skid came back, inside a month, jobless, tired out, ready to lean on her all over again, she found that she had used up all her reserves. "No," she said tiredly. "We can keep on saying good-by. I can't anyway. No more, Skid. It's got to be over."

It took an agonizing three months of partings and reunitings before they finally parted, and even then Fiona did not realize it was the final parting. Skid just went to Cleveland on another job prospect. She was sure he would turn up again; and when he wrote, saying he didn't know when he'd see her again, as he seemed pretty well settled; when his letters grew vague, and infrequent, and finally ceased to come at all, it still did not convince her that this good-by had stuck.

The beginning all over again. The griefs of divorce. The regrets. The gathering loneliness, piling higher and higher, like a terrible dust over all Fiona did, everyone she saw, over all her thoughts. Being alone was frightening, and even though she felt a peculiar sense of freedom and, at the same time, of being reunited with other people who still had hope, who could still see ahead, there was desolation everywhere for Fiona.

She had lost a man. Even though she didn't want him, and had sent him away, it was loss, and she was bereaved. She was an ugly duckling again. One of the lonely.

Fiona saw the last of the letters burn, unread, and wondered, if she had read them, what she would have felt, and what would have been recaptured of the most significant years of her life.

It was still not nine o'clock: years on paper burn quickly. She settled down into a hot bath with one of her books, and read for some time, until the telephone rang. She put on her bathrobe and answered it, saying, indifferently, "Yes? Who is it?"

"Fiona, I had to talk to you."

Her fingers were clenched with cold and shock, or they would have dropped the phone. The same voice, intimate over distance, taking up where it had left off, so long ago. Her name, said by that voice, in the same old way.

"I'm so sick and miserable, darling," Skid said. "It's all been a terrible mistake, and I can't go through with it. I had to call you."

"The night before your wedding?"

Skid said, "I'll always love you, Fiona. You're part of me. If you'll have me, I'll come back to you now, tonight. Fiona ——"

Completely new . . . Peg Palmer's new kind of dress in mid-sizes that triumph over the old half-size look. Self-patterned chambray with the iridescent effect in purple and green, pimiento and green, blue and brown or pink and grey. So summer-suitable in mid-sizes 14½ to 22½. About $15. For retailer's name write Peg Palmer, 1110 Washington Ave., St. Louis 1, Mo.

Fiona said, "Can't you go through with one single thing, Skid, even for half a million dollars or whatever the sum is?"

She hung up before she could hear that voice again, or say anything more herself. Her knees gave way, and she lay crumpled and prideless in the terrible after-shock of realizing how much Skid had still meant to her, until just a minute ago. She cried in such agony, she writhed and knocked over the small telephone table, and was afraid the downstairs neighbors would come up to see if something was wrong.

Oh, Skid, Skid, she thought. So this is what the end is really like.

It had been the end before, but pride had said that, not the true emotion that released, and freed, the heart. Now, with clarity, she saw that she had loved, it was true, and the love itself could not be denied, or regretted even, since it had brought so much with it. But she had had the misfortune to love a despicable person, not to know that for a long time, and then to know it, but not to believe it. It was an important love, and an important mistake, and it was over, at last, because Skid had slipped away from his wedding-eve party, to call his old girl.

Did he do it just to see what harm he could do? Fiona wondered. But she didn't care, and it didn't matter any more.

AFTER a long time Fiona got up, made herself a pot of tea to drink beside the fire. She still shivered, so she wrapped herself in a blanket, and urged the fire back to life. When the telephone rang again, she got up quite calmly, prepared to hang up at once if it were Skid, calling back. Perhaps it was only the operator, ringing off on a long-distance call.

But it was Helen Benedict, sounding very cheerful. "Fiona? What are you doing now?"

"Nothing," said Fiona.

"Look," said Helen. "You'll think this is crazy, but you know I told you I had a date tonight. The thing is, he has a nice guy with him, who just got off a train, and we want to go dancing at the Copley, and maybe go on and make a night of it. I thought of you, because you live in town."

"It's after eleven," Fiona said, staring at her grief-ravaged face in the mirror across the room.

"That's not late," said Helen, and went on cheerfully urging and explaining, and there were pleasant male voices in the background. "Do come," Helen said. "We'll have a good time, and it'll get you out of that broody mood you were in this afternoon."

Fiona was silent for a minute. The lonely, who are at liberty. Whose dates, if any, begin at odd hours, and in unexpected ways. Or whose pride rejects these dates, preferring private loneliness.

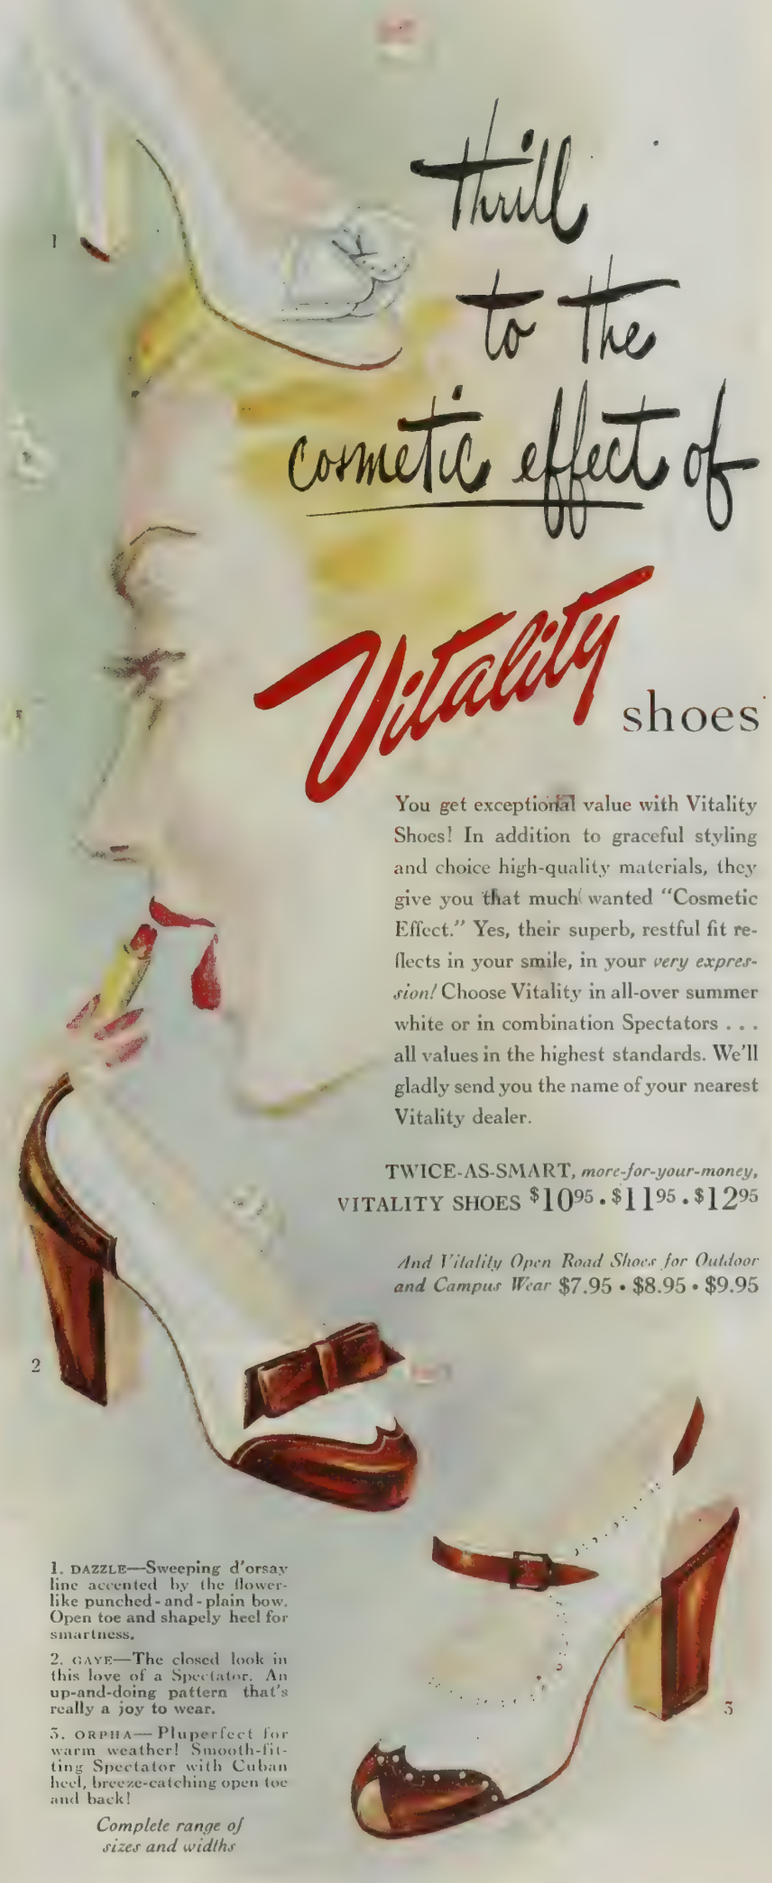
"I have been glooming," she said, "but I'd love to stop. I'll dress, and meet you wherever you say, in half an hour."

"Wonderful!" Helen said, pleased. "And you know, you never can tell what can come of an unexpected evening."

"I know," Fiona agreed.

Any door opening might show something new on the other side. Any door. She could hear Helen saying, "Doesn't she sound like a good thing? I told you she was nice, besides being so handy. She's very attractive too."

"Don't build me up," Fiona said quietly. "Let me just do the best I can."



"All right, honey," Helen said. "We'll be at the Copley in about half an hour. Or shall we come and call for you?"

"I'll meet you," Fiona said hastily, because she would have to put ice on her eyelids, she would have to use cold water on her face, and see what she could do with make-up and a shadowy hat.

It was triumph, in a small way, to walk out of the apartment, dressed in a nice black broadcloth suit and a frilled blouse and becoming, expensive hat. The letters were burned, and the time was past, and everybody made mistakes.

Why, I'm Fiona Duncan, twenty-seven, she thought, turning out the light by the door, then turning it on again, so it would not be so dark when she came home alone. I can start all over again. And she closed the door behind her.

THE END

Thrill to the cosmetic effect of Vitality shoes

You get exceptional value with Vitality Shoes! In addition to graceful styling and choice high-quality materials, they give you that much wanted "Cosmetic Effect." Yes, their superb, restful fit reflects in your smile, in your very expression! Choose Vitality in all-over summer white or in combination Spectators . . . all values in the highest standards. We'll gladly send you the name of your nearest Vitality dealer.

TWICE-AS-SMART, more-for-your-money, VITALITY SHOES $10.95 • $11.95 • $12.95

And Vitality Open Road Shoes for Outdoor and Campus Wear $7.95 • $8.95 • $9.95

1. DAZZLE—Sweeping d'orsay line accented by the flower-like punched-and-plain bow. Open toe and shapely heel for smartness.

2. GAYE—The closed look in this love of a Spectator. An up-and-doing pattern that's really a joy to wear.

3. ORPHA—Pluperfect for warm weather! Smooth-fitting Spectator with Cuban heel, breeze-catching open toe and back!

Complete range of sizes and widths

VITALITY SHOE COMPANY, DIVISION OF INTERNATIONAL SHOE CO., ST. LOUIS 3, MO.

1690 was a long time ago...

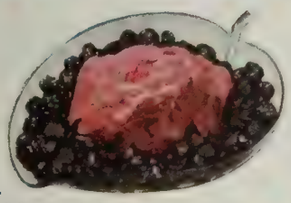
If you're just fairly good at subtraction, you will find that 1690 taken from 1949 is pretty close to 260 years — which is just what Towle's experience adds up to! And in the business of creating Sterling patterns, 260 years add a priceless competence to craftsmanship. So your selection of a Towle pattern inspires a very precious confidence in the prestige it will bring to your home, the beauty it will add to your table, and the warm glow of pride it will stir in your heart.

Towle creates in solid silver only; yet, for all its beauty, Towle Sterling is not expensive.

Visit your jeweler during the Silver Parade

TOWLE
STERLING

There's a Towle pattern that's perfect for you



Lamb creole in a hominy ring. French-fried onions and a vegetable salad make good company.

Conversation Piece

A delicious array of spreads, served with crisp wafers.

Bing cherries glacé—
a combination of frozen juice and ice-cold fruit.

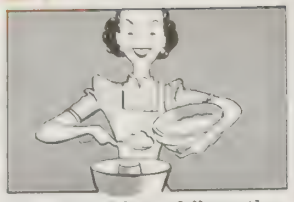
By Ruth Mills Teague

SUMMER is almost upon us, and soon we'll be thinking about dining alfresco, under the green leaves and in the sunset light. So why not one last formal binge—a dinner party with candles and evening dress, and with worthy food—before we ring down the curtain on the social season and drag out last year's picnic basket?

This will be a three-course meal, and we'll start with a variety of butters, or spreads—an appetizer delicious to taste and attractive to look at. Compound butters are so easy to make that I've chosen four: salmon, curry-and-chutney, cream cheese-chives-and-red caviar, and pistachio. Some salted nuts and small pickled peppers make a pleasant accompaniment, and of course there must be plenty of crisp wafers for spreading. (Continued on Page 230)

Well-planned placing of dishes and silver will mark the way as your guests progress around the table.



STROKES COUNTED—SUCCESS SURE!

No guessing how much to beat as you add sugar . . .

No guessing how much to fold as you add flour . . .

Count strokes, follow the recipe exactly . . . result—marvelous angel food!

IT'S A SWANS DOWN

"Guessing-Gone" Angel Food!

You—an angel food artist?

No kidding—it's easy when you follow this recipe exactly!

Swans Down superfineness and the precise new "count-stroke" method actually take the guesswork out of mixing a cake.

Any cake becomes a triumph—even glory-garlanded angel food!

- Simple and Sure! Swans Down's "count-stroke" method!
- Tried and True! Recipe pretested by home cakemakers!
- A "Must," of course—Swans Down's superfineness!

"GUESSING-GONE" STRAWBERRY ANGEL FOOD

A new Swans Down recipe—proved perfect by new brides in home kitchens

Preparations. Let eggs stand at room temperature an hour or two before using. Start oven for moderate heat (375°F.).

- Sift flour once before measuring. (Be sure it's superfine Swans Down for "Guessing-Gone" results!) Lift by spoonfuls into cup until piled high, then level off by drawing spatula or straight knife across top. Do not pack or shake down. Sift sugar also.

Measure into sifter:
1 cup plus 2 tablespoons sifted Swans Down Cake Flour
½ cup sifted granulated sugar

Measure into large mixing bowl:
1¼ cups 10 to 12 egg whites—at room temperature
¼ teaspoon salt

Have ready:
1¼ teaspoons cream of tartar
1 cup sifted granulated sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
¼ teaspoon almond extract

- Now—Swans Down's "Count-Stroke" Part!

1. Sift flour and ½ cup sugar together four times.

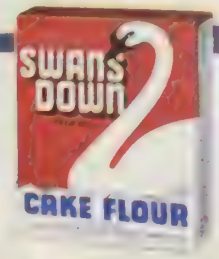
2. Beat egg whites and salt with flat wire whisk or rotary egg beater until foamy. Sprinkle in cream of tartar and beat until stiff enough to hold up in soft peaks, but still moist and glossy.

3. Add the 1 cup of sugar in 4 additions by sprinkling 4 tablespoons at a time over egg whites and beating 25 strokes by hand or 25 turns of beater each time. Add flavorings and beat 10 strokes by hand or 10 turns of beater.

4. Add flour-and-sugar mixture in 4 additions, sifting it over egg whites. Fold in each addition lightly with whisk or spoon, turning bowl gradually and using 15 complete fold-over strokes each time. After last addition, fold 10 to 20 extra strokes.

Baking. Turn into ungreased 10-inch tube pan. Bake in moderate oven (375°F.) 30 to 35 minutes.

Cooling. Remove from oven and invert pan on rack until cake is cool (1 hour). To remove cake, loosen from sides of pan with spatula and around tube with slender knife, gently drawing cake from pan.



Serving. Spread cake thinly with Strawberry Icing made by mixing 2 cups sifted confectioners' sugar, 2 teaspoons lemon juice, dash of salt, and ¼ cup crushed or sieved strawberries (quick-frozen or fresh.) Cut cake in thin wedges.

(All measurements are level.)

FREE! Send name and address for Swans Down's new "Guessing-Gone" recipe folder—things you've always wanted to know for perfect cakemaking! Address Swans Down, Dept. GG, Battle Creek, Mich.

A product of General Foods

No wonder most women choose Swans Down

The main dish is a hominy ring filled with lamb creole and surrounded by French-fried onions. I'm amazed to find that a lot of people have never tasted hominy or even heard of it, and that's really too bad. Those delicious grains of corn now canned and already soaked so they have puffed up to two or more times their original size shouldn't be missed by anyone. And hominy is astonishingly inexpensive—an added attraction. For the lamb creole we'll use the neck and shoulder of lamb, also inexpensive—at least comparatively so—but tender and succulent if treated properly. My butcher was delighted when I bought the meat for this dish. He says that most people buy lamb chops and legs of lamb, period, and that butchers are often stuck with the quite sizable and very palatable remainder of a lamb.

The combination of hominy, lamb and French-fried onions makes a hearty dish, and a big salad of cooked carrots, raw cucumbers and greens will be a perfect companion for it.

Toasted English muffins, hot and buttery, will be the bread. A dish or two of marmalade should be on the table—any kind that suits your taste or happens to be in your cupboard will be fine.

Now comes the dessert, bing cherries glacé. I'm eager to tell you about this one, but if I say another word here there'll be nothing left to tell—it's that easy. However, the finished product doesn't look as if it had been made by a few simple twists of the wrist, and the taste is really terrific.

These recipes will serve eight or ten people, and the menu is ideal for a buffet dinner.

SALMON BUTTER

Get ¼ pound smoked salmon—and if it is too salty, which it often is, let it stand in skim milk for an hour. Drain, wipe dry, remove all skin and bones and grind twice through finest blade of food chopper. Add 1 teaspoon lemon juice, 1½ tablespoons cream, ⅛ pound butter or margarine, ⅛ pound cream cheese, a pinch of sugar and a little cayenne pepper and blend thoroughly. Canned salmon may be substituted for the smoked. Be sure that it is red and, since the taste will be milder than that of smoked salmon, use a little more of it.

CURRIED CREAM CHEESE AND CHUTNEY

Blend 4 ounces cream cheese, ⅛ pound butter or margarine and 2 tablespoons cream until smooth. Add 1 teaspoon curry powder, a few drops garlic juice, 4 tablespoons finely chopped chutney, and stir until smooth.

CREAM CHEESE, CHIVES AND RED CAVIAR

Blend together until smooth 6 ounces cream cheese, 1 tablespoon grated onion and 4 tablespoons cream. Stir in 5 tablespoons finely chopped chives. Work into mound, make a depression in top and fill this with red caviar. (Don't add caviar until shortly before serving.)

PISTACHIO BUTTER

Get ¼ pound pistachios; and if they have their skins on, blanch them as you would almonds. Grind or chop nuts to a powder and blend with ⅛ pound uncolored margarine and 2 tablespoons cream. Add salt to taste and a few drops green vegetable coloring. In fact, a couple drops of yellow in the chutney butter and red in the salmon will not influence their taste and will make them prettier.

Store all the butters in refrigerator. To serve, arrange them in separate dishes or small bowls on an hors d'oeuvre tray with an assortment of crisp wafers. As contrast to the smooth butters, some salted nuts and small pickled peppers will be a nice addition. Note: If you have some of the butters left and if you also have a freezer, you can make a beautiful appetizer pie for a future party. Remove crusts from a big round slice of rye or pumpernickel bread and spread it with butter or margarine. Make a round center of one > Commandment No. 1 of any truly civilized society is this: Let people be different.

>
> —From THE COUNTRYMAN'S YEAR. By David Grayson, copyright 1936 by Doubleday & Company, Inc.

spread, surround this with a ring of anot and so on until the whole slice is cove Wrap in cellophane and store in freezer. serve, cut in slender pie-shape wedges.

LAMB CREOLE

Buy a shoulder and half a neck of lamb a one piece. It should weigh about 5½ pou Ask the butcher to cut it into small ch about ¼ inch thick. These are called shoul chops and blade chops, and it's amazing h many you will get from this cut of meat. A some thin cutlets can be sliced from meaty part of the neck. Remove all fat a bones from the chops. Put these bones a the rest of the neck into a pot with a quar water and some salt, and boil until very t der. Take meat from bones, strain the bro and when it is cold remove all the fat, wh will have risen to the top. This much at le should be done in advance, and the wh dish can be cooked the day before if t suits your convenience.

Now to proceed. Sprinkle chops and c lets with salt, freshly ground black pep and paprika, and dredge lightly with flo Heat some salad oil in a large skillet, s meat, and when delicately browned trans to a casserole. Put a little more oil in ski and add 2 large minced cloves garlic, 1 c coarsely chopped onion, ½ pound sliced fr mushrooms, and 1 cup chopped sweet p pers. Use half green and half red pepper you can get the red ones. Sauté a few minu and add 3 cups lamb broth, 1 cup tom sauce, 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, ⅛ spoon thyme and, if like, ¼ cup Madeira. in the little pieces of l taken from bones, when this mixture come a boil, taste for salt correct seasoning and p contents of skillet o lamb in casserole. Co and bake in a moder oven, 350° F., until lam tender enough to cut with a fork. Mi heaping tablespoon cornstarch with so water and stir in enough of this to bring sauce to the consistency of thin gravy. T lamb creole may be kept hot in barely turn on oven or over a pan of boiling water top of range until ready to serve. If finish the day before, reheat by one of these metho

HOMINY RING

As often as I have cooked hominy I never, until I worked out this recipe, t cooking it in a ring mold. Not a nick worth of help could I get from about 50 coo books, but it seemed a simple enough thi to do and I tackled the job in high spirits. hate to say how much hominy and tim used before I arrived at the solution, and fact that I still dote on hominy is someth of a testimonial, I think. You see, I did want a compact, custardy ring—that easy enough to achieve—but I wanted grains of hominy barely to be held togeth Of course, once I found it, the solution simple and I felt like a dope for not think of it in the first place.

Drain the liquid from enough cans hominy to fill your ring mold—with hominy, not the liquid. Four No. 2½ cans enough for a ten-inch ring. Melt several blespoons margarine or butter in a skill add the drained hominy and sauté gently minutes, stirring often. Don't let the homi brown. Remove from heat, add 3 tablespoo chopped parsley, 3 tablespoons chopped miento, and salt and pepper to taste. M well and set aside to cool. Grease ring mo well with butter or margarine and line it wi strips of cellophane long enough to exte above the ring on both sides. Cut the stri about 3 inches wide and let them overla little. They will stick to the margarine or b ter and stay in place. When entire inner s face of ring is covered, dip your fingers salad oil and rub them over the cellophane that it won't stick to the hominy when t moved. Beat 3 egg whites until bar frothy, add ½ cup milk and stir this into t cooled hominy. Do a good job of mixing at down-to-earth prices!

(Continued on Page 232)

Hunt's Heavenly Peaches

THE MOST tender-mellow, the most tantalizing peaches that ever won a big blue ribbon in any taste test — that's Hunt's Heavenly Peaches!

And that's facts! For in a series of recent professionally-conducted blindfold taste tests, Hunt's peaches were tried against all other leading brands!

And Hunt's Heavenly Peaches came out first — way up yonder first!

First for fuller, richer flavor — the sort of golden ripe goodness you get, fresh off the tree! And first for velvety smoothness — for luscious, heavy syrup.

And yet — for all their praise-winning, prize-winning qualities, Hunt's cost you less.

So, ask your grocer for the peaches with the Hunt red label — the most honest-to-heavenly peaches you ever tasted!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Hunt-for the best

Hunt's Fruits • Vegetables • Tomato Products Hunt Foods, Inc., Los Angeles, Calif.

Congo Squares

Rich, Golden-Brown Cousin of Famous Toll House Cookies—with a Very Special Flavor!

RECIPE

Congo Squares

Clip and Save This Recipe

2¾ cups sifted flour
2½ tsp. baking powder
½ tsp. salt
⅔ cup shortening
2¼ cups brown sugar (1 lb. pkg.)
3 eggs
1 cup nutmeats, broken
1 package Nestle's Semi-Sweet Chocolate Morsels

Mix and sift flour, baking powder and salt. Melt shortening and add brown sugar. Stir until well mixed. Allow to cool slightly. Add eggs one at a time, beating well after each addition. Add dry ingredients, then nutmeats and chocolate. Pour into greased pan about 10½" x 15½" x ¾". BAKE AT: 350° F. TIME: 25-30 min. YIELD: 48 squares.

When almost cool, cut into squares approximately 2" x 2".

For FREE Recipe Booklet write Dept. J., Nestle's Chocolate Test Kitchen, 60 Hudson Street, New York 13, N.Y.

Every Bite Contains WHOLE Morsels of NESTLÉ's Semi-Sweet Chocolate

Congo Squares have all the crisp, crunchy goodness of Toll House Cookies with a taste you'll say is different and extra good. They're a pleasure to make and a pleasure to serve . . . so rich and satisfying, so appetizing in appearance. Delight your family's semi-sweet tooth with this appealing taste treat!

Have them on hand for every occasion

TOLL HOUSE COOKIES Recipe for America's favorite cookie on back of yellow cellophane package. AT YOUR GROCER'S this and then fill the ring, pressing hominy down with the bowl of a spoon as you go along so that the ring will be firmly packed. Fold the ends of cellophane that extend above the ring over top of hominy and cover with a flat tin lid. Put ring in a pan of hot water and bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., 40 minutes. This whole performance can be done in advance and the ring reheated in a water bath before serving, or you can prepare the ring in advance and bake it 40 minutes or so before dinner.

(Continued from Page 230)

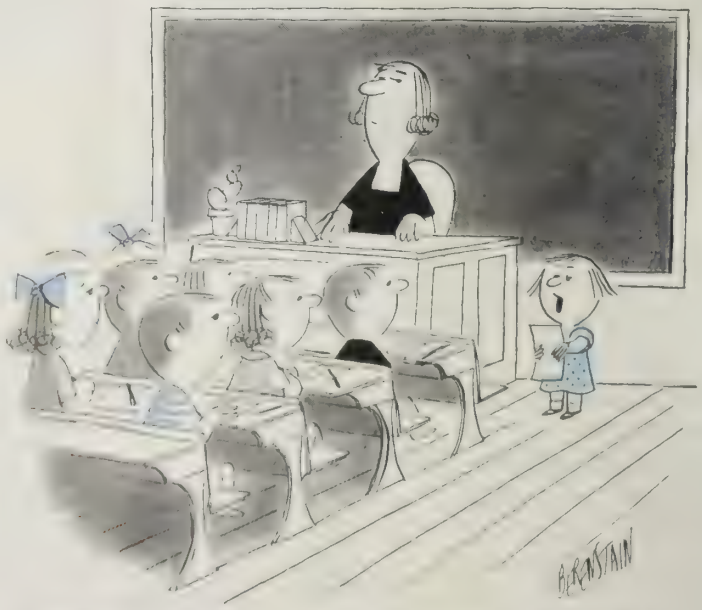
FRENCH-FRIED ONIONS

Cut medium-size Spanish onions into ¼-inch slices and separate into rings. Dip rings first in milk, then in flour, and be sure all surfaces are well coated with flour. Fry in deep fat until golden brown and drain on paper towels. For French frying I use a shallow iron pot and no basket. The rings can be prepared for frying early in the day, but fry them at as nearly the last minute as you can manage without disrupting your other organizational plans. French-fried onions are better if they are eaten shortly after they are fried, but they will hold quite well for some time in a very slow oven, 200° F., if spread on a paper-lined cooky sheet.

When serving time comes, be sure your platter for the lamb creole is hot. Fold flaps of cellophane away from outer and inner rims of mold and invert ring in center of platter. Remove mold—it won't even try to stick—and peel off strips of cellophane. Fill center of ring with lamb creole and surround with heaps of lamb creole and French-fried onions. Garnish liberally with parsley to separate the lamb on the outside of ring from the onions.

CARROT-AND-CUCUMBER SALAD

Cook nice orange carrots until barely tender. Cool, cut into thin rounds and marinate in French dressing overnight. Use a teaspoon of orégano in your dressing. Peel several firm cucumbers and leave on a little of the green skin because it looks so pretty. Slice the cucumbers in any shape you like, cover with ice cubes and store in refrigerator. Have an assortment of salad greens washed and crisp.



When you are ready to arrange the salad, drain water from cucumbers and toss with French dressing. Line a bowl or platter with greens, mix about half the carrots and cucumbers together and heap them in the center. Surround with alternate piles of carrots and cucumbers and sprinkle on a little more French dressing.

BING CHERRIES GLACÉ

Drain the juice from 3 No. 2 cans pitted bing cherries. Be sure to get pitted cherries. If your grocer doesn't have them he could order them for you. Add to the juice 1½ cups strained orange juice, 3 tablespoons lemon juice, 3 tablespoons grated orange rind and ¾ cup sugar. Bring to a boil and cook, uncovered, 3 minutes over high heat. Cool, put in freezing tray in freezing compartment of refrigerator, lower temperature and freeze. (If you have a home freezer, put the dessert in it and avoid changing temperature of your refrigerator.) When mixture begins to harden on bottom and sides of pan, scrape well and beat with a spoon. As freezing continues, repeat the stirring and scraping several times, so that an even, smooth consistency is produced. When contents of pan are uniformly solid throughout, do a final stirring, put temperature of refrigerator back to normal and return pan to freezing compartment. About 3 hours will be required for the freezing, and it can be done as early in the day as you like. The sherbet should be smooth and fluffy and not hard. If it stands long enough to get too hard, just give it another toss with the spoon. It's very agreeable stuff to work with—and, I might add, to taste. Served with the cherries, it is something definitely special. If you want to lighten the color, blend in 1 stiffly beaten egg white when you do the first scraping and stirring. To serve, heap the frozen juice in the center of a bowl or platter and surround with the cherries, which must be ice cold.

Service. It's fun to plan buffet service for a dinner party, because it's so easy to vary the pattern—and variety is pleasant. But you must know the pattern perfectly yourself or you can't achieve a smooth, smart result no matter how eager your guests may be to cooperate. There is risk of confusion when you are asking people to pick up plates, napkins, silver, to serve themselves and then to make way for the next arrivals at the board, so your carefully thought-out plan of progress around the table should be clearly indicated by the position of silver, dishes, and so on. The food will look heavenly—you've seen to that—but it will also taste heavenly and you'll want it to be eaten while it's still at the peak of perfection. And you'll want it to be eaten in comfort, too, and that's something you can't leave to chance or the ingenuity of your guests. I know I'm forever talking about plan making, list making and such, but I do think they're important and I certainly practice what I preach.

A buffet party is bound to be a mobile affair and delightfully unpredictable in minor ways. That's all to the good, but if you have planned the general pattern you want your party to follow it's more than likely to proceed as planned without the slightest effort on your part or even a hint of past effort. And that, too, is all to the good. Rigidity we cer-

"My cat . . . my cat is named Clara. She is 4 years old and has 31 children. My mother is 31 and has 4 children."

BEST NEW FOOD IDEA IN YEARS!

Delicious brown beef gravy in cans—all ready to serve! It's rich with old-fashioned roasting pan flavor!

Wonderful poured over meat, potatoes, hot biscuits—all sorts of things. Makes them taste better and look better.

No mixing, no stirring. Just open, heat, pour. Keep a few cans always handy. Costs pennies to serve . . . helps save dollars on your monthly food bill.

Franco-American BEEF GRAVY

- Adds taste and glamor to economy foods
- Livens up leftovers
- Enriches slim meals
- Grand on bread for children's snacks

DELICIOUS BEEF GRAVY
ALL READY TO SERVE

Deliciously "DIFFERENT" sserts
HIP-O-LITE
THE ORIGINAL MARSHMALLOW CREME
44th YEAR
Recipe Book of Successful Desserts.
Write Hip-O-Lite, 450, St. Louis, Mo.

eauty and Utility United!

The Aladdin Teapot brings pleasure to all who love the golden beverage. It is a lovely, traditional design, enriched with genuine gold decoration. And, its use assures perfect tea every time, for it is made of secret process china that will never craze, stain, or absorb.

The Hall China Company—World's Largest Manufacturer of Decorated Teapots and Cooking China.

Hall Teapots
OF SUPERIOR QUALITY CHINA
Sold by All Leading Dealers

tainly don't want, but a shambles is not desirable either.

Enough of that. The food? Well, with this menu there isn't much of a problem there. If you're solo flying, the French-fried onions are going to take ten or fifteen minutes of your time and I'd suggest that you get dressed a little early, throw the kitchen windows wide open—or as wide as weather permits—and do this job just before the guests arrive. Ye gods, can't I let you alone? Pretty soon I'll be suggesting how you should do your hair and what color of lipstick you should wear. No, I won't. That's none of my business. I'm just trying to be helpful, and I do want this party to be gay.

LET'S GO FISHIN'

(Continued from Page 61)

well, by this time you know. You've got the idea—time with a capital T means about as much to me as a secondhand eggshell. No use for it. I like to operate on a spontaneous basis. And if that word isn't spelled right, you can use your own speller. For I must get on now, and tell you more about fish—not just catching, but eating.

Yes, it's shad. Now you take shad. One of the great fish. There are aristocrats in the waters as well as in the forests and all over. Having known quite a few aristocrats in my time, I feel qualified as an expert, and I say that the most aristocratic fish is a rainbow trout. Speckled and brown—the kind you take from icy Canadian waters—are close relations and share the family pride. And out of other waters the shad is the social arbiter—the Duchess of Windsor, as it were, among the finny tribe. And I know the Duchess would agree and not mind my analogy, for she's a gourmet and she would understand.

Pompano comes next. I guess you know how I feel about that. However, I shall tell you more as we go along together—and I don't care what they say about "repeating." Where would we be today, I ask you, without the repeating rifle—or shotgun, whichever it is! So if I repeat once in a while, it shows that my mind revolves and certain things come back at intervals, just like day and night. I was never static.

Getting on from here. It is time, now, to introduce you to the center of attraction in the meal that seems most appropriate to me for May. So let me get on now with making you acquainted with shad!

PLANKED SHAD

Have a large 3½- to 5-pound shad split and boned at the market. If you can get one with a roe, so much the better, but the buck shad is delicious, too, and less expensive. Wash and dry the fish and roe thoroughly. Place shad skinside down on a hot oiled wooden plank or ovenproof glass platter. Arrange the roe at one end.

Use canned roe if you have a buck shad. The canned roe is better, I think, and it's ready to go places with no bother on anybody's part.

Brush the fish and roe with melted butter. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. No other seasonings are needed. Broil 5 to 8 minutes, according to size of fish, under medium broiler heat. Don't have it so close to heat that the wood will char. Take out the plank and turn the roe, but not the shad, and pipe duchess potatoes around the edge of the plank. Return to broiler and broil another 5 minutes or so until the potatoes brown, the flesh of fish is done and the roe is done through.

Planked fish may be baked in a moderate oven, 350°F., but allow longer time than for broiling—35 minutes for full time on shad, 15 minutes for the roe. You can tell when your fish is done by flaking off a little with a fork. Just be guided by conscience and giving it the benefit of the doubt.

The plank—and I don't need to say this, but will—must be well oiled, and for this business "oil" is the word. Don't butter it—

YOU CAN BE SURE..IF IT'S Westinghouse

COOKING MAGIC
for any and every food!

LOOK-IN LID . . . so you see what's cooking

LIFT-OUT RACK . . . everything out so easily

GET AMERICA'S LEADING ROASTER
Cooks complete meal, bakes cake and roasts turkey. Fries, grills, broils food when equipped with detachable Broiler-Grid. Cooks everything. Plugs in anywhere. Portable, compact. Keeps food hot for hours. Complete set of Ovenware Dishes. Wonderful for every type of Roaster-Oven cooking. Superb for quantity cooking. Recipe book with Roaster-Oven tells how to cook for 20 to 50, when need be. Gives you easy Electric Cooking, in only 2 square feet of space. So clean, so sure, so wonderful! See this Roaster-Oven at your retailer's today.

EVERY HOUSE NEEDS A Westinghouse
Roaster-Oven

WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC CORPORATION • APPLIANCE DIVISION • MANSFIELD • OHIO
TUNE IN TED MALONE . . . Every Morning, Monday through Friday . . . ABC Network

use plenty of salad oil and rub it in. And then—one more thing, to remind you—heat the plank for half an hour before you put the shad to bed on it.

It occurs to me. As it happens that potatoes and peas go on the plank, right here I want to say one thing. Get a plank. And having planked a steak, some chops, some trout, some pompano and some shad, you'll be happy that you have a plank. For you've no idea how companionable it becomes. Treated well, of course. Here are the potatoes that share the honors with the shad on the plank.

DUCHESS POTATO MIXTURE

Rice or mash enough freshly boiled and drained potatoes to make 3 cups. Add 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, ¼ to ⅓ cup hot milk, 4 beaten egg yolks, salt and pepper to taste. Beat until smooth and fluffy. If you have a pastry bag and tube, fill with mashed potatoes and pipe around the plank. If you haven't, fluffy spoonfuls of the potato mixture look pretty well and taste as good as fancy rosettes. Put back under broiler until potatoes are tinged with brown. For serving, fill in with buttered peas. Leave as much room as you can. If your fish is large, you'll probably serve your peas separately, so there will be plenty for 6.

Back to soup. I've half a mind to leave the first course in this meal to the last. But all that would amount to would be that it would get changed around somehow, and come out on top, so here it is, and as cans are involved and not art, let's have it. It's good too. Excellent. And quite something to look at, so maybe it dabbles in art, after all. I guess you can safely say it does. Oh, yes, it's a chilled tomato creation, and you know what? Try this idea. Instead of soup cups that are always around like a hungry cat, sometime try filling scooped-out tomatoes with the jellied madrilène. Or orange cups. Awfully pretty. Very stylish service.

TOMATO MADRILÈNE

Chill three 12-ounce cans consommé madrilène overnight in the refrigerator, so it will be cold and firm when you're ready to serve it. Open the cans. Break up the consommé with a fork. Serve in soup cups. Top each with a spoonful of thick, beaten, salted sour cream and a dab of black caviar. This is a fine combination of flavors and good to look at. The cups may be filled and garnished some time ahead of a dinner party and kept chilled in the refrigerator. That way soup cups are icy cold too. Serve with buttered and heated wafers. A slice of lemon on each cup would be very acceptable too.

I wonder if—— As they say on the radio—"did you ever" this and that and do thus and so and why don't you do something else and really begin to live? You know. So I am about to say that I, in my very unusual household, sometimes am at a loss to know what the boarders would like to eat. They get tired, the same as I do, of the elegant and indescribably elaborate dishes I serve. Such as fish balls and corned-beef hash and hamburger and so on. Just the same, if I could get an old-fashioned slab of dry salt codfish, such as I was raised—or practically raised—on, they'd cry for my fish balls three times a week. But I can't. So I occasionally give them a sea-food casserole which is greeted with enthusiasm. I pass this along to you as another solution to our mutual problem—what shall we have to eat?

Here's another answer. Get a pound of fresh or frozen crab meat. Get a can or two of shrimps. Have four hard-boiled eggs. Put a layer of fine cracker crumbs in a de casserole. Add a good layer of rich crea sauce, seasoned with salt and pepper a plenty of paprika. Add a tiny bit of nutm That's right, nutmeg—but only a little b

Now a layer of crab meat, scattered ov with flaked shrimp, an egg, cut up, mi sauce, and so on to the top. Cover this wi fine cracker crumbs, some grated chee little pieces of butter or margarine a bake until the sauce bubbles like a maid honor, and the top is beautiful and brow Serve this dish with green peppers stuff with rice, and a casserole of baked tomato or broiled tomatoes, a salad and a pie. A what have you? Do it and you'll know t answer. A perfect supper. This is a litt dividend—from me to you.

Here's the pay-off. Desserts may co and they may go, but strawberries go on f ever. Isn't it so? And, to wind up what think is a lovely dinner, I give you a sho cake. But not the shortcake you may thi I mean. This deals not with baking-powd biscuits, but with those fragile, melt-i your-mouth meringues. The story follows so read, mark, learn and inwardly digest it and when you've made this, no shortcake w ever defeat you—if one ever tries to, or ha

STRAWBERRY MERINGUE SHORTCAKE

Beat 3 egg whites with a pinch of salt un they stand up in peaks. Gradually add cup plus 2 tablespoo sifted powdered sug. a tablespoon at a tin You can get the po dered now—and it' gift, whatever ha pens. Forget conf tioners' sugar for th Let it be powdere Beat well after ea addition, so the sug will be thoroughly di solved. Flavor with teaspoon vanilla.

Grease thoroughl the bottom and sid and dust with flo an 8-inch cake pa that has a removab bottom. Shake off the excess flour. Po the meringue into the pan. Fluff and swi the top. Bake 1 hour or a little longer i very slow oven, 250°F., until crisp and lig beige in color. Turn off the heat and allo the meringue to cool in the oven anoth hour. Take it out and finish cooling on rac Carefully go around the sides of the pa with a spatula. Meringues will crack up o you at the drop of a brick chimney, so l careful of them. Lift out—loosen the botto of the meringue from the pan bottom an gently and lovingly slide onto a cake plat A wide spatula or pancake turner is a goo tool for this purpose. You will find there's little crease or crevice between the top an bottom of the meringue. Lift off the top.

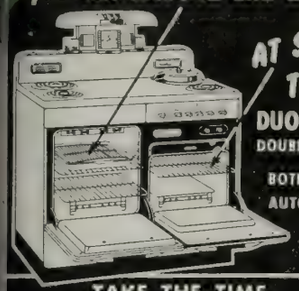
Fill the center of the bottom half of th meringue with sugared, sliced strawberri folded into whipped cream. Cover with th top half of the meringue.

Now then, if there is anyone not blesse with spring-bottom pans and such, kno what I'd do? Use the same receipt an make individual dropped meringues. Bak the same way on a greased cooky sheet—n flour. But split and fill with berries an cream. The spring-bottom pans are handy—and for a lot of things, if you think of in vesting.

Here's my choice. I love to think o those old days, before these strange an modern ways, think of the long-remembere brooks before I got hemmed in with book and grew so urban and so wise. I'd swap th shop for country skies and that one pool used to keep a secret deeper than the deep any secret I have known—oh, well, thos days are dead and gone. But—I'll confid in you and say just this—if I could have m way, in this fair merry month of May there' one thing I would choose to do. Go fishin

THE EN

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★



Baby in the Carriage

By May Richstone

Happiness in my heart is a song,
In baby's throat, a contented purr
As she looks at the great wide wonderful world—
And I look at her!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

with Presteline you can BROIL and BAKE AT SAME TIME

DUO-MATIC DOUBLE OVENS BOTH FULLY AUTOMATIC

TAKE THE TIME See Presteline

PRESTELINE, 666 LAKE SHORE DRIVE, CHICAGO 11

Bet he goes for Baked Beans with-

A·1

Sauce—the dash that makes the dish

FREE—"Cooking for a Man." Write G. F. Heublein & Bro., Inc., Dept. LHJ, Hartford, Conn.

RESET LOOSE DRAWER PULLS

EASY! No skill required. Handles like putty...hardens into wood.

PLASTIC WOOD

A CELLULOSE FIBRE FILLER

IN CANS OR TUBES

DOZENS OF OTHER USES

ONG TANCE MOVING

0 See fied book ent you.

Call us for quick, safe moving to any part of the nation. Trained personnel. Modern vans! Get our estimate on packing, moving and storage.

th American VAN LINES, Inc. Offices: FORT WAYNE, IND.

Argyles for the Baby with NUN'S MOTHPROOF REGISTERED TRADE MARK BABY ZEPHYR YARN

aters $2.85, Socks 75c, Mittens 75c (All 3—$3.85). ructions included. Send Check or MO to: thea Robinson, 662 Boardwalk, Ocean City, N.J.

THE BECKONING YEARS

(Continued from Page 58)

in, snapping the nails in a hard frost when fall fruits needed a touch of cold for mellowing. But Jess relished weather, it seemed, for its own sake. Hailstones big as pullet eggs cutting the corn to shreds and Jess in the thick of it gathering up bucketfuls like diamonds. The wind so strong the log cabin, low as it was, quivered like an old dog beat down to its haunches, and Jess out, hat off, mouth open, gulping down draughts of air like a doctor's prescribed medicine. Unless death changed him more than it seemed death could, Jess might have a tedious time hereafter: no unseasonable spells, no high-water marks, no snowdrifts to keep track of. Poor man! Eliza reached over and laid a hand on his shoulder. Jess placed his large hand upon her small rough one.

"Thee glad to have it summer, Eliza?"

"Summer for us, too," she said unexpectedly.

"Summer," Jess repeated, startled.

Said that way, the word shook him. He felt himself no more than started in life, a few steps taken on a journey of miles. In the pasture he heard one of the cows speak, she also saying "summer." The bull replied with a sleepy rumbling. Saying cow, I suppose, not summer, Jess thought. In the loft overhead the boys moving into the shallows of sleep spoke a word or two. Play, swim, good time, something like that, Jess imagined. Though who could tell? Here was Eliza near to him as an own rib, her hand in his, thinking a thought he would never have credited her with: that they had come to a halfway mark. The boys stirred again—Saying, for all I know, Jess concluded with dismay, we hate the world.

"Four children," Eliza said.

It was a fact. He could go from room to room counting them if need be. Laban and Josh in the loft. Mattie in the lean-to. In the trundle bed by their side, little Sarah. One minute a man was riding off to go courting, no responsibility in the world but keeping his horse fed and his hair cut, and the next he was as patriarchal as Abraham, his offspring and flocks gathered about him.

"Thirty years old," said Eliza. "Half of life gone by."

It was true. Thirty years! Half done. Through the imperfect chinking an eye of light fell onto the moving pendulum of the clock. A few more swings and he'd be a grandfather. In the loft the boys, now wide awake, began to talk outright. Next door in the lean-to Mattie sang to herself. "Icy, icy, icy, icy all the world" was her song, as far as Jess could make out. Little Sarah whimpered and pushed at her covering. The house was full of life.

"We're crowded," Eliza burst out. "We need more room."

Jess made a movement away from his wife and she said:

"I mean in the house. We're all bunched up together."

"Bunched up?" said Jess. "Why, we got four rooms." That was stretching it a little, maybe, calling the lean-to a room, but it was big enough for Mattie's bed. And kitchen, sitting room and loft were real rooms. He could remember when there had been only kitchen and loft and Eliza content as a queen.

"We've outgrown them," said Eliza. "Us sleeping in the sitting room and the children in and out and company having to double up. It's not dignified."

Dignified! So now they would live with dignity. Jess tried on the word like a new shirt and it fitted him fine. "For dignity," he asked, "what does thee figure we need, Eliza?"

Eliza didn't need to figure a minute. "We need to add another room," she said. "A chamber of our own."

Jess sat up in bed and looked about. It was full day now, the morning light rosy on the chinked walls, the puncheon floors, the exposed rafters. Clad in his new dignity, his life half spent, Jess looked at the room with

It's the Frosting that makes the cake and it's Durkee's Coconut that makes the frosting. There's nothing like it, to point up the goodness of your favorite cake. That rich, tropical flavor is always fresh, always dependable. Durkee's Coconut comes in two styles, shredded in the familiar carton, extra moist in airtight cans. So swirl it high on your frosted cakes for real party fare. One of my favorites is Coconut Maple Frosting. Recipe's above.

Coconut adds exotic flavor to many foods. It's delicious in cold cereals and in waffles—as a topping for curried dishes and fruit salads, use it for a flavor lift for pies and cookies.

QUALITY Glidden PRODUCTS

For other interesting recipes, write Durkee Famous Foods, Department 5-J, Long Island, New York. Division of The Glidden Company.

© 1949, The Glidden Company

Club Aluminum
HAMMERCRAFT WATERLESS COOKWARE

bake potatoes on top of the stove!

Delicious, evenly baked potatoes that never see the inside of an oven! The heavy, thick, molded aluminum walls of Club spread heat quickly and evenly . . . over low heat on top of the stove. Cooks like an oven by surrounding food with heat from all sides. This is only one of dozens of "waterless" cooking wonders Club Aluminum makes possible. An ideal Mother's Day gift. Lasts a lifetime, too.

1. Moisture-sealed lid holds heat in—juices baste back into food
2. Thick, molded aluminum walls spread heat evenly
3. Less heat needed—you save on fuel

As you can see from this diagram, Club Aluminum cookware doesn't need water to cook fresh foods uniformly. So, precious vitamins and minerals aren't poured down the drain. Fresh vegetables, fruits, meats cook in their own natural juices, flavor and reflavor themselves instead of the water. It's "Full-Flavor" cooking!

This is the Club Aluminum that once sold through home demonstrations for about double today's prices. Now sold through hardware, furniture, department stores, and other dealers. You'll know genuine Club Aluminum cookware by its hammered "jewelry-store" finish, and the cloverleaf on the bottom.

Shown above is Club Universal Saucepan. Other pieces are Covered Utility Saucepan, Covered Sauce Pan, Deep Skillet, Open Utility Saucepan, Covered Saucepan, Covered Double Cereal Cooker. Club Percolator, Coffee Dispenser, Pot & Pan Pack, and Tea Ball Pan.

CLUB ALUMINUM PRODUCTS CO., CHICAGO 14, ILLINOIS

Tune in "Club Time," ABC network, Tuesday mornings, and hear favorite hymns of famous people.

a stranger's eyes. Chinking falling out here and there. Beams darkened with smoke. Puncheon floor scarred and splintered. Plainly the main room of the house, parlor and sitting room in one, but a man and woman bedded down there. Man's breeches hanging cater-cornered by one gallus on a peg. Woman's petticoats, neater, across the back of a chair. Child in another bed. This stranger, this dignified middle-aged man, did not see the room as Jess had, as a young man starting life, lucky to have raised himself such a fine and weatherproof house in the midst of his clearing. He saw it against houses left behind in Ohio and Pennsylvania, houses where the sitting was done in one room and the sleeping in another, houses where no daylight came in except through the windows, and the floor boards were so slippery with wax a man had to clench his toes to stay upright. Why, this was a makeshift place, a camp in the woods, a building a man could make do with while young and getting a start, but one he'd want to get shut of by the time he'd reached the summer of life!

Jess put a long, rusty-haired leg out of bed, picked up two-year-old Sarah, who was now awake, and strode about the room. With Sarah on his shoulder he took the poker from the hearth and rammed it through a weak spot in the chinking.

"House falling down about our ears!"

Sarah put her fingers through the opening. "Falling down," she said with pleasure.

"Our children exposed to the elements!" lamented Jess, making the dried clay fly. "A chamber of our own! A single room!" He was scornful. "What we need's a whole new house."

Before breakfast Jess and the boys did the chores and surveyed the landscape. The sun was still low and its beams came coasting in without much slant. A kind of bluish haze hung above the pasture's clover. Where the light touched the silvery upturned undersides of the grass there was a sheen like that off a winter's hoarfrost. The shadows of the trees were long, stretching away, it seemed, from the sun's heat. Butterflies were already running their tongues deep into Eliza's morning-glories and cows walked the shady way to grass.

Josh said, "Labe slipped his pig a handful of corn when thee wasn't watching, pa."

Labe's pig was the last of a litter, a runt, a salmon-colored weakling. He was trying to build it up.

"Thee old tattletale," Labe said. "The old spill-it-all."

Josh was not hurt by these words, nor surprised. Name calling was but part of his brother's general want of principle. "It's no fair," he said, "for one pig to get more than another."

"Joseph needs it," said Labe. "He's the littlest."

"Joseph!" repeated Josh. "Pa, Labe's calling a pig after a man in the Bible."

"Could call thee after one," said Labe darkly.

"Thee better not," said Josh, having a good idea he would not be called after any one nice. Then with a sudden inspiration of his own, he said, "Thee's a prodigal son. Consorting with swine."

Jess, roused from contemplation by the hullabaloo at his side, said, "Boys, we're going to build us a new house."

"Logs?" asked Josh.

"No siree," said Jess. "White clapboard."

At breakfast Jess raised the house before their eyes. Laid the foundation with one motion of his hand and built up the walls with another. Traced a lacy line with his fingers and there was gingerbread galore around the gables, rich and intricate. Lifted his eyes and there was a weather vane on the roof; lightning rods, and a bell in a little house of its own to call the men in from the fields.

"Kin I ring the little bell?" asked Sarah.

"The very first ring," said Jess, "I promise thee."

"Thee can't reach the rope," said Josh, looking with distaste at the dribblings on his sister's chin.

"I'll hold thee up, Sary," said Labe.

"Will we have a dining room to dine in?" asked Mattie.

"We will have a dining room to dine in, a sitting room to sit in, a cooking room to cook in and sleeping rooms to sleep in. For everything we do there will be a special room to do it in."

"What'll we do in the parlor?" asked Josh.

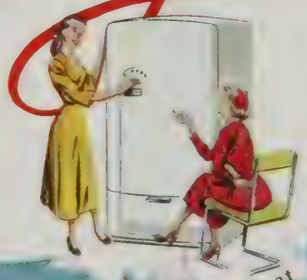
Jess looked at Eliza.

"In the parlor," said Eliza, "—which comes from the French word parler, meaning to talk—we will talk."

"Yes," said Jess, "in the parlor we will parler, meaning to talk."

He spooned deeply into the cold dewberry cobbler left over from the night before.

(Continued on Page 241)



"Wanna know something? Not all girls are dopey."

Get Gibson and get Everything

"Foods are changing. Home life is changing. If you want features that fit modern housekeeping needs—get Gibson!"

Get DOUBLE FEATURE: FREEZ'R LOCKER, FRESH'NER LOCKER

Twin compartments at the top are the Gibson Double Feature—the Freez'r Locker and Fresh'ner Locker. Freez'r Locker freezes and stores 40 pounds of frozen foods. Fresh'ner Locker keeps salads, cold desserts, beverages. Between the two lockers is a full-width shelf for extra ice cubes—or storage for flat meat cuts.

Get COLD MODULATION:

Cold Modulation gives each kind of food its own proper blend of cold and moisture, to preserve flavor, tenderness, vitamins and weight. Gibson provides Cold Modulation from the Freez'r Locker at the top to the Dew-Temp vegetable locker at the bottom — plus dry storage for crisp crackers and cereals in the floor level Tilt Bin . . . the modern way to keep modern foods!

Only Gibson gives you Ups-A-Daisy, plus four 7-speed top units, two GIANT units, Super-Speed cooking, two ovens, and automatic cooking.

Get
1. UPS-A-DAISY
2. FOUR SURFACE UNITS
3. TWO Giant UNITS
4. Super-Speed COOKING
5. TWO OVENS

COOK EVERY MEAL EVERY DAY Automatically

1. UP, it's a giant 7-heat Super-Speed surface cooking unit. DOWN, it's a 7-heat deep well cooker that really deep-fat-fries, and safely!
2. All four Gibson range units are 7-speed (not 5).
3. Two units are giants (2100 watts maximum).
4. You get penetrating Super-Speed cooking . . . convenient, holds vitamins, saves weight, improves flavor.
5. One is handy size for economical one-dish meals. single layer cakes or a couple of pies. One is banquet size for big dinners . . . either is Automatic! Set it, go away, come back, dinner's ready! Perfect for busy homemakers and employed folks.

The Gibson Automatic Food Center

Plan to have Gibson at the heart of your home—for good!

The Range—The Refrigerator—The 15-ft. Freezer—The Upright Freezer

GIBSON REFRIGERATOR COMPANY

GREENVILLE, MICHIGAN

Copyright 1949, Gibson Refrigerator Co.

GOWN — CECIL CHAPMAN HAIR — M. TON SCHEERS

How proud the moment

AMID A SHOWER OF COMPLIMENTS from your guests, you take up your journey along the road to social success. Your glorious Westmorland Sterling Silver, rich and warmly gleaming, proclaims your faultless taste. The guests whose opinions mean most to you recognize at a glance this lovely solid silver's intrinsic value and handsome styling.

You entertain with new assurance. You know that, from design to hand-finishing, your Westmorland Sterling embodies the skills of silversmiths who are among the world's finest. Westmorland patterns never "go out of style" . . . are never discontinued. Always, your Westmorland Sterling will give you entree into a social world reserved for those who appreciate lovely possessions.

Yet several plans make it convenient for every girl to own heavy Westmorland Sterling. The trained specialist in sterling silver who shows you Westmorland's patterns right in your home will explain them to you. Westmorland Sterling, New Kensington, Pennsylvania.

THE SOLID SILVER YOU SEE AT HOME. BY APPOINTMENT

This Rams-Head Mark Means Highest Quality in Sterling Silver

(Continued from Page 238)

a had given them a strange setout for ıkfast: leftover cobbler, new potatoes ed in their jackets, and cream gravy.
had kept her head bowed so long when returned thanks that he'd considered ng her a little tweak to bring home the that the gravy was getting cold. Cold bler was one thing and cold gravy an-
r. But when she had lifted her face, ing with thankfulness and pride, and , "Children, thy father is going to build new house," he was glad he had thought er of it.

low she said, "When does thee plan to t?"

n Jess' mind the house was already so oughly built that the word "start" nded strange. Start? Why, there it d! Weatherboarded, shuttered, wind-of, snowproof, the storm howling round ide and they inside, snug and warm and in the least bunched up.

Today?" asked Eliza, not one to loiter dream house.

ess emerged into the log cabin. "Cer-ly," he said. "Postement never yet
ed a rooftree."

What's the first
g to be done?"
d Eliza.

Go to Vernon," said
, "and get Joe Kim-to figure on the ding. Pay him a n fee and get him ome out, see what ber'll need cutting.
in an order for dows and hardware says so."

Thee have money
all this?" asked
a. "All this feeing ordering?"

I got enough to w honesty of intent,
way," said Jess,
nd after harvest.
e. Oh, this ain't card house, Eliza.
leaping without cing. This is someig I've had in mind
some time. Just
n't dawned on me day for it had ne."

What I would like,"
Mattie, squinting
o the distance,
ould be a little, dia-
nd-shaped window.
little teensy, dia-
nd-shaped window
peer through."

hey could all tell
t she was peering through it that very ute, but what she saw none of them ld say.

y noon Jess and the two boys were in buckboard, halfway to Vernon. Eliza packed them a noontime snack and seen n off.

Thee just hold things down here," Jess l her in high spirits, "and by nightfall ll be back, Joe Kimball's receipt in my ket and the cornerstone as good as laid."

he June sun was directly overhead as y drove along. Heat waves shimmered ss the ripening corn, and shadows atted at the base of trees and shrubs.
Dolly wore a second set of harness out-
d in sweat around the set used for pulling.
e in a while she twisted her head sides as if trying to catch Jess' eye. Failing o this, she would let out her breath in a g, damp, weary snort. Labe inspected the k such a snort deposited upon his bare arm.

"Horse breath," he concluded, and no one tradicted him.

he sky was deep blue, quite empty except re on the horizon great clouds rose up distant, snow-covered mountains. A hawk flew out of the woods, then hung overhead inspecting the travelers and screaming with energy.

"Could a hawk eat a man?" asked Labe.

"Of course not," said Josh.

"If the man was hawk size," said Labe,
"and the hawk man size?"

"They ain't any man-size hawks," said
Josh flatly.

Labe hung for a time over the edge of the buckboard, watching the right front wheel pick up the soft dust, carry it upward, then let it fall back in two soft downward-falling runnels.

"My stomach's a-growlin'," he said, as if this were news to anyone.

"When a hog's stomach growls, the weather's going to change," Josh told him, his mind still on swine.

"You boys hungry?" asked Jess.

"I'm hungry," said Labe. "That's why my stomach's a-growlin'."

"Thee keep a sharp lookout," Jess told him, "for a likely place to stop and we'll pull up and have a bite to eat."

Labe saw a likely place almost at once,
the sandy curve on the far side of the ford at Bee Crick. They were at the top of the hill which led to the crossing when he pointed out the spot and the man who had already stopped there. "It's dinnertime," he said.
"There's a man already eating."

He was out of the buckboard before its hind wheels left the water, and while Jess took Old Dolly out of the shafts, he inspected the traveler.

After a little of this the traveler said, "I'm a man."

"Thee is a very neat man," Labe answered politely.

He was. On the ground in front of him and held down by four stones was a piece of white goods which served him as a tablecloth. On this cloth were crackers, cheese and a dish of stewed pieplant. A cup and saucer awaited the coffee which was just coming to the boil in a pot supported by a little trivet.

"I try to be neat," said the traveler.
"The wilderness round about me, least I can do is tame myself."

Labe looked up and down Bee Crick. It was not his idea of a wilderness, though the man before him was so orderly he made the festoons of wild grape, the peeling sycamore bark, the ragged clusters of elderberry look wilder than he had ever seen them before.
The traveler was a small man, peak-nosed, lantern-jawed, with dark, furry hair. In the heat of midday he wore a cloth coat, and a collar held up close to his overhanging chin by a wide, lapped-over tie. He was not sitting in the sand, any which way, but on a smooth little box, painted yellow, and over by his light spring wagon his two horses, bays with black switch tails, ate their oats from a larger box, also yellow.

"That your pa and brother?" he asked Labe.

Labe nodded, his eyes still too busy to give his tongue much chance. The traveler, he thought, looked like a raccoon: shiny, black, bright-eyed, point-nosed. Labe almost expected to see him dip his sliver of cheese in the crick before he ate any of it.

"Going to town?" the stranger asked.

"To Vernon," Labe said, giving his eyes a little rest.

WITH THE CHILDREN

When our six-year-old came home from the village, bearing five-cent candy and gum gifts for the entire family I asked him where he got all the money for his purchases. This is his story: "It was very easy to get the money. When we got to the village Charlie remembered he hadn't called his mother from our house. He knows how to use a telephone slot but he didn't have a nickel so he asked a man walking by for a nickel so's he could call his mother. Right away the man smiled and gave him a nickel, so he called his mother and told her we were watching the decorations being put up in the village. Well, after that we asked lots of men getting off the train for nickels so we could telephone and once in a while we called up our friends so we didn't lie all the time. It was very funny though; every man we asked gave us a nickel, at least, but not one woman gave us anything. I guess they were all mothers and could tell by our faces we were playing a game."

"I hate a locked door—it gives me a kicking feeling."

"She is a very trustable woman. When I asked her if I could steal some of her grapes she told me to take what I needed, then she went right in the house. You have to be nice to ladies like that."

"Doesn't a cooky jar look sad when there are only crumbs in it?"

—KATHRYN COFFEY GLENNON.

BATHROOM ENSEMBLE COURTESY OF HYGIENE SHOWER CURTAIN MFG. CO., INC.

I staged a complete transformation of my bathroom—and the only props I used were new metallic Velon film shower curtains in opposite corners of the room, hung from ceiling to floor. Along the ceiling on two walls, I draped two pairs of ruffled Velon window curtains in graceful swags to give interest and elegance to my high, narrow old bathroom. Two more pairs formed vanity skirt and chair cover.

Only Firestone Velon gives you pattern excitement, supple drape and fabric-like texture that brings new decorator beauty to your bathroom, without architectural changes.

Velon* is utterly waterproof and washable—won't crack, turn gummy or brittle. Velon's colors, whether sparkling metallics or sheer pastels, stay fresh through years of wear.

Insist on seeing the "Firestone Velon" label on hundreds of exciting, practical home accessories at department and variety stores everywhere.

©1949 FIRESTONE PLASTICS CO. *TRADE MARK

"Picked a hot day for it."

"We're in a hurry."

"Yeh?"

"We're building a house."

"Yeh?"

"White clapboard," said Labe, "with diamond-shaped windows."

"House," repeated the stranger, and he got to his feet as Jess approached. "Be a pleasure if you'd join me in a cup of coffee," he said.

"Thanks," said Jess. "I'd appreciate it. It'd help wash down the ham and bread."

"I'll fetch a cup. I take for granted these two chaps won't be drinking?"

Labe tried to look like a coffee drinker, but Jess said, "Warm milk's their strongest tipple."

When the traveler returned with the cup he said, "My name's Leutweiler; Herman Leutweiler."

Jess held out his hand. "I'm pleased to meet thee, Friend Leutweiler. I'm Jess Birdwell, and these are my two young'uns, Joshua and Laban."

"Mr. Birdwell, boys, it's a great pleasure," said Mr. Leutweiler.

The boys stood pushing the warm sand up between their bare toes; Jess brought forth their spicecake, bread and ham; Mr. Leutweiler poured the coffee.

Jess rolled himself up a piece of driftwood, nowhere near as fancy as Mr. Leutweiler's painted box, but just as comfortable for s ting purposes. After he'd filled the bo hands with meat and bread and had a sip two of Mr. Leutweiler's black coffee, he sa

"Thee from hereabouts, Friend Le weiler?"

"Nope. Just passing through."

"What does thee think of our country

"Too ambitious," said Mr. Leutweiler.

"Ambitious?" asked Jess.

"Climbing. Where I come from th ain't so much perpendicular."

"Where's that?" Jess asked.

"Ohio."

"Ohio? Thee know Belmont County

"Like the palm of my hand. Ain't a crea or crevice I can't trace."

"I was born there," Jess said.

"Well, well," said Mr. Leutweiler, "a me passing through less than two wee ago."

"Thee happen to see the Milhouse They're kin to my wife."

"Nope. But the Copes, next door, I d see."

"Know them well," said Jess. "How d thee find them?"

"In sorry case. Very sorry case." M Leutweiler shook his head.

Jess took out his pocketknife and divid the spicecake into four substantial sla He handed them round, balanced delicat on the blade of his knife.

Famous Family Welcomes a Newcomer!

JOHNSON'S COTTON TIPS

Come to join Johnson's Baby Products!

MOTHERS! Now you can buy for your baby the new, better cotton tips—made by the makers of your favorite Johnson's Baby Products!

Johnson's Cotton Tips offer you

Greater protection for your baby! New Johnson's Cotton Tips come to you absolutely sterile!

Made of the same fine Red Cross* Absorbent Cotton that you keep in your medicine chest. Tips are spun on the stick—stay firmly anchored!

Extra convenience in use! Thrifty double tips are ideal for cleansing; for applying Johnson's Baby Oil or Lotion.

Handy new drawer-type box makes Johnson's Cotton Tips easy to get at—protects them. Add Johnson's Cotton Tips to baby's nursery tray—today!

*No connection whatever with American National Red Cross.

Johnson-Johnson

29¢ and 49¢ SIZES

BRINGING UP PARENTS

DR. BARBARA BIBER, Consultant
Child Psychologist, Bank Street Schools, New York

AT three a child generally loves to help around the house. He likes to imitate grownups and wants to be a part of their world of real work. And he can be a help—in a job that suits his abilities, such as emptying ash trays or dusting. But parents, sooner or later, must learn the facts of life too—and the fact here is that the mother's-little-helper stage doesn't last. For children soon find so many things of their own to interest them that they need a lot of reminding to carry out responsibilities. Sometimes that's our fault. We forget their interests are expanding, and we continue to give them chores that have become routine and dull. Then it's good for their independence to promote them from mother's assistants to jobs they can carry through alone, such as cooking a dish for dinner right from the recipe, or putting up a really needed shelf. (Don't insist on too perfect results, though, or you may frustrate your budding workmen and defeat your purpose.) In spite of everything we do, however, let's remember that most children in the middle years shirk as well as work. But that doesn't mean they'll always be like that.

"Hey, cut it out. Mommy said emptying ash trays is my job."

actical · economical · comfortable a favorite with the youngsters!
KING of the OYAL MOUNTED OLO SHIRTS

ring is here—warm weather coming! ss your youngsters in FLAGG Character o Shirts.
Made from the finest cotton yarns, spring edle knit for extra quality, FLAGG Polo rts will take the roughest treatment ungsters can give them—and that's plenty! Other popular heroes that will help com-te your youngsters' summer wardrobe: ptain Marvel, Red Ryder, Little Beaver d Gene Autry. Get several of each! In pular colors and sizes.
Buy them at chain or depart-nt stores everywhere. For ther information write: Flagg-man Company, 93 Worth St., w York 13, N. Y.
PRICE ABOUT 69¢
FLAGG
THE BANNER BRAND
POLO SHIRTS

TEND BABY this safe easy way

the Tumbleproof
BEE-TENDA*
FETY CHAIR
ow better than ever, new light colored -baked finish Lift-Up Sanitary, easy to n, no food-catching ves. Seat adjusts to 4 tions with baby in it. more play space. mium finished metal rest.
original safety chair, and balanced to ent dangerous falls. g-easy seat. Folds for ing. Doctor-approv-used by a million es.

Fun for Feeding

Converts to Play Table

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
NOT SOLD IN STORES
Only the genuine Babee-Tenda bears this name. See phone book for authorized agency. Or write today for FREE FOLDER
* Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.
© 1949 BT Corp.

Babee-Tenda

bee-Tenda Corp., Dept. 5-5 0 Prospect Ave.,
eveland 15, Ohio
Please send free illustrated folder.
ame_____ ddress_____
ty, Zone & State_____
In Canada: 686 Bathurst St., Toronto

"Have some sauce to dampen it," urged Mr. Leutweiler. He piled half the stewed pieplant on his own slice, pushed the saucer with what was left toward Jess.

"Thanks," said Jess. "It'll be a treat."

"Can we swim, pa?" asked Josh, swallowing the last lump of his cake.

"Thee can wade," said Jess. "Don't see how thee can make out to swim in water not knee deep."

"Have to lay down and roll over to wet yourself on both sides," said Mr. Leutweiler.

Josh stepped modestly behind a bush, divested himself in a twinkling of shirt and breeches, then lunged into the knee-deep, dapple-lighted stream.

"Young Adam," said Mr. Leutweiler. "Naked and unashamed!"

"Adam never was that age," Jess reminded him.

"You're right, Mr. Birdwell, you're right. I was disremembering Adam's lack of a childhood."

"Always thought Adam might've handled his boys better if he'd ever been a boy himself," said Jess. "Worked under a handicap as it was."

"Ain't you swimming?" Mr. Leutweiler, plainly uninterested in Adam, boy or man, asked Labe.

"Yes," said Labe. But he didn't move from the smooth birch against which he was leaning or chew any faster on his cake.

"Little pitcher," observed Mr. Leutweiler.

"Only way to get filled," said Jess. "Stomach and mind at that age both a-growlin' for something to chew on."

A time of stillness settled on the bend at Bee Crick. Josh lay in the sun-flecked water like a scrawny log, his head on a boulder and the water moving across him like a shifty coverlid. Jess and Mr. Leutweiler had their second cups of coffee and let them wash down in the content of knowing that it was all the coffee there was, and that it was enough. Labe swallowed the fine-grained cake, crumb at a time, relishing the balance between sharp and sweet. Trees grew so close about them that to see the sky Labe had to tilt his head backward. It was as if they had fallen to the bottom of a well, deep and green, quiet and hot. Now and then in passing over or around some rock Bee Crick made a watery sound: glup, glup; and the men drinking their coffee seemed to be imitating it: glup, glup. Labe shut his eyes for a minute to see if his ears could tell Bee Crick from coffee.

"Asleep on his feet," observed Mr. Leutweiler, taking the rest of his coffee in one swallow, and Labe, unsleeping, said to himself, Coffee.

Jess slapped at a mosquito. "When mosquitoes give over stinging for biting, it's a sure sign summer is here."

MR. LEUTWEILER put down his coffee cup. "Lucky for the Copes, it is," he said, but said no more.

"The Copes' misfortune kind of private?" Jess ventured after a while.

"Least private misfortune a man could have, I reckon," said Mr. Leutweiler.

"Death?" asked Jess. "A death in the family?"

"Nope. I left the Copes all well. Downcast, but in good health."

"They's all Friends," said Jess. "Not likely any of them's made a misstep?"

"Misstep?" said Mr. Leutweiler. "What the Copes are suffering from is the lack of a step."

Jess scraped a thread of pieplant from the saucer; a steel-colored darning needle flew low over the crick, stitching air to water; Josh rose from his bed, dripping; Labe explored the spaces nearest his mouth for a missed crumb.

"Reckon we ought to be pushing on," said Jess, trying his knees for bend.

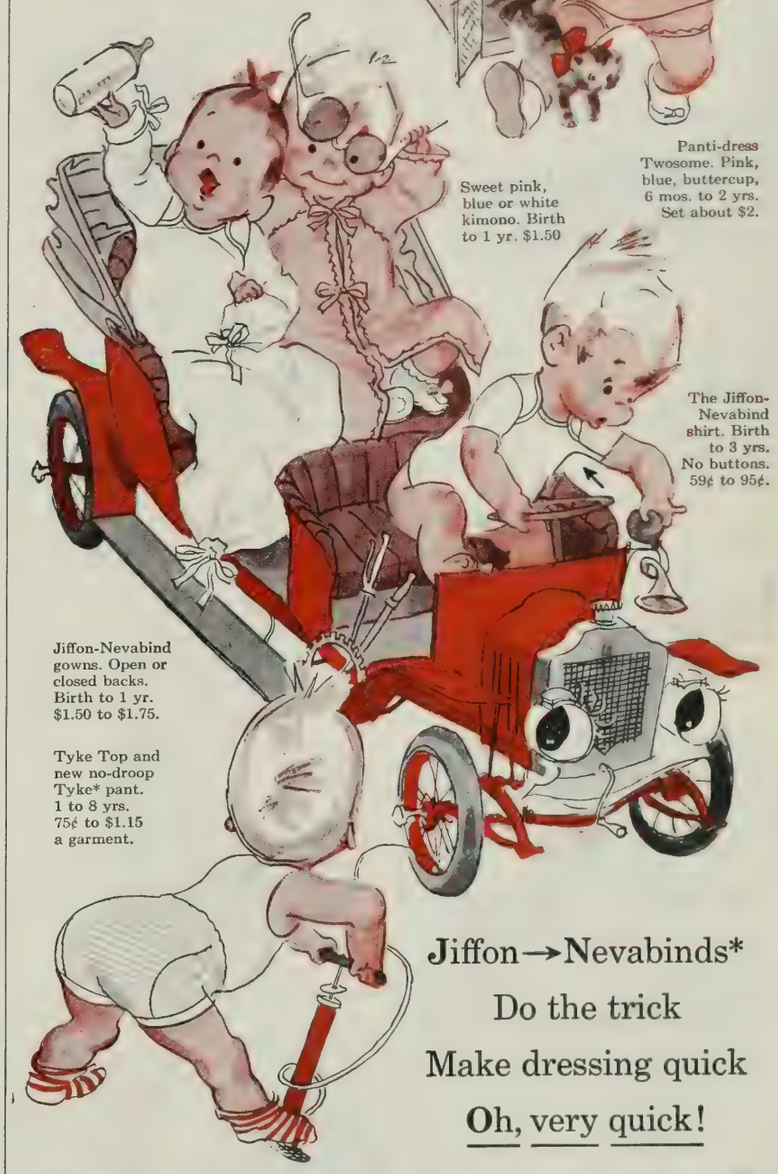
Mr. Leutweiler spoke and he straightened them out once more. "The Copes' house burned."

Jess was taken aback at the news. "It was a brand-new house."

Mr. Leutweiler agreed. "Less'n a year old. White clapboard."

"A total loss?"

Off to Summer
Baby goes
In Carter clothes,
Carter clothes



Panti-dress Twosome. Pink, blue, buttercup, 6 mos. to 2 yrs. Set about $2.

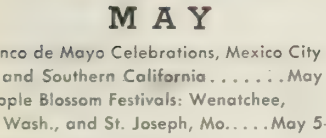
Sweet pink, blue or white kimono. Birth to 1 yr. $1.50

The Jiffon-Nevabind shirt. Birth to 3 yrs. No buttons. 59¢ to 95¢.

Jiffon-Nevabind gowns. Open or closed backs. Birth to 1 yr. $1.50 to $1.75.

Tyke Top and new no-droop Tyke* pant. 1 to 8 yrs. 75¢ to $1.15 a garment.

Jiffon→Nevabinds*
Do the trick
Make dressing quick
Oh, very quick!
*®



"Trigs" shirts and shorts, made like Dad's! 4 to 16 yrs. 65¢ to $1.75 each.

At good stores. For store near you, write The William Carter Co., Needham Heights, Mass.

Millions are doing it—swinging their travel plans away from the midsummer season into the pleasant months of Spring, when all outdoors comes to life in a burst of bright blossoms. Spring travel by Greyhound means delightful weather, first choice of accommodations in hotels and resorts, fully relaxed riding—and the lowest fares in transportation! This Spring offers a tempting list of gay events in all parts of America. Pick the place—and go Greyhound!

MAY

Cinco de Mayo Celebrations, Mexico City and Southern California.....May 5
Apple Blossom Festivals: Wenatchee, Wash., and St. Joseph, Mo.....May 5-7
Kentucky Derby, Louisville, Ky.....May 7
Cotton Carnival, Memphis, Tenn..May 8-15
Lilac Festival, Spokane, Wash.....May 9
"Open House" in Kentucky....May 11-15
Helldorado Days, Las Vegas, Nev.....May 12-15
Tulip Time, Holland, Mich.....May 14
Tulip Festival, Pella, Iowa.....May 15
Raisin Week, and West Coast Relays, Fresno, Calif.....May 15-21
Bach Music Festival, Bethlehem, Pa.....May 20-21

Fiesta de las Flores, San Luis Obispo, Calif.....May 21-22
Lincoln Days, Lincoln, Neb.....May 21-24
Maritime Celebration, Savannah, Ga.....May 22
Apple Blossom Festivals, Nova Scotia May 27
500-Mile Auto Race, Indianapolis, Ind.....May 30

JUNE

Summer Ice Shows, Lake Placid, N.Y. June 4
100-Mile Auto Race, Milwaukee....June 5
Blessing of the Fishing Fleet, Gloucester, Mass.....June 6
Rose Festival, Portland, Ore.....June 8-12
Buccaneer Days, Corpus Christi, Tex. June 11
Folk Song Festival, Ashland, Ky....June 12

Golden Rose Ski Tournament, Mt. Hood, Ore.....June 12
Dairyland Festival, Watertown, N.Y. June 14
Lilac Time, Mackinac Island, Mich..June 15
California Rodeo, Salinas, Calif. June 16-19
Bunker Hill Celebration, Charlestown, Mass.....June 17
Rhododendron Carnival, Roan Mountain, Tenn.....June 19
Rhododendron Blossoms, West Virginia.....June 24
Redwood Empire Centennial Exposition, Eureka, Calif.....June 24-26
Indian Sun Dances, Ft. Hall and Pocatello, Idaho...late June-early July

A LOT MORE TRAVEL for A LOT LESS MONEY

GREYHOUND

"Total. Burned to the ground, including barn and outbuildings. Nothing left to show the place was a site of human habitation except two brick chimneys and a privy pit."

"A new house," Jess said, thinking. "What was the cause?"

"Lightning. Line storm."

"Most dangerous kind."

"All lightning's dangerous," said Mr. Leutweiler severely. He gazed overhead so searchingly that Labe, following his glance, half expected to see a blue-white bolt launch itself downward. "Chain, sheet, ball. Each capable to kill and burn."

"Ball lightning ain't usual."

"Fortunately. A man who looks on ball lightning is not the man he was before he seen it."

"Thee ever see it?" Jess asked.

"Once," said Mr. Leutweiler. "Age ten. Summer evening of a day like this. Me on the upping block. Distant storm, but nothing near. Or so I thought. Then there it was, knee-high, a traveling ball of light."

"How big was it?" asked Jess. "This ball?"

"About as big as a good-sized gravy bowl."

"What color?"

"Green and blue. Some yellow. Quivering and wiggling like a mess of maggots."

Josh came up out of the stream and leaned against the tree Labe had been leaning against. Labe leaned against his father and looked over his father's shoulder at what Mr. Leutweiler seemed to see.

"Rolled along knee-high like a devil's head escaped from hell. I watched it, shivering in every limb. Moved like it was guided by a string straight in the open door of our house."

Mr. Leutweiler paused and Jess said to Labe, "Stand back, stand back. Thee's pushing me over."

"And there," said Mr. Leutweiler, "it exploded."

"Inside the house?"

"Inside."

"Do any harm?"

"Bodily, no. Mentally, yes. It sent my poor mother out of her mind."

Jess was shocked. "A pity," he said, "a great pity. She recover?"

"Don't know her own name to this day," said Mr. Leutweiler. "But ball lightning's uncommon. What does the great harm is chain. Chain reaches down for you. Chain reaches down for your house. Your new house. Just built. Everything you value in it, to say nothing of the money tied up in it. Wife and children asleep. One bolt. Then you're alone in the world like Adam here and no spare rib to start over with."

"Well," said Jess, "there's misfortunes in the world, there's things that can't be avoided, acts of God."

"Acts of God! It ain't God's acting so much as man's not acting causes most trouble. With a lightning rod lightning ain't anything but Fourth of July in heaven. W God made lightning He expected mar make rods."

"Copes have rods?"

"Not a rod. When Amos Cope was p ning his building I said to him, 'Order y rods! Before you fell a tree or drop a ple line, order your rods.' But not Amos. He plenty of other places for his money—as ain't? So he would raise his house first his rods second. I was on my way with t when his house burned."

"Thee sell lightning rods?" asked J "Sell!" said Mr. Leutweiler. "Mr. B well, at the age of ten I dedicated mysel the saving of life, reason and property means of the li ning rod. Whenc I see a fine wh two-story or t story-and-a-h house sitting ami its fields, untouch by lightning, fan in full possession its senses, the m on their bones scorched, the wh shebang protected one of my gilded b topped rods, that, Birdwell, is reward."

"I don't reci thee gives a away," Jess said.

"For the comp I collect cert sums," Mr. Le weiler told him.

"Thee have so rods with thee?" J asked.

"I have."

"Thee have a objection to looking at them?"

"Yes, sir, M Birdwell, I do. Yo boy here by char let drop you w building a house. N my rods are all spoi for and there's no your seeing them a hankering for th for nothing."

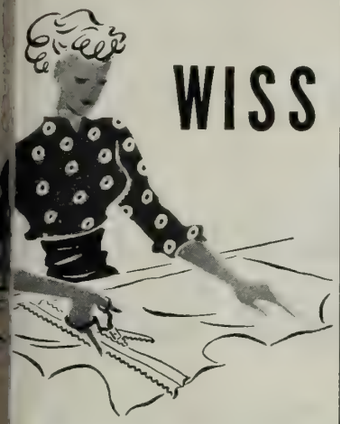
"Needn't hanke Jess told him, "be forewarned."

"No, sir," said M Leutweiler, "y couldn't help yo self. You'd see th rods and want a p and I'd have to t you down. Then y house'd burn as more than likely, t hilly country bre ing thunderstor the way it does, a who'd you blan Herman Leutweil No, sir! I don't wa the burden of yo burning on my sho ders. Not your wh clapboards curling up and your lace c tains blazing and your wife and child like not trapped in an upstairs bedroom. No, sir Mr. Leutweiler, in the heat of his feelin rose and gave his yellow box a solid kick. H turned his face away from Bee Crick as it ran flame and not water. He looked toward the sky, the source of the lightni he was sworn to defy and circumvent. "N sir," he said.

Labe felt like plunging into the cric clothes and all, so real were Mr. Leutweile storm and flames. He could see the r tongues licking up the lace curtains, hear h mother and Sarah trapped upstairs and cr ing for help.

"I'd appreciate looking at the rods pure as ornaments," Jess said, "and with t thought of their chief use."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★



My Son

BY DOROTHY SMITH

Today, my son, you are eleven years old.
Having reached this milestone in your life, you have achieved wisdom
Consistent with your years.
A small-boy wisdom which is slowly and secretly blending into the learning
Of the man you will one day be.
Already your face has thinned
And molded itself into the planes and shadows
That will one day be the face of your father.
And at night, when you lie asleep, defenseless and vulnerable,
Your eyes closed on the secret thoughts of your dreams,
On your face your babyhood still shines.
Even then I see the future in the shape of your cheek as it lies,
Pillowed on your hands.
Your hands, which are still grubby with small-boy mischief,
Already growing long-fingered and sensitive,
Reaching beyond me, into the future.
The future which your father and I have tried so patiently and lovingly
To shape into a shining reality for you.
Yes, even when you were but a small thing
Growing beneath my heart.
Even then our dreams were of the man you would one day be.
For within your being, though you are unaware,
Lies all the wisdom and hope of the unborn ages,
Waiting patiently and surely for their fulfillment.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Pink of Perfection...

WISS

NKING SHEARS

e a look in tailoring and dress-cing shops . . . you'll see Wiss king Shears, first choice of pro-ionals. Wiss Pinking Shears are ones you want, too . . . they put rofessional ravel-free finish on ry fabric edge as the pattern is . For all light fabrics, use Model . . for heavy or light fabrics, use del A. But be sure you always in-on Wiss . . . famous for quality more than a century.

r all ht fabrics
el C $7.95
Leather Case, $1.50

all brics
el A $10.95
New Lightweight Aluminum Model

WISS
Quality for more than a Century

SS & SONS CO., Newark 7, N. J.

"Purely as ornaments, and if they had no more use in the world than a firefly in hell, my rods are to houses what tails are to cocks: an end-all and come-see. There they stand! There they flash! Saying to passers-by, 'This house is complete,' and to the Lord, 'I'm working with You.' Putting it that way, Mr. Birdwell, I don't see why you shouldn't have a look at them."

After Mr. Leutweiler, his yellow boxes, his trivet, his coffeepot and cups, his bay team with their black switch tails, and his lightning rods—minus two sets, one each for house and barn—had left the bend at Bee Crick, Jess and Labe took off their clothes and had a roll in the Bee Crick waters. Josh, dressed, sat on a stump and watched them. It was midafternoon or a little past, midges hung in clouds above the shallow pools, birds skimmed low to eat them, shadows crept out from under trees.

"It's going to be dark before we get to Vernon," Josh told the swimmers.

Jess rolled over, face up. "We've given that trip up," he said.

"Thee told mother," Josh said reprovingly, "thee'd have the receipt in thy pocket."

"Haven't got the wherewithal at the minute to buy myself any more receipts," Jess admitted.

"It was going to be a cornerstone," Josh, who had a good memory, said sadly.

"Going at it the other end to," Jess informed his son cheerfully. "Going to build up to meet the lightning rods."

"How can thee do that?" Josh wondered.

Jess didn't answer, but Labe could see it being done, the beautiful, golden balls high against the blue sky and beneath, progressing upward to meet them, the shining white house.

"Pa can do it," he said confidently.

Josh was unconvinced. "Mother'd like a cornerstone better."

Jess rose from the stream and the air, warm as it was, struck a little cool on his dripping body. "Thee's more'n likely right," he said.

Jess awakened with the feeling that he had slept only a minute or two, but the moon which did not rise until past midnight was already shining, a mild, spent moon which laid yellow beams across the floor boards. He awakened slowly, feeling a little heavy-hearted and lonely, and not knowing why. Then, turning toward Eliza, he found that she was not beside him and he sat up and looked about the room. It, too, was empty of her, and he swung his feet out of bed, stood noiselessly, stepped into his pants and walked out into a world lighted by so small a segment of the moon it seemed more a private lantern lit for him and Eliza than a public moon for all.

Only where was Eliza? He walked barefooted down the front path between the rows of bleeding hearts; little colorless clots they were in the dim light. The smell of woods and fields came to him strongly after his half night in the house, and he realized anew how wild the earth was and how far out on its edge he and Eliza lived. He did not want to call out and awaken the children so he walked on, silent and peering, thinking what if, as in stories he had heard, Eliza had simply vanished, disappeared without a sign, proved to be a dream. What would he do? He did not know. He needed Eliza to advise him, tell him how to get on without her. An owl dropped out of the Juneberry tree, fell softly like a lump of snow, then suddenly whooed. There was a movement, at the sound, across the road against the trunk of the yellow poplar, and Jess walked across the road to the tree and put his hand on Eliza's warm arm. She had on her nightdress, was leaning against the tree facing the log house, and crying.

"Eliza," Jess said. "Eliza."

Eliza turned away from him, tried to burrow her face into poplar bark.

"Eliza," Jess said, "it's the smallest kind of a setback and no waste of money. They're A-one rods, pretty to look at and useful. A

(Continued on Page 247)

Butterick Pattern No. 4905 make this dress faster with

DOT SNAPPERS ®

A few blows of the hammer and these laundryproof fasteners are on to stay! Professional attaching tool included – they're the same DOT Snappers used on fine ready-made clothes. No buttonholes to make, no buttons to pop off. Quick and easy to fasten. At your favorite notions counter. John Dritz & Sons, Dept. LHJ-5, 1115 Broadway, New York 10, N. Y.

Ask to see Dot Snapper Buckles for adjustable overall straps

DOT SNAPPERS KIT
$1.00 a box
Refills 25c

free Send stamped addressed envelope for free booklet, "Dritz Tips for Home Sewers"

ANOTHER DOT PRODUCT OF UNITED-CARR FASTENER CORP.

SHADOW PRINTED Organdy GRADUATES WITH HONORS!

BY Fisba FABRICS

Advance Pattern 4951

Fisba's exquisite white florals on sheer white organdy . . . what an inspiration for graduation! Also smart shades for blouses, party frocks, children's dresses, etc. Bellmanized finish, so no starching needed for permanent beauty!

FREE HOME SEWING BOOKLET with short cuts and helpful tips. Send for your copy!

FISBA FABRICS, INC., Dept. L, 70 Worth St., N.Y.13

Eliminates basting!

Hold rick-rack or braid in place for sewing with "Scotch" Cellophane Tape. Sew right through the tape, then peel it off. A roll of cellophane tape in every room will save you many steps every day.

GET THE TAPE HABIT...it's thrifty!

For quality, insist on –

REG U.S. PAT. OFF.
SCOTCH BRAND
Cellophane Tape

SEALS WITHOUT MOISTENING
TRANSPARENT AS GLASS

ANOTHER 3M PRODUCT

MINNESOTA MINING & MFG. CO.
ST. PAUL 6, MINN. © 1949 3M CO.

ST IRON IT ON

STO-NAME TAPE
s work—needs no
ng A hot iron quickly asily makes the tape
f the garment or lin-that it cannot come aboratory tested for ering and dry cleaning.

black on white tape
ually cut and boxed
no COD's

150 for $2 — order now for boy or girl going to camp

H PRODUCTS Dept. L5 274 Pearl St., N. Y. 7

"Nothing you buy gives you so much, yet costs you so little"

These good-looking eyes are good-seeing eyes—kee and quick at critical work . . . at close near-poi office chores, shop jobs, reading, writing . . . shar and sure also at distance seeing—while driving, viev ing the movies, playing a favorite game . . . The eyes don't miss a trick!

What does it cost to be able to see so well . . . an comfortably? Precious little, actually. Thanks t countless scientists and craftsmen working in th realms of light, glass, metallurgy, plastics, refraction surgery and dispensing, American eye-care is the bes in the world . . . yet represents the biggest bargai in your budget!

For a very little more than you paid in pre-wa 1940, you get today's better services, skills and ma terials . . . far greater values than your dollars ca buy of most anything. So while the protection of you eyes and the preservation of irreplaceable eyesigh are utterly beyond the question of price, it cost little to keep your eyes fit for all the seeing job you ask them to do for you. So very, very little fo so great and precious a human need!

BETTER VISION INSTITUTE, INC
630 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK 20, N. Y

(Continued from Page 245)

nth more, two at the most, and the oney'll be on hand to go ahead just as we anned."

"I don't care about thy old lightning rods," id Eliza. She was leaning against Jess w, not the tree. "I wish thee'd bought a ousand."

"Why, Eliza," Jess said. "Eliza."

"What were we ever thinking of, Jess," e asked, "planning to leave the log use?"

"Thinking of?" Jess repeated. "Thinking how we'd outgrown it. Thinking of how d had its day. Thee said so thyself. Thee is the one suggested building."

"I was wrong," said Eliza. "This is our me. All the children were born here. When were first married I'd walk out at night to is tree just so I could look back and see w pretty it was, lamplighted and shining. was proud of it, Jess. And it's been such a od tight house to us. Other people've had ouble with their houses: chimneys smoke, ors stick, roofs leak. But our house never d give us any trouble, Jess, and I never n leave it."

"Ain't so weathertight now," Jess reinded her.

"Thee go on, Jess. I don't blame thee. ee put up thy big clapboard house. Lightng rods, diamond windowpanes, whatever ikes thy fancy. Thee can live in it and attie can keep house for thee. But I can't er leave the log house. It wouldn't be ght."

Eliza's tears were so plentiful they went ght through Jess' nightshirt to the skin. hen they lessened a little he folded down s nightshirt collar and wiped her cheeks y.

"Beautiful night," he said, putting his llar back. "Beautiful, mild, balmy night."

"Is it, Jess?" Eliza asked, lifting her head look about.

"Hasn't thee seen?" Jess asked. "Beautil, summer night."

Katydids, even so far into the night, were still sounding.

"Listen," said Jess. "Hear them? Katydids sounding at midnight, that's a sure sign of full summer."

Eliza did not answer.

"Summer for us, too, like thee said," Jess reminded her.

Eliza gave a few more sniffs.

"Don't hear any Rome Beauties crying because they ain't apple blossoms, does thee?"

"No," said Eliza.

"Don't hear any little hoot owls hooting to get back in their shells?"

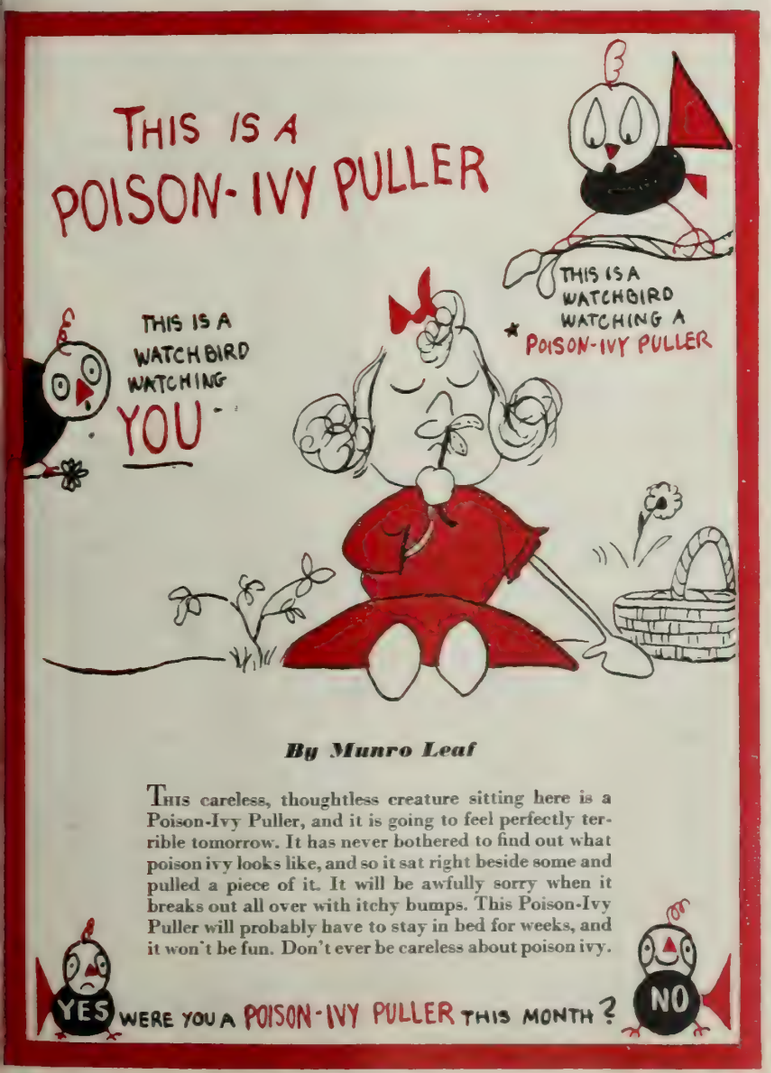
"No, Jess."

"No little oaks scrunching down trying to be acorns again?"

"Was I scrunching down," Eliza asked, "trying to be an acorn?" There was a little sound of laughter in her voice, but Jess was serious.

"Thee was when I came out and found thee. Scrunching thyself down mighty low. No house is our home, Eliza. A house is just a makeshift place at best, a place to fit our size and be comfortable in. The earth's our rightful home. And the sky."

Jess started back across the road, Eliza leaning on his arm. Overhead the sky was garlanded with stars and underfoot the earth was dusty but soft and warm.

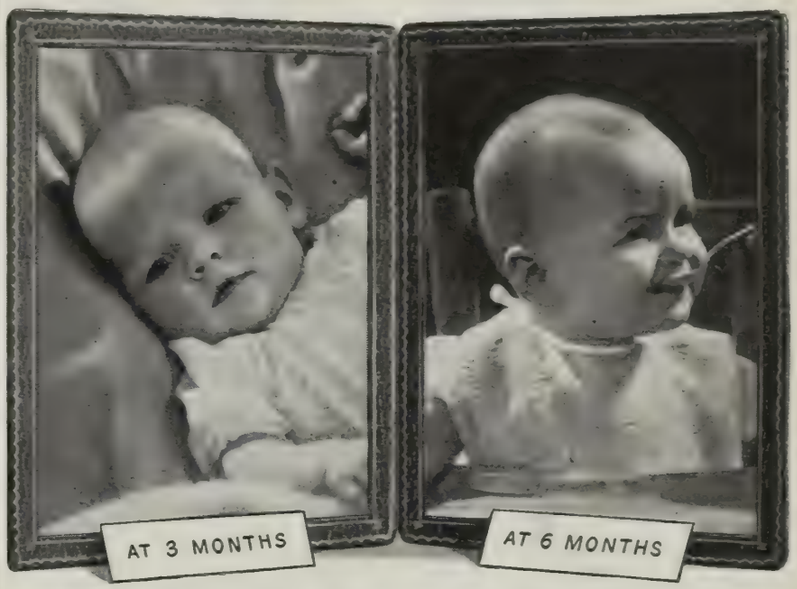


"Jess Birdwell," exclaimed Eliza, "is thee barefoot?"

Jess looked down at his feet. "I was too anxious about thee to take time for shoes," he said.

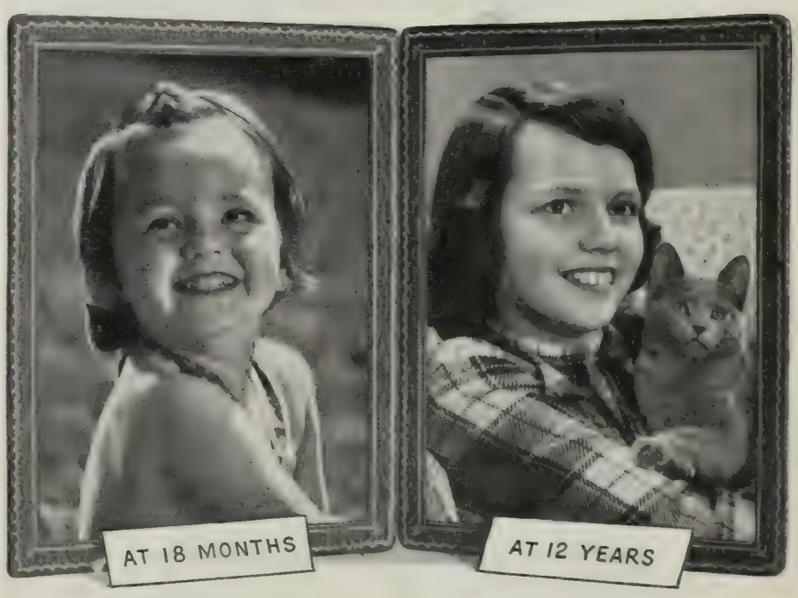
"Thee'll have to wash thy feet before thee can get back in bed," Eliza told him.

"Well water's going to be mighty cold, this hour of the night," Jess objected.



Eliza didn't reply, and when they reached the house she fetched him the washbasin. But as Jess recoiled from the first dipperful of water she said, "If thy feet are cold afterwards, Jess, thee can warm them on mine." THE END

By Munro Leaf



THIS careless, thoughtless creature sitting here is a Poison-Ivy Puller, and it is going to feel perfectly terrible tomorrow. It has never bothered to find out what poison ivy looks like, and so it sat right beside some and pulled a piece of it. It will be awfully sorry when it breaks out all over with itchy bumps. This Poison-Ivy Puller will probably have to stay in bed for weeks, and it won't be fun. Don't ever be careless about poison ivy.

The Growing Story of a Baby Sitter!

Baby sitter Sally Thomas was a pink 'n precious bundle, age 3 months, when she met her first love—Clapp's Baby Cereals. Her doctor recommended Clapp's Cereals because they are 3 times richer in iron than unfortified, home-cooked cereals. And did she thrive? Just look at the next picture!

Sally's world is full of wonderful adventures! And mealtime is one of them. What with 20 varieties of Clapp's Strained Foods to choose from—meals are bound to be interesting. And Clapp's method of pressure-cooking retains tempting flavor and color as well as vitamins and minerals.

Sally's strong straight back and sturdy little body are such gratifying proof that Clapp's Foods are a boon to babies. Sally graduated to Clapp's Junior Foods in her eleventh month. The easy-to-chew morsels were just right for Sally's new teeth—and the flavor was temptingly familiar.

Sally is just the charmer you'd expect her to be! A capable baby sitter, honor student, and Vice-president of the Pet Club. Her mother agrees Sally's glowing health and vitality owe much to her early Clapp's diet. So before your baby is another day older—start him on Clapp's. You'll be glad you did!

CLAPP'S BABY FOODS

THE FIRST IN BABY FOODS

Products of American Home Foods

She was a "Carnation Baby"... Now she's a "Carnation Mother"

MILLIONS OF GROWN-UPS are enjoying healthier, happier lives today because they were well-fed with Carnation Milk from the start. The "Carnation Baby" above is now Mrs. Daniel McCoy of Minneapolis.

MRS. McCOY with two of her four "Carnation Babies." She majored in Dietetics at college, so she has both scientific and practical knowledge of Carnation's value for infant feeding . . . and all milk purposes.

More babies are fed on Carnation than on any other evaporated milk

...according to nation-wide surveys. For almost 50 years, Carnation Milk has set the highest standards of whole milk nutrition, easy digestion, and absolute safety for baby feeding. No other milk is more strictly safeguarded; every drop processed under Carnation's control, in Carnation's own plants. Money cannot buy better milk for baby feeding, yet Carnation Milk costs so little! Give your baby the extra quality advantages of Carnation—the milk every doctor knows.

WRITE FOR "Your Contented Baby," 36 pages of helpful information. Carnation Company, Dept. L-59, Los Angeles 36, California.

Either lack of interest and energy or increased activity and irritability may be a hint of excessive fatigue in your child.

The Overtired Child

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
President, Chicago Board of Health

"BUT he never acts tired!" a mother protested to me recently when I told her that I thought her child was suffering from excessive fatigue. "Just the opposite, in fact," she went on. "He's on the go all the time—never still a minute!"

As in many other cases, I had a hard time convincing this mother that there are several different ways in which the child who is constantly overtired may respond, just as there are many different causes of the condition itself. Depending on the individual child's physical and temperamental make-up, and even to some extent on his surroundings, he may give way to fatigue by becoming listless and sleepy, or he may draw on his reserve of nervous energy and appear extremely animated or jittery. In both cases, however, the child is likely to be emotionally unstable—cross and irritable a great deal of the time and exploding into tears or temper displays on the most trivial provocations.

When the child shows signs of tiredness—lack of interest and energy, or excessive irritability—even when other evidence is missing, the first step always is a consultation with the doctor t see whether or not there is some physical disorder that may be back of the condition. An examination often reveals something of this kind. Enlarged adenoids, for example, may cause enough difficulty in breathing to involve extra effort and consequent fatigue, especially in the child from three to five or six years old. Sometimes the doctor finds a nutritional cause. Occasionally an infection, too slight to be noticeable in any other way, shows up, and offending tonsils or an infected tooth must be removed before improvement can be expected. In some cases anemia is discovered, and special diet or medication may be needed to overcome it. Once in a while, lack of secretion from the thyroid gland causes symptoms of fatigue.

In most cases of overtiredness that I have seen, however, no specific physical cause is found. The child is simply using up more energy than he has available. This is most likely to be the case during periods of rapid growth, and mothers should be especially watchful for signs of fatigue at these times. There are wide variations among children in the occurrence of these periods, of course, but spurts in the rate of growth commonly come at around five or six years of age, again at nine or ten, and again in early adolescence—at eleven to fourteen years.

Some youngsters wear themselves out by constant running and play. This happens quite often when a younger child is trying to keep up with an older group. In other cases, parents make the mistake of demanding too much of their children. In addition to school work, they so often have the child take dancing or music lessons, extra language lessons, and so on. Then the youngster has too little time for play and relaxation, and fatigue soon develops.

GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. The booklets will be sent monthly; be sure to tell us when you want the first booklet. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 25 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1346, sells for 6 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

FOR BABY

STERILIZED
Q-TIPS
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
SWABS

NO FINER SWAB WAS EVER MADE

29¢-49¢-98¢ All Stores

Q-TIPS, INC.
LONG ISLAND CITY, N. Y.

Knitted for Softness

Turknit
BABY BATH BLANKETS

Towels • Wash Cloths • Bibs

Absorbent and economical

Protect child from drafts after bath

Won't chafe tender skin

At leading stores

Turknit matched gift sets make ideal presents.

FREE

A copy of our 36 page pictorial booklet "How to Bathe and Dress Baby" will be sent free. Write

PUTNAM KNITTING CO.
Dept. L, Cohoes, N. Y.

AT LEADING DRUG COUNTERS

MOTHERS... Combat Diaper Rash

Many mothers know from experience that Dennison Diaper Liners help protect baby's skin from diaper rash. These Liners neutralize a primary cause of common diaper rash... shown by tests in nationally-known public health laboratory. Dennison Diaper Liners save you hours of diaper scrubbing...can be flushed away when soiled. Economical, too—180 DENNISON LINERS $1.00 at department stores, infants' shops and drug stores.

Send for FREE sample and be convinced.

Address: DENNISON, Dept. S-1
Framingham, Mass.

Name .....

Street .....

City ..... State .....

Dennison DIAPER LINERS

Mothers say "They're Wonderful"

Whatever the cause of fatigue, some way must be found to curb or control the tired child's activity and to provide additional rest.

The mistake mothers make most frequently when the doctor's orders call for more rest is to try to force a nap, rest period or early bedtime on the child. Often the mother's well-intentioned efforts to follow instructions result in such strict rest-time rules that the child feels he is being disciplined or penalized for being tired. This is bad for several reasons. First, it is unfair; the youngster must not have any feeling of guilt about the necessity for rest. Second, it will not accomplish the desired result; the child who is forced to endure a rest period that seems to him to be the equivalent of a jail sentence is not likely to relax and benefit from it. Moreover, the child who is compelled to rest or go to bed early will soon come to think of resting and going to bed as evils to be avoided, or at least protested against, at all times. Such a child may then struggle against resting automatically, even when he is tired and wants to rest.

To prevent these harmful effects that may result from enforced rest, mothers must use all their loving inventiveness toward making the idea of resting or going to bed attractive and pleasant to the child. In very young children this is comparatively simple: naptime or bedtime can be reserved for favorite reading-aloud or storytelling treats. Many times I have seen my own little grandchildren start to object at mention of the word "bed," then break into eager smiles when the word "story" was added. I'm sure every parent has had the same experience.

Nations have recently been led to borrow billions for war; no nation has ever borrowed largely for education. Probably no nation is rich enough to pay for both war and civilization. We must make our choice; we cannot have both.

—ABRAHAM FLEXNER.

Even older children enjoy being read to; the nine- or ten-year-old who has been reading himself for three or four years may still be glad to lie quietly while mother or dad reads, enjoying not only the story but also the soothing sound of the parent's voice and, subconsciously, the idea of being the object of so much attention.

As a matter of fact, attention is the key to success for any plan to make resting and bedtime attractive. The mother who looks upon these periods as opportunities to escape from the child's demands is going to have trouble. The mother who takes time to plan and manage the rest time carefully will be rewarded by the pleasure of watching the child gain in health and vigor.

For the older child, quiet games help make the daytime rest a pleasant time. Cutouts, scrapbooks and coloring are all good occupations for rest time, but these and other activities should be selected carefully to avoid anything that will be stimulating instead of relaxing. The early-to-bed rule may be made more palatable by establishing a routine which calls for a warm bath at bedtime, with a few minutes of mild bathtub play. For the little child, there is a wide selection of rubber and plastic bath toys that will help make the occasion a joyful one.

The other half of the treatment needed by the overtired child—control of his activities—must be worked out with the aid of the doctor and teacher. It is not wise to make demands that needlessly restrict normal play with other children. Often teachers can cooperate by arranging a few minutes of relaxation during the school day for the child who is known to need it. Other parents will respond, too, and help work out a program that will provide normal social outlets without strenuous exertion. The mother who sees her child returned to full, robust health and happy disposition will know that all her pains to make this result possible have been worth while.

THE END

Big attraction! Room for action!
Real, deep "seated", sat-isfaction!
GIBBS are gay for Play and Bed,
"Hit the Nail" right on the head!
Lysbeth Boyd Borie

Only the Best for Your Baby

Start them right with Gibbs and follow through the teen age years. Every Gibbs Garment is made of selected Fine Quality Combed Yarn for long wear. Easy to launder . . . stays soft . . . holds shape. Exquisitely tailored to prevent binding or chafing . . . allows plenty of room for action. At leading Department Stores and Specialty Shops.

GIBBS UNDERWEAR CO. Empire State Bldg., New York 1, Phila. 34, Pa.

"When you buy cheese, say, "Swift's Brookfield, please!"

Choosey cheese lovers call for Swift's Brookfield American

• • • that delicious blend of peak-ripened Cheddar, tempered with mellow, mild cheese. Served as it comes from the package, or featured in all your cheese recipes, you'll find how well it represents "the cheese taste most people like most"—always that same delicious flavor—when you ask your dealer for Swift's Brookfield American.

Swift's Brookfield Dairy Foods

Says Martha Logan
OF SWIFT'S HOME SERVICE

"Here is one way to get action out of a recipe! One recipe . . . six uses."

Martha Logan's SIX-TRIX Rarebit Sau

(makes about 2½ cups)
- 1 pound Swift's Brookfield American (grated)
- 2 tablespoons butter
- ¾ cup top milk
- 1 egg or 2 egg yolks
- ⅛ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon dry mustard
- 1 teaspoon Worcestershire
- Dash of Tabasco, if desired

Heat together over hot water, cheese, bu ter, half of the milk. Stir often. Combi slightly beaten egg with seasonings and mainder of milk, and add to melted chee Stir constantly, and cook until thick a smooth.

Now for the Six Tricks:

1 Serve over crisp, buttered toast.

2 Pour over cooked cauliflower, asparagu or broccoli. (A sure-fire way to get you family interested in eating vegetables!)

3 Serve on toasted English muffins, toppe with broiled bacon.

4 Combine with cooked macaroni or rice and bake.

5 Use, hot, as a "slip-over" topping or warm apple or mince pie. (A crowning touch that's so delicious and so natural you'll never serve these pies without it.)

6 Spread, cold, on toast and brown under broiler.

Where finest butter is needed most—on biscuits, muffins, bread or toast—ask for Swift's Brookfield Butter.

Swift's Brookfield eggs —nature's perfection, guarded by Swift, all the way to your dealer's store.

FIGHTING CANCER

(Continued from Page 23)

iteers have not visited to leave literaon cancer, or reached through "a borhood program."
one of these "neighborhood programs"
Bransford, a rancher's wife and mother ven children, realized that she might the very trouble the cancer pamphlet ibed. The county home-demonstraagent was pointing out that one danger l was "irregular bleeding or discharge any body opening." Mrs. Bransford l whether her symptoms might denote r and was told that no lay person qualified to judge. Next day, with her nd, John, she drove to Winfield.
's. Bransford proved to have cancer of ervix. Treated for six weeks with X-ray e tumor clinic, then hospitalized for lays for local application of radium, she restored to normal health with the ability of many years of usefulness to amily.
f the demonstration agent hadn't helped realize I needed to see a doctor," Nina sford will tell you, "I might not be up around today." She looks about her ful ranch kitchen, with the big table or the evening meal—with nine places.
and John Bransford feel they have to be thankful for.
uise Kesler's transportation committee young marrieds drove Nina Bransford d from the clinic every other day for ix weeks' treatment. This is a regular of the American Cancer Society's vol-r program in Winfield. "It would have mighty hard on John to leave the stock hree hours every other day," Mrs.
sford explains. All doctors and hospitals and call upon this driving corps.
wley County's volunteer organization is dered by the American Cancer Society model. Mrs. Kesler's workers have pros in 300 clubs and organizations, visit an average of 588 farm homes each y and have organized the 722 members of 4-H clubs, the Boy and Girl Scouts the Girl Reserves into teams which assis distributing literature and collecting fu
They also arrange programs, show films have 17 active cancer-dressings units wh made 14,403 dressings from October, 19 through December, 1948.

Mrs. Kesler began in 1942 on the fu solicitation campaign. First year's col tions in Winfield amounted to $900. ( previous year's figure was $119.) To Cowley County subscribes $5930.51 (19 figure), or 237 per cent of its assigned quo

"Winfield is the drivin'est town." M
Charles Honnold, city commander of American Cancer Society in Winfield, sa proudly. "Red Cross, Christmas seals, Co munity Chest—people support them al
Close co-operation between the various ci and service agencies in town and cour makes it easier to keep up a high standa of community organization.

The fund-solicitation campaign for American Cancer Society is done by wh
Winfield citizens call their "block" syste begun during the war. "Each of the 307 r dential and 24 business blocks has a war who is responsible for contacting ev house in her block. A record of individ donations on every community drive is k at the Civic Center. This is very helpful us in judging the effectiveness of our driv
Mrs. Honnold points out.

In the beginning, Louise Kesler went fr door to door in her town to recruit work
She had been urged to work in the Ameri
Cancer Society by Mrs. Tom Stewart,
Wellington, Kansas, now state commande the Field Army. "Even my friends did like to talk about cancer then," Mrs. Ke recalls in her soft Texas voice which 28 ye of living in Kansas have not altered. "Y

MESSAGE TO PARENTS

If Polio Hits Your Area This Year

Avoid crowds and new contacts in trains, busses or boats, if possible; avoid crowded places where you may be close to another's breath or cough.

Avoid overfatigue. Too active play, late hours, worry, irregular living schedules may invite a more serious form of the disease.

Avoid swimming in water which has not been declared safe by your health department.

Avoid chilling. Take off wet clothes and shoes at once. Keep dry shoes, sweaters, blankets and coats handy for sudden weather changes.

Keep clean. Wash hands after going to toilet and before eating. Keep food covered and free from flies and other insects. Burn or bury garbage not tightly covered. Avoid using another's pencil, handkerchief, utensil or food touched by soiled hands.

Quick Action May Prevent Crippling

Call your doctor at once if there are symptoms of headache, nausea, upset stomach, muscle soreness or stiffness, or unexplained fever.

Take his advice if he orders hospital care; early diagnosis and prompt treatment are important and may prevent crippling.

Consult your chapter of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis for help. Your chapter (see local telephone book or health department for address) is prepared to pay that part of the cost of care and treatment you cannot meet—including transportation, aftercare and such aids as wheel chairs, braces and other orthopedic equipment. This service is made possible by the March of Dimes.

Remember, facts fight fears. Half or more of those having the disease show no aftereffects; another fourth recover with very slight crippling. A happy state of mind tends toward health and recovery. Don't let your anxiety or fear reach your children. Your confidence makes things easier for you and for others.

f the family!

REFRIGERATOR

ience, safe food preservation!

le shelf arrangement makes food-storing fun, ig easy. Here's more shelf area, more crisper eat drawer, bigger freezer-locker; truly thrifty echanism, 5-year protection plan. Perfection-ur IH Super De Luxe is your friend—for keeps!

IRMA HARDING
International Harvester Home Economist

NAL HARVESTER FREEZER

your day of rest, too! Sleep late, go to nnies to the children. You've plenty of zer in the family! This 11.1-cubic-foot prepared for Sunday, Monday, and al- pounds of food—all kinds—on hand. day with an IH Freezer at home!

onal Harvester Refrigerators and s at your IH dealer's today!

'Harvest of Stars," now on NBC, Sunday afternoons ormick Farm Equipment . . . Motor Trucks . . . Industrial Power

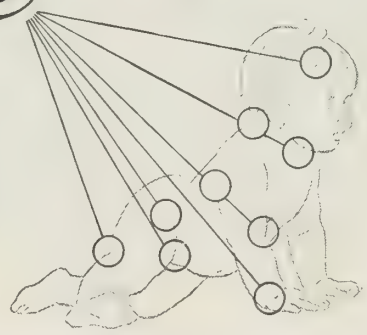
HARVESTER

eezers

IH REFRIGERATOR RECIPE

Festivity Fruit Cup



Combine equal parts of fresh sliced strawberries and cubed fresh pineapple. Add sugar to taste and chill. Arrange in sherbet glasses and pour chilled ginger ale over fruit just before serving. Garnish with a small scoop of mint sherbet and a sprig of mint.

FREE Refrigerator Recipe Book! Write International Harvester Co., Dept. E, 180 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Ill.

COPYRIGHT 1949, INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY

Are you protecting your baby at these 9 vital points?

Mother, can you face some hard facts about your baby's delicate skin? Then know that cradle cap, urine irritation and friction soreness can be sheer torture for a baby.

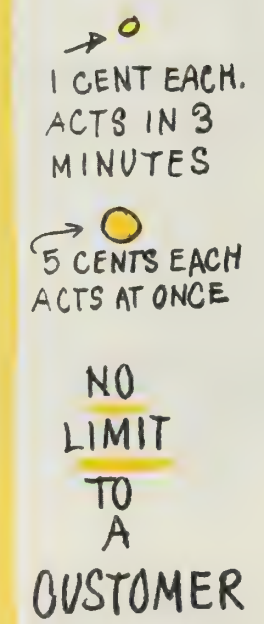
Yet it's so easy to ward off many common skin enemies with Mennen Baby Oil protection! After every bath, smooth this gentle oil all over baby's body. Use it at every diaper change. It imparts a silken-like film that guards against dryness, chafing and diaper rash. It helps keep baby cooing, comfortable, safe!

MENNEN MAKES TWO KINDS OF BABY OIL

Both Mennen oils are good for your baby—choose the one you prefer!

NEW MENNEN BABY OIL with Lanolin
Enriched with lanolin, a special soothing emollient akin to the skin's own oils. Helps maintain healthy baby skin, acts to prevent chapping and dryness. This oil is delightfully flower-fragrant.

MENNEN ANTISEPTIC BABY OIL
Contains an antiseptic ingredient for protection against surface bacteria. Used in over 3400 hospitals to help prevent infectious rashes. Has a pleasant, medicinal scent.



Mennen baby oils

The Sunshine Stin

BY JAN WEYL

MY brother Tom started work when he was four, b didn't get into business for himself until he w nearly twelve. Nan and I, who were six years old had kept him tied up with our firm of business, Su shine Enterprises, Inc. He peddled papers for The Su shine News, delivered cookies for The Sunshine Bak shop, took bets for The Sunshine Bookmakers, a chased cats for The Sunshine Detective Agency.

His own business—The Sunshine Stink Bomb Fa tory—was by far the most profitable for Tom, and ca after nearly a month of intense study. Mother and d had given him a chemistry set for Christmas, and we thrilled when he spent all his spare time—and money on chemicals. They undoubtedly had visions of a futur great scientist in their midst. Actually, their young geni was busy producing the deadliest stink bomb ever to l exploded in upstate New York.

Tom studied smells in cahoots with an associa scientist, Ned, also aged twelve, and the worse the sm got, the happier the scientists were. When they final found a smell deadly enough, they decided to go in business, not so much for the financial profit involve as for the joy of making stink bombs. They were pla ning to be bachelor career men, and felt they'd found t perfect lifetime business.

The Sunshine Stink Bomb formula was a close guarded secret. Although the formula was fairly simple $HCl + FeS = H_2S$ (hydrochloric acid plus iron sulphi equals hydrogen sulphide)—only Tom and Ned were the know. The formula also contained another ingredie responsible for an even deadlier smell which the stin bomb scientists created and never were able to duplica when their original supply ran out. The final solut was placed in a gelatin capsule which dissolved in wat after three or four minutes, emitting an odor resemblin rotten eggs, but twice as electrifying. Both scientis were equipped for their work with special nose plug Mother and dad knew nothing about the discover but the news spread quickly among the younger set, an orders began to pile in. Every child in the neighborhoo wanted a complete set of stink bombs, to be used o teachers, family and friends. And if they had the price- a penny for a gelatin bomb and five cents for an eve deadlier bomb which worked immediately if crushed- they could have as many bombs as they wanted. A customers were required to take an oath in blood n to tell where they'd got the bombs, but they did th gladly. Owning a set of stink bombs had definite soci assets.

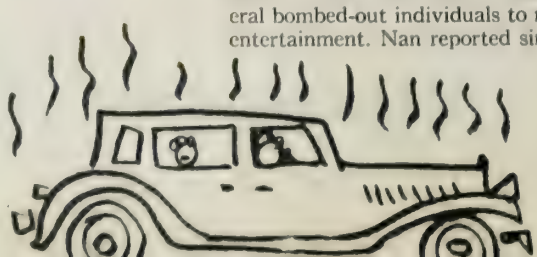
The Sunshine Stink Bomb Factory was tentativel set up in a small spare room in our attic, where the mai advantage was its geographical distance from the rest the house, guaranteeing that any escaping smells woul escape my parents. The attic was purely temporary an way. As soon as they accumulated some capital, th Sunshine Scientists planned to build a factory on th vacant lot down the street, leave school, and dedica their lives to the manufacture and sale of stink bomb

Nan and I received official notification of the new Su shine Enterprise when we each received a letter fro Tom at our respective colleges asking permission to u the name "Sunshine" for a new enterprise. We both a swered, "Of course," since our Sunshine days were ove but I had no idea what the business was until a wee later, when a large registered package arrived for me a the college post office. Any package is an event in colleg but a registered package—I felt sure it was an old famil pin I'd been promised for my birthday.



I didn't wonder long about the pin. Right in the to of the box was a note from the sender:

Dear Jan: Thanks loads for letting me use the name "Sun shine." We opened The Sunshine Stink Bomb Factor yesterday, and boy, are we doing business! I'm enclosin twenty-five stink bombs for you to use on your teachers an anybody else you don't like. If you want any more, just le me know.

Love,
TOM.

Inside the box were twenty-five stink bombs, eac wrapped in a separate piece of cotton.

Stink-bomb activity at Mount Holyoke College wa limited to one experimental explosion which wreake havoc on the fourth floor of Mead Hall, and forced sev eral bombed-out individuals to resort to the library fo entertainment. Nan reported similar success at Smith shine Stink Bombs were beginning to bring wide- l results back home at the same time. Four sections sixth grade at Academy Street School had to aban- asses for the afternoon because of the simultaneous ion of several stink bombs in each classroom. e and Molly Young, who spent their entire savings dollar on one hundred stink bombs, exploded them every room in their house just before dinner one —and the Youngs were on the town for several Up the street, Mrs. Cushing stepped on a bomb her daughter Caryl had dropped accidentally on ar floor. And my grandmother complained of a e smell in her house after Tom visited her one day. unshine Factory assembly line, consisting of four ar-olds, was forced to work overtime.

mb Factory

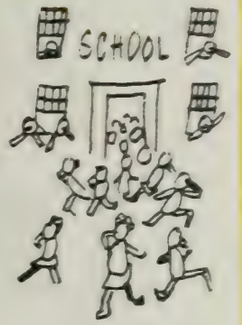
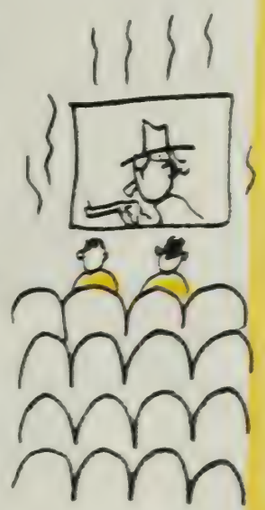
pired by the success of the sixth-grade explosion, seventh-grade class decided to try the same thing. ve minutes before the "bombs away" signal was iled, the teacher announced, "I've heard that sev- ink bombs were exploded in the sixth grade yester- n case anyone in this class has similar ideas, I just to say that any person exploding a stink bomb in will be expelled. Thomas Weyl, that means you."

ombing was canceled because of bad weather. it didn't matter anyway, because the Sunshine ists, always on the lookout for ways to promote product, had thought up a new "Operation Stink " which they expected would bring about an un- dented demand for stink bombs. Tom and Ned and al cohorts, each armed with three stink bombs, pro- d into the movie theater one crowded Friday night, their favorite spot in the balcony, exploded their s, and inside of ten minutes were able to take their f seats. By benefit of nose plugs, they enjoyed the e from the front-row center of a balcony that was ally uninhabited—even by ushers. The manage- had no proof against them, their customers were essed, and in anticipation of bigger and better movie tions, the sale of stink bombs boomed.

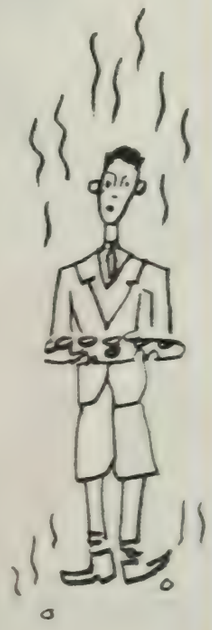


pired by their success and the promise of the future, unshine Scientists opened a new arm of their busi- The Sunshine Nose Plug Factory. Nose plugs were ible only to buyers of more than twenty-five stink s, but this didn't stop many customers. The plugs, n encased in cloth, sold nearly as well—and fast— nk bombs. The Sunshine Factory treasury, after a week and a half of business, showed a profit of ten s, and enough chemicals had been laid in to make undred more bombs.

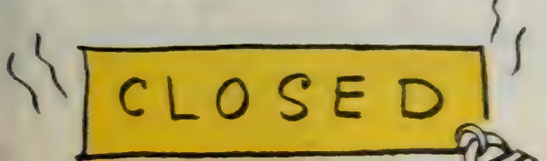


t an obvious business cycle was beginning to catch th the Sunshine Scientists. As more and more stink s exploded, the number of parents interested in g and annihilating the manufacturers increased. and Ned were smart enough not to explode any s themselves, outside of those used for experi- al purposes, and this threw their own parents off the . When dad questioned the ever-increasing activity attic, Tom explained that he'd formed a scientific to work on experiments. Dad was impressed and him subscriptions for two scientific magazines.

e movie manager was the party most interested in ling the source of stink bombs, however. After ex- ns had virtually cleared his balcony three times, he d his ushers with nose plugs, and began searching e door all teen-age individuals who looked sus- s—an undertaking so vast that he was forced to y two ushers to serve as stink-bomb detectors.

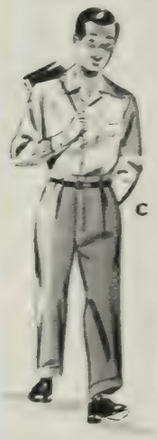


en then the Sunshine Stink Bomb Factory might continued in business indefinitely if it hadn't been unfortunate accident. Mother and dad were giving ge dinner party for a customer of my father's, and worked particularly hard to have everything just . Tom was dispatched to the living room to pass pés. This was the mistake of the evening. Two nt-exploding stink bombs slipped out of his pocket, st stepped on them, and the room was in an uproar. opening all doors and windows and ushering his s to the sidewalk to air off, dad grabbed Tom and her they made an expedition to the attic.



e Sunshine Stink Bomb Factory never exploded or ufactured another stink bomb or nose plug. Factory erties were put under lock and key, and Tom was d from the world for two weeks. Dad suggested that nd another field for experiment—perhaps perfume.

NOSE PLUGS



Tom SAWYER

"APPAREL FOR REAL BOYS"

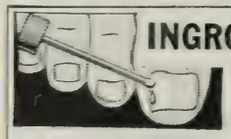
The label millions of Mothers know means superior Value

Look for, ask for the famous Tom Sawyer label when shopping for your boy. It means longer wear, greater satisfaction in your boys' apparel. Yes, Tom Sawyer means Value, Quality and Wear!

B is one of many fine boxer sets you can buy as sets or just the pants or shirt. Longie or short pants. Sport or knit shirts. Ages 2 to 10.

C. Prep and junior slacks. Many different materials and colors. Preps have new, popular continuous waist. Preps: 25 to 32 waist. Juniors: 4 to 12.

A is one of many different types of colorful sport shirts in the Tom Sawyer line. Top values! Junior sizes — ages 2 to 12. Boys sizes — ages 6 to 20.



Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Write Dept. 18 for dealer's name

Tom SAWYER

"APPAREL" For Real Boys

ELDER MANUFACTURING COMPANY • SAINT LOUIS

INGROWN NAIL Hurting You?

Immediate Relief!

A few drops of OUTGRO bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allowing the nail to be cut and thus preventing further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

CERAMICS

FREE CERAMIC and MOLDS

EASY and FASCINATING FREE INSTRUCTIONS

PLASTICS CAMEO

4637 N. Kedzie Ave., Chicago 25, Ill. Plasticast Company (Dept. 6) P. O. Box 987 Palo Alto, Calif.

100,000 WORD INK-WELL BOTTLE

Holds All the Ink You Can Keep Fresh

Sized and styled to the home desk . . . . . .

Actual size 10¢

So much Fresher it starts a fountain pen a split second Faster

At last comes an ornamental Ink-Well Bottle in classic fluted glass that does justice to the handsome desk. This is Sanford's new 100,000 Word Ink-Well Bottle . . . that holds all the ink you can keep fresh—yet not a wasteful amount that dries out.

It holds Sanford's Penit Ink—the ink that starts pouring without sputtering, even after prolonged exposure of the pen. Penit was especially developed for controlled flow, to write evenly and without flooding —to improve the performance of any fountain pen.

Prevent rust-thickened ink and important specifications it may cause—keep ink fresh by using the new Ink-Well Bottle of Sanford's Penit. Ask your retailer today.

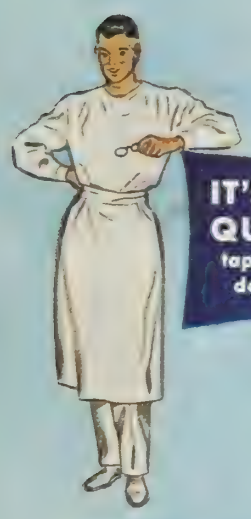
SANFORD INK COMPANY • HOME OFFICE: BELLWOOD, ILL. • NEW YORK OFFICE: 500 FIFTH AVENUE

Ask for Penit INK

FOUNTAIN PEN INK

In The Ink-Well Bottle

NOW... for your convenience



THE NEW Curity WET-PRUF* 3-CUT ADHESIVE TAPE

Just the size tape you need when you need it . . . that's what the brand-new, handy-new CURITY 3-Cut Adhesive Tape gives you.

No need to cut or tear. Here are the 3 most-needed widths, all cut and ready on one handy spool. And equally important, all three are CURITY WET-PRUF . . . the hospital-quality adhesive tape.

Get the new CURITY 3-Cut at your drug store today—it costs no more!

IT'S HOSPITAL-QUALITY . . . CURITY tape is used by leading doctors and hospitals!

EASIER ON THE SKIN
Proved by over 15,000 skin tests on humans!

IT'S HANDIER
3 most-needed widths always ready on one spool!

IT STICKS Instantly—
it's waterproofed!

Over Half a Centu of Adhesive To Leadership

COLORFUL GIFT IDEA!

Curity LUSTRIC

the "SEE-THROUGH" FIRST-AID KIT

NOW in RED, GREEN, BLUE, PLAIN

It's wise precaution to have a CURITY LUSTRIC First-Aid Kit on hand. Transparent plastic, now in attractive red, green, blue or plain! Perfect for gifts, CURITY LUSTRIC is ideal for home, office, garage, car, workshop. ONLY $1.50

IT'S REFILLABLE with CURITY First-Aid supplies at your drug store

IT'S REUSABLE for fishing flies, sewing supplies, jewelry, buttons, cosmetics, curlers, odds and ends

Curity
Gauze Bandage
Adhesive Tape · Handi-Tape
Absorbent Cotton
Cotton Picker · Lisco Pads

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

BAUER & BLACK

Division of The Kendall Company, 2500 S. Dearborn St., Chicago 16

THE BATTLE OF THE BULGE

(Continued from Page 49)

Levity enraged him. Twisting his head till looked down on his posterior, he muttered mally, "It's awful."

'What's awful about it?" Selina asked.

'Oh, stop asking questions." He turned a pairing look on his mother. "And what I going to do with this cowlick? I just can't to this dance with it standing up."

'I can fix that if you do what I tell you. ke your bath first."

When the sound of running water indied that Sam was out of earshot, Selina d, "I don't see anything wrong with him, you? I think he looks like Guy Madison."

'Who is he?"

'Why, mommy, he's a movie actor."

'Sam would love that."

'Don't you dare tell him. Promise?"

Her mother solemnly promised.

Presently, summoned by her son, Mrs. rks fastened a ivy black net on his np hair. He sat umefaced but demined in front of dressing table. Sea looked in to see at was going on d burst into deri- e laughter. Sam bloded.

'Get out of here."

'Oh, Sam, you look funny."

'Get out, I tell ı." He raised an n threateningly thout disturbing coiffure. Selina hdrew.

At last he was ssed and examin- himself critically the mirror. He ed to assume a disguished severity d succeeded in look- cross. He tried iling and quickly sed his mouth. His ther refrained m saying he looked fect.

"I think," he said, 'll ask dad to look over."

So they went to the ing room, where r. Parks was trying read the evening pers while Selina s practicing.

"Do I look all ht?" Sam shouted.

"You do." Mr. rks adjusted the spenders and flattened the handkerchief in e breast pocket.

Selina finished her polonaise with a bang d looked up. "Oh, Sam," she said, her gray es big with the adoration she usually kept ll concealed, "oh, Sam, you look beauti- l." She circled around him and then patted e shiny silk of his vest.

He pulled in his stomach. A slow grin read over his face. Gallantly he replied in s deepest bass voice, "Not half as well as u will look in your first party dress."

HEIR parents smiled at each other the way rents do when they see any proof of affecn between their children who, as everydy knows, behave like mortal enemies.

With an air of confidence, that an hour o Mrs. Parks would have considered imssible, Sam left for his party.

"Do we eat?" Mr. Parks asked, with some ason.

"Yes, it's in the oven. . . . Selina, get ashed."

For once, Selina did not delay. She had en invited to spend the night with Rosa artin's young sister. They were going to be lowed to stay up and watch the first dance. But this she had not found expedient to mention to her brother.

Mrs. Parks had expected to sleep late the next morning, but Selina rang the doorbell at half past eight. She had a tale to tell and she told it, jumping up and down like a beanbag. Mrs. Parks was dimly aware that the first part dealt with the decorations, food and music of the dance. But her coffee took effect by the time Selina got to the meat of her story.

"AND you should have seen Sam —— Mommy, are you listening?"

Mrs. Parks nodded with interest.

"He would only dance with this one girl. Though Nancy says it's very rude not to dance with your hostess. Rosa told her once. Is it?"

Mrs. Parks nodded her head again.

"This girl, her name's Betsy Williams—I've seen her at school—she had a black velvet dress with little buttons down to here, it was lovely and she looked pretty but not beautiful. Do you know what I mean?"

"Attractive, maybe?"

"Yes, that's it, but not very. I don't see why Sam is so—well, never mind. He cut in on her all the time. But he couldn't dance with her much because she's awfully popular. Even with Blackie Martin, and he's a senior. I don't see why, and neither does Rosa, Nancy says. But when other boys would cut in on him he would glare at them, and Betsy would look as if she was sorry, but she did that with each boy."

"Basic but sound," Mrs. Parks said.

"Then Sam would just stand there, watching her, stiff like this—look, mommy." Selina stood like a bird dog pointing. "And we didn't get to bed till it was all over. Mrs. Martin was so busy she forgot all about us."

"Why don't you go back to bed?"

"Oh, I'm not sleepy at all. I'm going to Sunday school, Nancy will be there. Could I have some breakfast? They weren't awake when I left."

Her mother was not surprised.

At eleven, Mr. Parks came down looking jovial. "I told Sam he could come down as he was," he said. "Otherwise, he'd never get under way."

Sam followed in his bathrobe but without his slippers, seemingly heavy with sleep. Mrs. Parks put sugar in the applesauce she was making.

"Gosh, mom, do you always put sugar in applesauce?"

"Yes." Now what was this?

"Then it's fattening," Sam said sadly, and with an air of martyrdom refused everything but his orange juice.

Mr. Parks ate heartily and then tried the counsel of moderation. He began with the Greeks and cited Montaigne and Jefferson in a scholarly way. Mrs. Parks saw that Sam was not with him. He was staring into space, deep in thought. Then he eyed both his parents speculatively. Now what was coming, or was it coming at all? she wondered. It came.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

New Bedford Song

By Dan G. Hoffman

Last night I dreamed, in my dark bed
(Loud was the wind outside),
I heard the words my true love said
(Deep, deep runs the tide):

"O Nell, my dear, be true to me
For one more crossing of the sea—
I'll bring you pearls from the Coconut Isles
And a silvery glass to catch your smiles,
A brooch of jade, an ivory comb
I'll bring for you when I come home."

Just one more voyage across the sea
And I shall be his bride.
But late last night, deep in my dream
(Loud was the wind outside),
I heard the gulls in the rigging scream
(Deep, deep runs the tide).

His ship pitched broadside in the gale
(Fast and deep runs the tide),
My true love's hands spun round the wheel,
O God, I wished him by my side!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Be glad there's something special about your hair —and give it the special care it deserves . . . every day!

Different hair problems need different care—the specialized kind of care you get with Ogilvie Sisters PREPARATION for DRY HAIR . . . or with Ogilvie Sisters special-purpose SHAMPOOS. If your hair is a problem—the right answer is Ogilvie Sisters specialized HAIR PREPARATIONS.

Ogilvie Sisters
HAIR PREPARATIONS
at drug and department stores

CASTILE SOAP SHAMPOO • CREME SHAMPOO WITH LANOLIN • PERMANENT WA SHAMPOO • CREME-SET • HAIRBRUSHES • POMADES • FRAGRANCES

Free! Write for "The Secret of Lovely Hair" to Ogilvie Sisters, 604 Fifth Ave., N. Y. 20, Dept. L-5

It's YOUR skin . . .

give it the best!

Your thoughts have a special meaning on

HASTI-NOTES

by RUST CRAFT

Let these Stylish Little Messengers give your personal notes an added charm. Each box contains twenty-four Rust Craft Hasti-Notes—three each of eight pretty designs—in the most exquisite colors. Created by Marjorie Cooper of the famous Rust Craft Artists' Guild. Available wherever Rust Craft cards are sold. $1.00 the box.

ASK FOR "STYLISH LITTLE MESSENGERS" HASTI-NOTES.

RUST CRAFT

BOSTON • TORONTO

Greeting Cards of Character

"Y-y-you see"—he stuttered a little in the stress of his powerful emotion—"you and dad only care about things of the mind. You've been wonderful about giving me things that school doesn't give ——"

"Such as?" asked Mr. Parks.

"Oh—ah—discussing ideas, criticizing my manners—things like that. But don't you see a girl wouldn't look at a fat boy. I've got to get thin first."

"I see." Mr. Parks turned the pages of his paper.

Mrs. Parks was too astounded to speak. He wasn't a "fat boy" by any means. She looked him over carefully. Her eyes reached his feet and, absent-mindedly, for she was thinking that he had to lose only about fifteen pounds, she told him that he had the blackest toenails she had ever seen.

"Don't you even get the idea?" Sam banged the table with his fist. "That's a detail. That's just dirt." He stamped out in disgust.

Mrs. Parks sighed. Her husband swore pleasantly. "What a manifestation of the tender passion! Does he mean he's not going to do anything about her till he's thin?"

"I don't know." Her children, she thought, were full of surprises: never catching things when they were exposed to them, and then coming down with something when you least expected it.

"It's medieval." Mr. Parks pounced happily on a category and played with it.

Trying to look Gothic herself, Selina entered the dining room. "Hello, father."

"Hello, daughter. How was church?"

"Fine."

"Was the minister for sin or against it?"

"Oh, daddy." Selina tried to look shocked. "Where's Sam?"

"Upstairs."

Selina scooped up a cinnamon bun and made a move to go.

"I'd let Sam alone today," Mrs. Parks said.

"I was only going to tell him that I prayed for him."

"I wouldn't," her father said, "unless you want a good clout on the head. And I, for one, wouldn't blame him."

Selina sank into a puffed-up silence. Mrs. Parks could feel her ticking with important news. Just to revenge herself on her father, she was capable of withholding it. Mrs. Parks tried a secondary target.

"Why did you pray for Sam?"

"Because Blackie Martin has Betsy sewed up."

"Would you care to elucidate that Delphic expression?" asked Mr. Parks.

"It's not my expression." Selina eyed him balefully.

That Saturday the Parkses' living room had the raffish air of the day after Christmas with its burned-out candles, stray popcorn and an overflowing wastebasket. The tree was lopsided because their cat had considered it worthy of investigation. Bits of ornaments were scattered over the floor. Mrs. Parks did not care. There were a new Audubon book and a new paintbox and she and Selina were painting birds.

SUDDENLY the front door slammed. This meant that the dedicated stranger in their midst, disguised as Sam, was back. They heard him clumping up the stairs.

"Sam?" Mrs. Parks called.

Sam condescended to look in at the door, remote and red in the face. "Yes, mother?"

"Did you have a good game?"

Sam took from his pocket a contraption for developing the wrists, which he had recently bought to use while in idle conversation. "None of the fellas wanted to play today," he said, squeezing it back and forth, "so I boxed at the gym."

"But you ran around the reservoir this morning."

"Gosh, I have to get my exercise. It's a waste of time dieting if you don't. I've told you hundreds of times." He walked away, working his contraption till its springs complained.

"Mommy," Selina asked anxiously, "you think Sam exaggerates?"

"Yes, I do." Sam, with his dieting, hi ercising and his unrelieved gloom, wo her.

A heavy thump overhead, followed by short thumps, brought a fleck of plast her head. A door burst open.

"If you have to do those exercises," Parks' voice rang through the house, " don't you do them in the cellar?"

IT wasn't the noise, Mrs. Parks knew, disturbed him. Mr. Parks could and did undisturbed amid uncounted decibel sound. It was the fact. Sam's going t tremes was getting him down.

"I didn't know you were working." S voice had the tone of a martyr. He proce to the cellar.

"I think he's thin enough," Selina sai

"So do I." Mrs. Parks thought that basic training, which had worked such ders on her husband's figure, could not broken Sam's record.

Mr. Parks walked into the living r "How long is this going on?" he boo "Why on earth did you have to tell hi was getting fat?"

Mrs. Parks made placating noises. S went back to her painting, humming tentedly. But Mrs. Parks no longer fel tive. She did not bounce back the wa family did.

Mr. Parks opened his letters, mostly Christmas cards. "What's this?" he glancing at a note. "Who's thanking m red roses?" He turned it over and look the signature. "At least she writes to Selina and her m gave him their undi attention.

"Who? Oh . . . San have fits," Mrs. Parks

"Well, she forgot t 'Junior' on it."

"What else did say?" asked Selina.

He looked at her coldly. "Of cou didn't read it."

Selina was not abashed. "Why is she ing him, anyhow? She could thank him f flowers when he calls her. He calls her u the time. I don't see why he keeps ca either. Betsy won't go to any parties him."

"You shouldn't have listened," Mrs. F said. Poor Sam, he tried so hard to kee love secret.

"I couldn't help hearing," Selina said tuously. "Sam gets so mad. And he's so There's no use. Blackie's a senior."

"I don't see what being a senior has t with it."

"Oh, mommy, seniors go to college year."

Mr. Parks looked at his daughter in admiration, but his wife said, "Well?"

"Sam is a junior."

"I know."

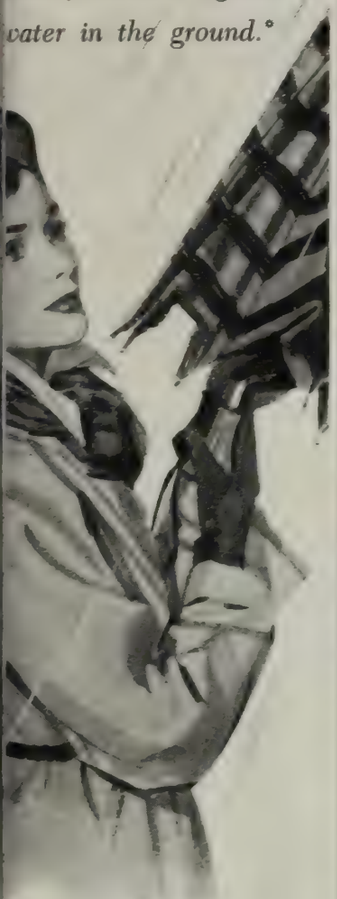
Selina, obviously tired of explaining A to her parent, gave up. Her father took the job.

"The idea, I gather, is that one co trates on seniors because they will be co boys soonest."

"You don't think ——" Mrs. Parks from their glances of withering scorn they did. "Well, it's a horrid idea. I'm Betsy's not like that."

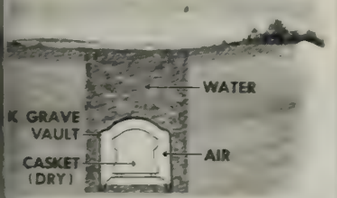
Sam, clad only in gym trunks and stre with sweat and coal dust, stood at the "I demand to know what you are sa about Betsy."

Such was the driving force of his rage even Mr. Parks was tongue-tied. Mrs. F saw it was up to her. "You see—of cou don't think so—but anyway, we hea mean to say ——" She stumbled throug mortifying explanation.



"Of all the cynical, unjust—why, don't even know her. You'd think my family—Blackie Martin's a twirp." Sam dignation rose till his voice broke.

Mr. Parks stemmed the tide by han Sam his letter. Sam grabbed it, too excit notice that it had been opened, and ru out of the room. Selina reported that h



If you can't help your friend with money, help him at least with a sigh.

—OLD PROVERB.

PEACE OF MIND
MES IN MANY WAYS hen you've lost someone
r. And surely one is he precious knowledge
t you have provided the inest tribute . . . the most sted protection against vater in the ground.°

°THE CLARK GRAVE VAULT
ade of enduring metal instead of material. Placed over the casket, scientifically designed to keep ater, from rain and melting snows, from reaching the casket.

FREE 28-page booklet, "My Copies have gone into millions s . . . and hearts. A book of ion—and information. Tells ho must "take charge" what
The Clark Grave Vault Co., E-59, Columbus, Ohio.
hted 1949.

CLARK
AVE VAULTS
EST TRIBUTE • THE MOST TRUSTED PROTECTION

locked himself in the bathroom. Mrs. Parks lay down on the couch.

She was awakened by a joyous, "Mom, guess what?"

"Sh-h, your mother's asleep," Mr. Parks said.

"No, I'm not." She opened her eyes. Sam was still unwashed.

"You mean you aren't now."

"I just wanted to tell you that you were right," Sam told her. "She said she'd love to go to the movies with me and come back here for dinner."

"That's nice, Sam. I'd love to meet her. When?"

"Day after tomorrow, and ——"

"That's a Monday," said Selina with disdain for an expendable evening.

"—— can we have your pot roast and your ——"

"Sam, couldn't you please take a shower?" Mrs. Parks closed her eyes again.

Monday morning, Sam looked carefully into the menu, relaxed when he saw it included his mother's specialties, and requested the blue tablecloth and the Spode plates. When told that Selina was to be of the company, he raised another commotion. The result was that when he arrived with his lady that night, Selina was impeccable. It was too much to hope that she would obey his other injunctions.

Betsy was a nice-looking blonde in a soft blue dress that matched her eyes. With that glowing air of having a good time, she said all the right things in a lovely speaking voice. Her ease under the trying scrutiny of four pairs of eyes never faltered. Mrs. Parks was happy to see that her nose was slightly unfortunate.

Mr. Parks smiled at her with appreciation and started to speak. Then Sam eyed him in an agony of nervousness—apparently afraid he would say something that a conventional father would not—and he forgot what it was he wanted to say.

MRS. PARKS was glad that she was busy with food and could not be expected to contribute to the conversation. Sam was watching her too. Fortunately, Selina was not awed by her brother.

"Don't you love Mrs. Jamieson, Betsy?" she asked.

"I used to," Betsy said, "but now I'm in the high school I don't have time to practice and I'm kind of scared to go with my lessons unprepared."

"I wouldn't dare," said Selina. There was another silence while she ate with concentration, if not elegance, ignoring Sam's frowns. Then she said, "When you were in the seventh grade did you have Miss Allen?"

"Oh, yes." Betsy sighed. "Is she still just as terrible?"

"She couldn't be worse."

"You're talking too much," Sam said to Selina.

"I'm not."

Betsy leaned toward Sam. "How are the teachers at your school?"

Sam braced himself. "Oh, the masters? Well, I guess they're O.K."

Betsy smiled as if he had said something brilliant and then turned toward Mr. Parks and said she supposed the teachers when he went to school had been awfully strict.

"It depends which school you mean. The first one I went to was in Mexico, run by ——"

Sam was frowning at him now. Was it considered eccentric to have lived in Mexico? Mrs. Parks wondered. In any case, Mr. Parks stopped talking.

"I mean your boarding school," Betsy said. "I saw Nicholas Nickleby and I thought ——"

Mr. Parks choked and his wife quickly asked Betsy where she was going to college.

"They don't think I can get in," Betsy answered, "so I guess I'll go to art school instead."

"You should see how well she draws," Selina said. "There's a horse she did up at school. You can see he's galloping."

Sam looked gratefully at his sister and in a thawed-out atmosphere the meal closed. Sam

Your messages give added pleasure on

HASTI-NOTES
by RUST CRAFT

These Garden Beauties will add special pleasure to every note you write. Authentic reproductions of colorful butterflies in glorious flower settings. Each box contains twenty-four Rust Craft Hasti-Notes —three each of eight lovely designs —from original creations by members of the famous Rust Craft Artists' Guild. Available wherever Rust Craft cards are sold. $1.00 the box.

ASK FOR "GARDEN BEAUTIES" HASTI-NOTES

RUST CRAFT
BOSTON • TORONTO
Greeting Cards of Character

took Betsy home. Selina immediately asked her mother if she thought Betsy was pretty.

"Yes, I do," Mrs. Parks said.

"I don't. I like the way she does her hair, though." Selina always double-checked. "Do you think she's very pretty, daddy?"

"Yes." He sounded convinced.

"Beautiful?"

"Certainly. Any objections?"

"You don't really." Selina implied that other people might be stupid, but not her father.

"Bed, Selina," Mrs. Parks said.

Suddenly deaf, Selina mussed her father's hair affectionately.

"Why can't you do things the first time I tell you?" her mother asked.

Mr. Parks pointed his thumb toward the ceiling. "Up, Selina; you heard the War Department."

Crab fashion, Selina progressed out of the room, delaying long enough to pat their cat, but not long enough for reprimand.

After a while, not hearing demands to kiss her good night, Mrs. Parks went up to see what had happened. She found Selina undressed as far as her petticoat, admiring the way she had done her hair. It was as good an imitation of Betsy's as she could achieve with straight brown hair.

"Mommy, when can I have a permanent?" Selina asked.

After several more sorties, Selina was battened down for the night. Mrs. Parks was thinking of bed for herself when she heard the doorbell ring.

As she reluctantly went downstairs she heard Mr. Parks go to the door and Sam saying something about losing a key. Sam, who had been so carefully dressed an hour ago, now looked as if he had been in a fight. A tear in his right sleeve, two missing buttons, stains on the front of his jacket—why, it was blood.

"Sam. Sam. You're hurt."

"No, I'm not. The other guy got a bloody nose. The poor sap."

"For goodness' sake, what happened?"

Sam sat down in the nearest chair, smiling complacently. "Let's see now." He spoke as if fights were a hobby of his. "You know I took Betsy home. We hadn't been there a minute when in walks Blackie Martin as if he owns the place. My date too. Of all the nerve. He wouldn't leave, so—well, he said something I didn't like and I got mad and he got mad and he looked as if he was going to take a poke at me. So I sort of pasted him. . . . That's all."

"So?" said Mr. Parks. "Fairly clear. Not quite complete. How, may I ask, did the fair one take it?"

Sam beamed. "She was scared to death," he told his father.

"Any irate parents?"

"Mr. Williams came down. I guess he didn't like it."

"Sure you're not hurt?" Mrs. Parks was annoyed at the smugness of her men. They were all alike, they relished bloodshed.

Sam stretched himself luxuriously out of his chair. "Oh, the fathead couldn't get near me. . . . Good night." He kissed his mother.

"Good night, Skipper." Mr. Parks patted Sam proudly on the back.

When Mr. Parks finished his Tuesday's piece, he came down to a fine smell of apple pie and unexampled quiet. He found his wife doing absolutely nothing.

"The house is roaring with silence," he said. "Where are the young?"

"Selina's at the movies and your brother is exposing Sam to Shaw."

The telephone rang.

"Let it ring."

"It might be one of the children." Mrs. Parks couldn't leave a telephone alone. She answered it and came back. "It was for Sam," she said. "A girl."

"The?"

"I think so."

"Things looking up?"

Before she could answer they heard Selina coming in at a trot. She rushed into the living room without stopping to remove her coat and galoshes.

"Why didn't you tell me? Oh, why didn't you tell me?"

"What about?" her mother asked.

"About Sam's fight," Selina said. "Isn't it wonderful?"

"Not the mot juste," Mr. Parks muttered.

"Nancy told me all about it. She says you ought to see Blackie's eye. It's all green and yellow. He borrowed Rosa's dark glasses, but he won't go anywhere. He's furious at Sam. So Nancy and I had to have lunch at the drugstore. I had two hamburgers and a hot fudge sundae." Selina sniffed. "Is that apple pie?"

The prosperity of a country depends, not on the abundance of its revenues, nor on the strength of its fortifications, nor on the beauty of its public building; but it consists in the number of its cultivated citizens, in its men of education, enlightenment and character.

—LUTHER.

"Yes. Is that all?"

"No. Wait till I tell you. Rosa had to telephone Betsy and say Blackie was ill and couldn't take her to something. Betsy was huffy. I don't see why if she's so popular. Anyway, he's made the whole family promise not to tell. I promised Nancy I wouldn't tell. Of course, you're grownups. I wish I could tell Sam. But Blackie is sick. He has an awful headache where he hit the mantelpiece. His lip is swollen and he has a big cut here." Selina pointed to her cheek.

"Sam seems to have made substantial alterations," Mr. Parks said.

"Sam can hit, can't he? Aren't you proud of Sam?"

Mr. Parks grinned.

Selina looked accusingly at her unenthusiastic mother. "You aren't."

"I don't like fights."

"Well, I think he's a hero."

As the hour for dinner approached, Sam returned, unconscious of his heroic dimensions. He went into the kitchen, where Selina and their cat always hovered around when food was imminent. Then the telephone rang.

"Answer it, Sam," Mrs. Parks called from the dining room. "See if you can take a message."

Sam picked up the kitchen extension. "Hello. . . . What? Oh. . . . Yes. . . . Um-hum. . . . Sure, I'm fine." His guarde could not hide the undercurrent of ment. "Well, your father didn't. . . . really?" Sam clutched the telephone to his chest.

Here there was a long pause while a tion was evidently made to the purpos call. Mrs. Parks and Selina, their ears ing like tuning forks, duly noted it.

"Thursday? Nothing. . . . Is it? I seeing it's New Year's. . . . Do I sti to take you?" Sam straightened jerk. "Would I Saturday? . . . Ye Yes. . . . Yes." Sam grinned fat "Yes." He looked around at his and his sister. "I can't now, underst He laughed shakily. "Later? . . . Sam put the receiver down and stared ily into space.

"Selina," Mrs. Parks said, "light t dles and call your father."

A shout that would have qualified hog calling issued from Selina's throat. Sam came out of his reverie new world.

"You look great in that dress," he Mrs. Parks. "You don't look old eno be my mother."

It was the same dress he had seen times without comment, but his mot delighted just the same.

"What about me?" asked Mr. "Don't I look beautiful?"

Sam punched his father playfully a went in to dinner.

"How was the play?"

"The play?" Sam looked back i other era. "I guess it was pretty good.

"Did Hendrick enjoy it?"

"He would," Sam told him. "He with Shaw."

"And you don't, I take it?" ask father.

"All that guff about men being the p and women the pursuers? Do you?"

Mr. Parks leered at his women and wouldn't commit himself. There was laughter. This, Mrs. Parks thought, w old times, before Sam went on his d

"What do you think, mom?"

"I think"—she spoke carefully—are some girls who are—who do ta initiative."

"I don't know any," Sam said.

"No?" Mr. Parks did irritating with his eyebrows.

"No," Sam said severely. "Why, it t long time for a man to get a girl to—t at him."

Selina pounced. "Has she?"

"Yes." Sam looked down at his p modest triumph.

Mrs. Parks prayed that Selina wo give one of her realistic interpretat human nature—or was that promis ing? In any case, the temptation to it was great. Mrs. Parks hastened the dessert.

"How?" Even pie did not divert Se

"Let the boy have some privacy Parks said. As if that were possible household, Mrs. Parks thought, as she Sam's grapefruit in front of him.

"Don't I get any pie?" Sam asked.

Mr. Parks rallied first. "Aren't you any more?"

"No," said Sam, "I'm thin enough

JOURNAL GARDEN PROJECT

(Continued from Page 203)

The trellis-arbor is a JOURNAL original. Designed by the Garden Project's landscape architectural consultant, it can be put together by any handy man out of new or used lumber, following a diagram and instructions which we can furnish and which show how to make it in a variety of shapes and sizes to fit the spot you have in mind. Here, too, we have learned by practical experience how it appears and how well it works for privacy and shade.

Now take the paving, another JOURNAL first, which can be a blessing for any garden maker. Cement authorities called us crazy when we said we were going to make three-foot-square concrete slabs that a healthy man could handle by himself and make a permanent outdoor floor that practically anyone could afford. They're only an inch thick, which the experts look at askance, but we've been using them for several years now at the Project, winter and summer, and not one has ever shown a sign of cracking. We've got diagrams and instructions for making them right in your own back yard. Likewise a how-to-make sheet for the pool pans, for your local tinsmith to follow. And all these garden parts—pools, paving, trellis-arbor—we've designed so they fit together like ing blocks, to solve your planning pro

We've also learned that with prop tection we can have fig trees in our like those in the picture, and can t how to make the experiment. This g all the plants we show, for the workin ager of the Project isn't merely an M floriculture (Ohio State) and a B.S. in culture (University of Connecticut); grow anything that grows and can pas the information—a product the Proje vides from all its activities, to make o tures and articles ring true. THE

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

THERE ARE THREE DIFFERENT BRECK SHAMPOOS FOR THREE QUITE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDITIONS

Your hair is very likely dry, oily, or normal. For these three quite different hair conditions, there are three quite different Breck Shampoos. Whenever you buy a Breck Shampoo, mention whether your hair is dry, oily, or normal, and you will be given the correct Breck Shampoo for your hair condition. A Breck Shampoo will give your hair a clean, lustrous, beauty.

Breck Shampoos and other Breck Preparations are available in Beauty Shops and wherever cosmetics are sold.

JOHN H BRECK INC • MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS • SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETTS
CANADIAN ADDRESS • 310 SLATER STREET • OTTAWA

Precious, have a heart by

MUNSINGWEAR*

Slumber sweethearts every one...in Munsingwear's very own rayon fabric, aflutter with a tiny heart design. Dreamy details, Munsingwear gives them! Gentle gathering...double-fold ruffles that stay soft and pretty. And their subtle, smooth fit is Munsingwear magic! Gowns and pajamas, all in delicious "Sweet Shop" colors, reasonably priced...at fine stores everywhere.

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Also ask for Munsingwear Underwear · Hosiery · Foundation Garments

Pretty Babies

By NORA O'LEARY

We think all babies are pretty . . . and that all baby knits should be too. Snowy white lace is a natural on soft pink or blue wool. Ruffle it around the bonnet or the yoke for an angelic look. Mother enters the picture in an enchanting pink bed jacket—perfect for feeding baby or reading in bed. Can you think of a prettier gift for a new baby or an expectant mother?

Rows of lace follow pattern of knitted sack; cap, bootees, 2504.

Knitted bed jacket, flattering colla sleeves. Two rows of lace for accent.

For baby to meet his first guests: the simplest of lace-edged square blankets. 2506.

If it's a girl, she will love fem lacy yoke, bonnet. To knit.

Easy to crochet: white jacket, bonnet and bootees, contrasting loop trim. 2508.

Order knitting and crocheting instr by number, and send 15 cents for ea tern number to the Reference L Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia

Printed in

JUNE, 1949

Ladies' Home JOURNAL

25 CENTS

The Magazine Women Believe In

BURLINGAME PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

Undiscovered
AMERICAN BEAUTIES

BARBARA TANNER
Michigan State Coed
Whose Sweetheart Now?

PROFILE OF YOUTH • What the "15 to 19 agers" do, think, like, say, and how they look
THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE • By Harlan Miller
STORIES • By Graeme and Sarah Lorimer, Dorothy Thompson, Willard H. Temple

Imagine! A twist of the wrist does a whole wash!

EVEN I CAN DO IT....AND CLOTHES ARE SO DRY — MOTHER STARTS IRONING RIGHT AWAY!

"With my wonderful, new General Electric All-Automatic Washer. I actually do my wash in about half the time it took with my old washer"—so runs a typical comment from an enthusiastic user.

"I don't have to waste time redoing pieces that don't come clean. And clothes are so dry I can iron many pieces right out of the washer.

"My new General Electric is so completely automatic that I sometimes let my seven-year-old Nancy do my wash. A twist of the wrist does the whole washing job—and clothes are so clean and sweet."

FIVE-YEAR PROTECTION PLAN IN WRITING

Includes a one-year warranty on the entire washer—plus additional four-year protection on the "sealed-in-oil" driving mechanism on washer used for household use. You can put your confidence in General Electric.

GE ALL-AUTOMATIC WASHER

Ys, THOROUGH washing—THOROUGH spin-drying—and here's why:

NOT THIS... No rolling tangling BUT THIS... Individually washed

General Electric's Activatowashing action dips, flexes, and gently scrubs clothes, passing them through threones of washing action—vigorous, medium, and light. Clothes are separated as thare washed in constantly circulated, filtered water.

NOT THIS... Not soggy and heavy BUT THIS... Fluffy and light

General Electric's high-speed spin damp-dries clothes so thoroughly that even big pieces are not soppy, but fluffy and light. You can start ironing out of the washer, finish the week's laundry hours earlier. General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Conn.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

GENERAL ELECTRIC

For Bare-Skin Beauty

Bath Size Palmolive

with its famous

"Beauty Lather"!

New Fragrance!

New Charm!

New Allure!

THIS VERY DAY, see how big, thrifty Bath Size Palmolive smooths and softens arms and shoulders...how Palmolive's wonderful "Beauty Lather" helps make you lovelier, more alluring all over!

To be a real Bare-Skin Beauty—get Bath Size Palmolive Soap and use it regularly in your tub or shower! You'll find economical, long-lasting Bath Size Palmolive makes oceans of rich, creamy "Beauty Lather"—leaves an exciting "whisper" of perfume on your skin. Get Bath Size Palmolive Soap today—for Palmolive's famous Complexion Care all over! Your whole family will love it!

So Big! So Thrifty

So Solid and Long-Lasting

Oceans of "Beauty Lather"

Exciting New Fragrance

Menfolk Love it, Too

Buy Bath Size Palmolive for Bare-Skin Beauty!

Journal Contents, June, 1949

Vol. LXVI, No. 6

PHOTO BY MYRON DAVIS

SWIMMER

SWEETHEART OF 60,000 MEN

UNDISCOVERED AMERICAN BEAUTIES

Barbara Tanner
Michigan State coed
. . . whose sweetheart now?

To Barbara Tanner, of East Lansing, Michigan, goes the honor of being first in the JOURNAL's new cover series: Undiscovered American Beauties. JOURNAL editors believe this country is full of pretty girls—down the block, now in high school, typing, on the swimming team. Our new series will feature pretty girls who have never modeled professionally.

As we studied first entrants, we discovered again the old truth that beauty is in the eye of the beholder. To some of our staff members one girl is utterly fetching; others could pass her by. Moreover, some pretty girls don't photograph pretty and some plain girls do. Good photography often brings out beauty that is scarcely observable to the eye. Bad lighting can deal harshly with true loveliness. In the final choice, we must select pretty girls who look pretty in their pictures, often after vehement staff regret that certain others must be left out. So cheers to Barbara, our first, and an eager eye out for still more enchanting faces to come.

As well as East Lansing, Sedro Woolley, in Washington, can claim Barbara too. She was born there in 1927, daughter of a high-school chemistry teacher. She was brought up in Waterloo, Iowa, whose residents may remember Barbara as Columbia the Gem of the Ocean, in the May Day Fete of 1938. And Marquette, Michigan, knows the Barbara who spent summer vacations on the shores of Lake Michigamme, canoeing and swimming and dancing and enjoying her great-aunt's corn roasts and huckleberry pie.

Right now Barbara is a senior finishing at Michigan State, where she was discovered by a scout from the JOURNAL Beauty Department. Until her discovery she had planned to teach. Now she is thinking of modeling. She has been chosen National Sweetheart of Sigma Chi. But her heart belongs to a tall-dark-and-handsome—who isn't a fraternity man!

Novel Complete in This Issue

34 Nobody's That Special, Nelia Gardner White

Fiction

36 The Most Beautiful Girl in California, Willard H. Temple
38 Let Love Come Last (Second part of five), Taylor Caldwell
54 Party Man, Graeme and Sarah Lorimer
56 Silver Wedding, Dorothy Thompson

Special Features

11 You Can Help America, Dorothy Thompson
11 Smoke
31 What Men Do When They are Alone, G. M. White
40 Psychiatry Needs You, Joan Younger
41 There's a Man in the House, Harlan Miller
42 The Suitor's Visit, Painting by Gerard Ter Borch
43 Profile of Youth
48 Sex Freedom and Morals in the United States
141 How America Lives: Meet a Quaker Family, Roger Butterfield

General Features

5 Our Readers Write Us
14 Under-Cover Stuff, Bernardine Kielty
23 Unmarried Mothers . . . Salvation Army Care
23 Better Maternity Homes, Margaret Hickey
24 Reference Library
26 Making Marriage Work, Clifford R. Adams
28 I Want to Know! (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Maureen Daly
33 Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town
78 Bringing Up Parents, Dr. Barbara Biber
136 Ask Any Woman, Marcelene Cox
156 Mumps—More to be Watched Than Feared, Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
159 This is a Bike-Showoff, Munro Leaf
187 Diary of Domesticity, Gladys Taber

Fashions and Beauty

50 Summer Travel Coast to Coast, Wilhela Cushman
58 Captivating Cottons, Nora O'Leary
168 American Beauty, Ann Hagerty
176 Keep a Cool Head, Dawn Crowell Norman

Food and Homemaking

60 The Pink of Perfection, Gladys Taber
62 Have a Nice Week End, Ann Batchelder
64 Line a Day, Ann Batchelder
92 Quick and Easys for Two, Louella G. Shouer
100 Conversation Piece, Ruth Mills Teague
148 Freeze It! Margaret Davidson
150 Well-Dressed Vegetables, Louella G. Shouer

Interior Decoration

160 Room Re-created, Henrietta Murdock

Poetry

12 Daniel Whitehead Hicky • 68 Marjorie Lederer Lee • 76 Elizabeth McFarland • 91 Mae Winkler Goodman • 98 Julie Sloane • 108 Elizabeth-Ellen Long • 117 Pauline Havard • 122 Nathaniel Burt • 129 Clarence K. Streit • 162 Marion Lineaweaver • 182 Elizabeth Coatsworth

Cover Design by Dawn Crowell Norman Photograph by Francesco Scavullo

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1949 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U.S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

Subscription Prices: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Newfoundland, Labrador, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas; 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company, Walter D. Fuller, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President and Treasurer; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Robert E. MacNeal, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

Change of Address: Send your Journal change of address to

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL
INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PENNSYLVANIA

at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Dress by Maria Krum

Sun dress by Frances Sider

YOUR BALLERINA sun dress needs Ivory Flakes care to help keep its colors dancing. Colors perk up when you suds them in Ivory Flakes.

ovely to wear...It's worth

ory Flakes care

ke form of baby's pure, mild Ivory . . . 99 44/100% Pure

For Bare-

Bath Size

with its famous

"Bea

New Fragrance!

New Charm!

New Allure!

THIS VERY DAY, see how big, thrifty B -smooths and softens arms and shoulders wonderful "Beauty Lather" helps make alluring all over!

To be a real Bare-Skin Beauty—get B Soap and use it regularly in your tub fluffed economical, long-lasting Bath Siz creams of rich, creamy "Beauty Lather ing "whisper" of perfume on your sk Palmolive Soap today—for Palmolive's f Care all over! Your whole family will l

Handy for hauling—big parcel space in the back, and seats are easy to remove if you have a bulky load. The flat steel floor can be washed out with a hose, and the entire interior is washable.

The shorter overall length, quick turning and all-around vision of the 'Jeep' Station Wagon make it extremely easy to park. Fenders are functionally designed to avoid costly dents and scratches.

Choice for chauffeur"

Birthday outings . . . school and church driving groups . . . shopping trips—you know who is "chauffeur" for your family! That's why you'll love this car that is so perfect for families, so smart to drive—the 'Jeep' Station Wagon.

You'll like the spaciousness of its all-steel station-wagon body, with doors you enter without stooping and windows that give you vision in every direction. Your children sit up where they can see out . . . and they needn't worry about soiling the washable upholstery.

You'll enjoy its smooth, comfortable ride . . . the ease of steering . . . the way you see the road ahead.

It's a smart choice for value, too—new low prices, hundreds of dollars under other full-size station wagons. Let a Willys-Overland dealer take your family for a drive.

'Jeep'

Station Wagon

, TOLEDO 1, OHIO • MAKERS OF AMERICA'S MOST USEFUL VEHICLES

Our Readers Write us

How to Impress Husbands

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Dear Editors: I have been thankful to your magazine for a great many services, but never did I dream it would serve to raise my beauty rating. My husband looks on me in a new light and proudly refers to me as his little "composite" since reading of your survey to determine the proportions of the average girl.

He was unimpressed until I dragged out the measuring tape and proved my measurements coincided with those of your composite figure, plus my brown hair and blue eyes. I may be no glamour girl, but he agrees that I am, to quote you, "just about right."

Gratefully yours,
MRS. JAMES B. McDONALD.

Adam Hears From Eve

Richland, Washington.

Dear Editors: Once upon a time there was a man. He wasn't exactly lazy, but he liked the world just as it was. He was so contented that he couldn't see the important work there was to be done. He liked pottering around in his garden with no changes made. His wife was a patient woman, and she loved her husband, but —— Things could have gone on just as they were forever if she hadn't decided the time had come for a little bit of progress. She arranged things so there was to be no more dilly-dallying, then put the problem up to him for a decision. It was to be yes or no. Darned if he didn't see the light, and yes it was. Of course, right off he blamed her for the trouble of it all and told his Best Friend about it. But his Best Friend was wise. He told him to scat right out of that garden and start hoeing corn and forget his troubles.

Well, the man's wife and his Best Friend smiled at each other and agreed that they'd make something out of that man yet. The Best Friend had a parting word for the wife too. He said, "Remember things won't be easy. You'll have to do things just about as he says or he'll throw down his hoe and go fishing. And when there's plenty of trouble he'll remind you that it's all your fault, but you just stay with that man until he can learn to stop calling the field of corn his. When he's learned to take you by the hand and say 'ours,' then I'll be mighty pleased to have you call on Me, both of you—together."

Of course, you know that man's name. Adam it was. And his son, Clifford R., has given some good advice, I'll have to admit. But someday those men will realize that the most important job in the world isn't hoeing corn; it's learning to say "ours."

Sincerely,
PHYLLIS B. LAMBERT.

The Treasures of India

Vinukonda, South India.

Dear Editors: Our ship really came in! Imagine the excitement when not one but four JOURNALS arrived in the same mail delivery. I was persuaded to part temporarily with two issues, as my husband and I can read only one each at a time.

A confirmed JOURNAL fan,
MARJORIE GIPSON,
American Baptist Mission.

For Slightly Used Gum

Trenton, New Jersey.

Dear Editors: Your Fifty Years Ago column is greatly enjoyed, but I have something here from a Maine newspaper of fifty years ago which I think tops any of your fashions. It is from the Six Towns Times, of Freeport, Maine, dated July 15, 1898, and headed: "Are You Wearing a Gum Box?" It goes on to say that Freeport's latest fad is a gum box attached to a ribbon or chain and worn in a chatelaine fashion. The idea was to have a place to park your gum while talking to friends. Freeport was not to be outdone by New York or Philadelphia even in those days!

Sincerely yours,
WINIFRED G. BLANCHARD.

Would Drop Journal in Russia

Americus, Georgia.

Dear Editors: This magazine "that women believe in" can be double checked for me. I enjoy it more than I can express.

I am enclosing a clipping from Robert C. Ruark's column in the Atlanta Journal. He writes, "For a bit I was thinking of parachuting mama onto Moscow, as a counterpropaganda measure, but then decided that a couple of copies of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL would weigh less—but not much less—and argue more. No louder, just more."

Sincerely yours,
MRS. W. C. PEAK.

She is Immortal

New York City.

Dear Bruce Gould: You asked me why I believe in immortality. I can tell you in one sentence. It is because I believe the best in the human spirit is indestructible.

I don't know the shape of immortality. But I have never seen love, or faith, or integrity, or any of the other human qualities that give life meaning and beauty. Yet I do not question their reality.

Death does not destroy these qualities. It may suspend their tangible manifestations, but their effects endure. How can I not believe in immortality?

You can lose love only if it is withdrawn from you. Death does not take it away, for love is without limits. It remains with you, surrounding and fortifying you, an active, positive force, a deeper reality than the sound of a voice or the touch of a hand, dear as these things are. How can I not believe in immortality?

But withdrawal of love often ends faith. And this is the real tragedy that can befall a human being. Sorrow can be endured. But if you lose faith in those you love, you lose faith in yourself; and when these are gone, it is hard to believe even in God.

My faith is undiminished. I have lost the sound of the voice and the touch of the hand and the joy of daily companionship of my husband; I can never lose the realities which gave those things meaning.

I don't have to believe that I will "see" my husband again, as I understand seeing, though I may. It is enough for me to know that his love for me, and mine for him, sustain me now, this very day. So long as I am, he is. The rest I can leave to God.

Sincerely,
(Name withheld by request.)

Keep your color forecast bright and sunny

You're fashion-right if you're color-bright . . . so give gay summer clothes the care they deserve. Keep them far away from strong soaps and rough handling. Remember—one wrong washing can fade and shrink them. Instead, wash nice clothes the right way with pure, mild Ivory Flakes. Then you know they'll come out dazzle-bright . . . fitting right.

Keep your washables lovelier with this special care

GO TO TOWN in a dress of pure silk shantung—give it Ivory Flakes care to help preserve its glowing colors. Ivory Flakes is one soap that fashion experts advise for all nice washables.

YOUR SUNDAY BEST slips need Ivory Flakes care to help 'em stay blossom-fresh. No soap gives nice washables finer care than pure, mild Ivory Flakes.

WANT LONGER WEAR from your nylons? Then suds them nightly in Ivory Flakes! You'll find, too, that Ivory Flakes care keeps stocking colors newer-looking up to twice as long!

Dress by Maria Krum

Sun dress by Frances Sider

YOUR BALLERINA sun dress needs Ivory Flakes care to help keep its colors dancing. Colors perk up when you suds them in Ivory Flakes.

If it's lovely to wear...It's worth

Ivory Flakes care

The fast flake form of baby's pure, mild Ivory . . . 99 44/100 % Pure

Lucky, indeed, is the bride-elect who has made known her preference in table crystal so that her friends have the added pleasure of giving a most welcomed gift of the wanted pattern in hand-crafted American made crystal.

Cape Cod crystal can be acquired piece by piece for a complete table service . . . compatible with fine china and pottery . . . a growing favorite with budget-conscious brides and grooms.

For brides of today and yesterday, the finest stores in the nation offer this open stock table crystal, hand-crafted by the skilled artisans of IMPERIAL GLASS CORPORATION, Bellaire, O.

The Journal in Tibet

Ai-Wa Yunnan,
Via Likiang, West China.

Dear Editors: We are on the Tibetan border. Our nearest neighbors (white) are three days to the south. Hence I doubly appreciate the stimulation of your stories and articles.

Sincerely,
MRS. WARREN DITTEMORE.

College Son Enjoys Journal

Monroe, New York.

Dear Editors: Our son started to college last fall and he requested I save all the Posts and JOURNALS until he had a chance to see them. He is too busy at school to read them, so he relaxes and enjoys them when he gets home. You are still giving us more than our money's worth. That is something to be proud of in these days.

Sincerely,
HELEN BARRON.

One Woman's Work

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Dear Editors: On June 16th Dr. Lillie Rosa Minoka-Hill, a full-blooded Mohawk Indian woman physician, will receive her Award Medal as a fifty-year graduate of the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania. She interned at the Woman's Hospital of Philadelphia.

After a brief practice in Philadelphia she married Charles Hill, of the Oneida tribe. They moved to Wisconsin and settled on a twenty-two-acre farm. Her husband died in 1916 and she was left with six children—the youngest, five-month-old twin girls. She continued to doctor the ills of the families in the area, usually without charge, although busy with her own brood.

Due to failing health she has had to cut down her cross-country jaunts, but she still examines and treats patients in her kitchen, frequently to the odor of broiling venison.

Sincerely,
GLADYS DASKAM.

Bankrupt Mother

The Duke's Cottage,
Rudgwick, England.

Darling June: I have just been spending a week end with a friend of mine, a pet and a darling, and for twenty-five long years she has devoted herself entirely to her children, slaved for them, given up everything for them. She hasn't had any life of her own for twenty-five years.

Now comes the harvest. It is not the golden one I feel she has deserved. Her family is grown. Two of them are married. One has gone to sea. Her daughter has a job and a life of her own in London. Large looms the question, "What shall we do with mamma?" For mamma, now out of a job, is beached. She is high and dry, for she gave up everything long ago, and now she has nothing at all to fill up her days.

But I never see any of her family without thinking how much better it would have been for them all if she had not been quite so devoted. If she had kept out of life something of her own, the years would not find her bankrupt. We like our friends and loved ones so much better when they aren't. Never sink your all in anyone, or anything. Always keep a little sanctuary that belongs to you alone. A store cupboard of interests no one can pilfer! Then, when your children have grown up and gone away, or your best-laid plans have not quite come to what you hoped they might, you will always have something to fall back on, and can even ask others in to share the feast!

Love from MOTHER.
(Dorothy Black)

How People Lived in A.D. 200

Grove Cottage, Amberley, Gloucestershire.

My dear June: I always knew there were several Roman villas in England, but it was never my lot before to be near enough one, with the time to look at it. Besides, I was never great at sight-seeing, and am horribly apt, when offered a cathedral, to go into a shop.

Yesterday I visited the Chedworth Villa, which is well enough preserved to give one a pretty good idea of the sort of life they led around A.D. 200.

In 1864 a rabbiting party lost a ferret. Digging for it, they found a Roman dining room, complete with central heating system, beautiful tesselated floors, and the

(Continued on Page 8)

Just Whistle...

by Bissell

The house is shining-clean for the wedding . . . when excelsior from Aunt Clara's last-minute wedding gift goes all over the carpet! What to do?

Just whistle . . . and whisk out the Bissell Carpet Sweeper. That new "Bisco-matic"* Brush Action sweeps clean without any pressure on the handle. . . .

Works automatically, adjusting itself to any rug, from the thickest broadloom to the smoothest Oriental! It even picks up perfectly when the handle is held low, for sweeping under tables and chairs.

Hint to brides: Use your vacuum for periodic cleaning, a "Bisco-matic" Bissell® for everyday quick pick-ups.

Exceptional values. "Bisco-matic" Bissells with "Sta-up" Handle and easy "Flip-O" Empty as low as $6.45. Other models for even less. Illustrated: the "Vanity" at $8.45.

Bissell Sweepers

The Bissell Carpet Sweeper Company
Grand Rapids 2, Mich.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Bissell's patented full spring controlled brush

To "color-light" this silver's delicate moulding . . . organdy over turquoise. (Get ordinary sheet-moss from your florist, stud it with lilies.)

Excitingly modern, excitingly romantic . . . this different new pattern! Let it be a shining link between you and your daughter—and hers! Solid silver all the way through, a hundred years of daily use won't wear it out. In fact, wear is its best beauty treatment! And the elegance of a table set with Heirloom* Sterling tells your guests so much, so quickly.

Compare . . . see how much better a buy Heirloom Sterling is. Anyone can afford a start of 2 of these ever-beautiful Lasting Spring* place settings! Begin now to enjoy the lift of eating 3 times a day with this honest, solid silver! (Your jeweler also can show you Mansion House* and Damask Rose* in Heirloom Sterling.)

*Trade Mark. Copyright, 1949, Oneida, Ltd., Oneida, N. Y.

ABOUT THE NEW Lasting Spring

Created by the brilliant designer who did the much-loved Damask Rose. This "different" new pattern is moulded with dynamic simplicity, softened, enriched with a motif of tender sentiment.

IN ADHESIVE TAPES, TOO...

IT'S BEHAVIOR THAT COUNTS!

Buy

Curity WET-PRUF*

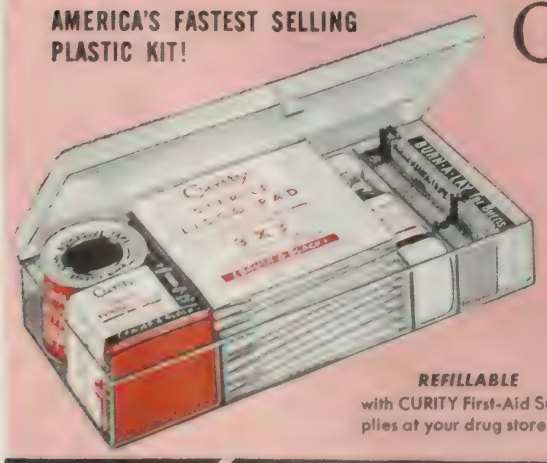
REG U.S. PAT. OFF.

THE HOSPITAL-QUALITY ADHESIVE TAPE

IT BEHAVES THE WAY YOU WANT TAPE TO:

Curity STICKS instantly — stays on! No curling at ends or corners.

IT'S WATERPROOFED — wash it time and again, it holds!



EASY ON THE SKIN — proved by over 15,000 tests on humans.

HOSPITAL QUALITY — used by hospitals and doctors throughout the nation!

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Over Half a Century of Adhesive Tape Leadership

AMERICA'S FASTEST SELLING PLASTIC KIT!

Curity LUSTRIC

REG U.S. PAT. OFF.

THE "SEE-THROUGH" FIRST-AID KIT

in RED, GREEN, BLUE, CLEAR

Smart looking—smart to have on hand. CURITY LUSTRIC, the first-aid kit of transparent plastic. Perfect for gifts, ideal for home, office, car, workshop. $1.50

REFILLABLE with CURITY First-Aid Supplies at your drug store

RE-USABLE for fishing flies, sewing supplies, jewelry, buttons, cosmetics, curlers, odds and ends

BAUER & BLACK

Division of The Kendall Company • 2500 S. Dearborn St., Chicago 16

(Continued from Page 6)

dividing pillars that held the leather curtains. The whole was seven or eight feet underground. A marvelous job of excavation has been done. The general layout is quite easy to see, with its heated bedrooms, its elaborate bathrooms, with dressing rooms and cupboards and the carved stone basins for the hot plunge and the cold.

The entrances to the dining room and into the dressing rooms are thick slabs of stone, worn into a curve by the feet of men and women who lived nearly two thousand years ago.

I always find there is something a little eerie, a little creepy about anything quite so old. I also have the uncanny impression that I have seen it all before. When I went down the Ancient Britons' flint mine, in Suffolk, and saw the galleries, far too low for modern mankind even to creep there, and the antlers they used as picks lying in the galleries where the workmen long before the Roman invasion had left them lying, I remember having that same uneasy feeling about it, so that although it was immensely interesting, I was glad to be gone.

Love to you,
MAMMA.
(Dorothy Black.)

Who Enjoys a Wedding?

Arlington, Virginia.

Dear Editors: Three cheers for grandma's letter about weddings. Weddings are a racket and a heartache. My son's wedding caused me a breakdown. My other son (the best man) lost ten pounds. The bride was a nervous wreck. We all were. My doctor gave me an injection before the wedding so I could stand up. No one really enjoys a wedding or has a good time.

I asked all our guests frankly and they were all miserable. Men loathe weddings. I am allergic to weddings now. I despise them.

ANOTHER GRANDMA.

Praises Journal

Aurora, Colorado.

Dear Editors: Since my graduation from college I have had, for the first time, an opportunity to do some pleasure reading. And reading the JOURNAL is strictly a pleasure. I used to think that all women's magazines must be "trashy." I have changed my mind.

The JOURNAL has a well-rounded selection of stories, features and educational articles. As a sociologist I truly appreciate your efforts to enlighten the women of America on the importance of a sound, healthy marriage. My husband reads the articles by Clifford R. Adams right along with me. Though I don't agree with a good deal he says, I am happy to see that you, the editors, appreciate the value of such articles. As a potential teacher, I appreciate the various educational articles featured. As a housewife, I give Ann Batchelder a pat on the back and a hearty handshake.

Sincerely,
MRS. ALBERT D. ROSS.

No Liquor Ads

Vancouver, British Columbia.

Dear Editors: In view of the announcement of U. S. Brewers' Foundation that two of the nationally read women's magazines have accepted beer advertising, the members of Fairview W.C.T.U. instructed me to express our deep appreciation to the editors of LADIES' HOME JOURNAL for their continued refusal to associate beer advertising with their many fine advertisements for good food.

Yours very sincerely,
CLARA M. STERNS
Secretary, Fairview W.C.T.U.

The Magazine Men Believe In Delanco, New Jersey.

Dear Editors: For quite a long time I have believed the JOURNAL to be one of the finest magazines published in this country, but my ego continues to be trampled, as you so frequently refer to it as a magazine only women should appreciate fully.

Your many fine and comprehensive articles on conditions that exist today and the problems that we are facing would surely be of interest to any husband, family man or just plain bachelor with a little patriotism. Most of your fiction is equally interesting to either sex, and I note many of your associate editors are men.

I hope eventually you will give us mere men some sort of a break in The Magazine That Women Believe In.

Sincerely,
DONALD H. ROSS.

For manicure perfection.

La Cross

Cuticle Nippers

So easy to use...

razor keen yet gentle,

La Cross nippers

frame your nails

cleanly, evenly. $4.00

Smart hands are reaching fo

THE BEAUTIFUL HANDS OF ALICIA MARK

the season's

most flattering shade,

Wild Strawberry—

a sun-kissed strawberry ton

Delectably fresh in Naylon nail enamel, 60¢,*

and matching shades o

Naylon lipstick or Slimstick,

*$1.00

for complete li

and fingertip beauty • PLUS FED. T

Does your hair sometimes look dull and lifeless . . . is there a telltale shower of distressing flakes no matter what shampoo you use?

Then be on the lookout for infectious dandruff, so prevalent, so hard to get rid of.

Better start now with Listerine Antiseptic and finger-tip massage every time you wash your hair.

YOUR HAIR IS MAGIC TO A MAN . . .

Take care of it!

You see, Listerine Antiseptic kills even the "bottle bacillus" (P. ovale) which so many dermatologists say is a causative agent of infectious dandruff.

You will be delighted to see how wonderfully fresh, cool and clean your scalp feels, how quickly flakes begin to disappear, how healthy your hair looks. Yes, in clinical tests, twice-a-day use of Listerine Antiseptic brought marked improvement within a month to 76% of dandruff sufferers.

As a precaution against infectious dandruff, make Listerine Antiseptic a part of regular hair care no matter what kind of soap or shampoo you use.

For more than 60 years the chief use of Listerine Antiseptic has been as an antiseptic mouthwash and gargle.
LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Missouri

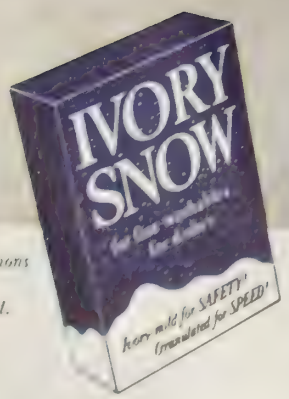
LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC for INFECTIOUS DANDRUFF

P. S. IT'S NEW! Have you tried Listerine TOOTH PASTE, the MINTY 3-way prescription for your teeth?



SAFE...IN SNOW!

Yes, Ivory Snow keeps lovely prints lovely longer!

Jewel-bright rings of color on frosty white! A gem of a print by Gourdon—to add sparkle to dancing evenings. So glamorous, yet so safe with Ivory Snow care! Ivory-mild, Ivory-pure, there's no finer soap made to guard those brilliant colors . . . that fresh clear beauty!

No other soap like it—it's 99 44/100% pure and granulated for instant suds—even in cool water! Perfect for gay washable prints!

Follow directions on the box. They're tested.

Your hands will tell you why! Ivory Snow is extra kind to lovely things, and you can prove it! Just wash dishes with it, as millions do. When you see how it pampers your hands, you'll KNOW it's kind to prints! Wonderful Ivory Snow!

IVORY SNOW

...the only soap both Ivory-mild and granulated for efficiency

Ladies' Home
JOURNAL
Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould
Editors

SMOKE

AMONG the worries of a housewife's existence is dirt in the air. It settles on clean white clothes drying on the line, accumulates in corners of the porch, covers the window sills and curtains. Dirt that people track into a house you can combat. But dirt that just blows in seems like impersonal persecution. Combustion engineers call it atmospheric pollution, which doesn't help much.

Where does this dirt come from? Surveys have been conducted in many cities to find out. Active in this effort is the Coal Producers Committee for Smoke Abatement, representing 500 individual coal-producing companies. They want to help communities to abate smoke.

In a survey of smoke conditions in seven industrial cities, the Coal Producers Committee found combustion plants contributed to "atmospheric pollution" in this order:

1. Laundries and dry-cleaning plants.
2. Hotels, apartment buildings, hospitals.
3. Schools and churches.
4. Miscellaneous manufacturing plants.
5. Manufacturing plants, large.

Among other causes, it blamed overloaded, improperly fired, mechanically defective and obsolete combustion plants. Smoke could be eliminated in many cases by the application of steam or air jets. Smoke is waste. Many consumers could save money and reduce smoke by improving their means and methods of using fuel. Municipal institutions are among the worst offenders. City dumps and incinerators are always violators. According to studies of the Coal Producers Committee, smoke of domestic consumers contributes at the most only 10 per cent to the amount of sootfall.

All authorities on smoke abatement agree there is no one simple way to overcome this problem. Merely passing a city ordinance against smoke will not reduce it. Of the many smoke-consuming devices experimented with throughout the years, none has had much practical value. A large percentage of smoke is due to carelessness and indifference. The human factors involved cannot be controlled by any gadget.

The committee believes the best way to reduce smoke is by intelligent public interest and action through clubs and civic organizations. A courteous approach by the public to industry will put the skill as well as the money of industry to work if it is found necessary to rebuild or replace equipment. People permit smoke, and public opinion can enforce smoke abatement.

YOU can help America

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

IF one writes as much as I do, upon public questions, many letters arrive, very often from women, and usually with the question, "Tell me what I can do to help solve our problems." I think the questioners want me to suggest some organization or movement they might join, or some resolutions they might pass. Certainly they are inquiring regarding means to be active. But I wonder if organization is quite so important as it seems to us, in this highly organized world. It seems to me that at least as important as what we do is what we are—that, indeed, being may be more important than doing.

A nation is, after all, the sum total of its people. It is what they are that counts—not only what they do. It is the thoughts they hold, the attitudes they cultivate, the things they say, not only on the public platform, but among their friends, day to day. These constitute influence, and create the spiritual climate of a nation. Very few people when they are dead are long remembered for what they did—unless they are great geniuses. For the rest of us, swiftly changing time wipes out our works, and changes or eliminates their value. But character is changeless, and remembered. The Greeks said, "Character is Destiny." Walt Whitman said, "Nothing survives except personal character."

Saints are more immortal than great organizers. Gandhi will be longer remembered than Nehru—although like Jesus, he wrote nothing, or nearly nothing. When he did something, it was very simple—like marching to the sea and distilling from it a handful of salt, to say with a simple gesture that it was wrong to tax the people for what God and nature had created in abundance. Like learning to spin and weave at a hand loom, to show the people that even without great factories and modern industries of their own they need not go naked. I doubt whether any man in modern history has had such an all-pervasive influence over his countrymen—and over many not his countrymen—but it all started as a personal influence. He never tried to create a crowd. The crowds created themselves and came to him, because they had confidence in his goodness.

As we cannot all be great organizers, so we cannot all be great saints. No one understands the mystery of the few touched by God. But no matter in how limited circumstances we live, everybody living has friends, relatives, persons close to him. And everybody living is, in himself, a radio-sending station and a radio-receiving station, emanating from himself an influence. Our knowledge of radioactivity is extremely primitive as yet. But several years ago, I heard a great scientist of the General Electric Company say that a machine had already been invented which fluctuated according to the power of thought.

Executive Editor, Mary Bass • Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman • Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Alice Blinn, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Maureen Daly, Dawn Crowell Norman, John Godfrey Morris, Joan Younger, Lonnie Coleman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary • Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Barbara Benson, Margaret Hickey • Assistant Editors: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Donald Stuart, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Matthews, Alice Conkling, June Torrey, Lily Glendinning, Dorothy Counselman Selby, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Glenn Matthew White, Betty Niles Gray, Jan Weyl, Jeanne Scribner • Editorial Assistants: Alice Kastberg, Iris Wilken, Betty Coe, Jeanne Lenton Tracey, Cynthia McAdoo, Eleanor Pownall Simmons, Adrina Casparian, Virginia Price, Marion Plummer, Lois Witherspoon, Philippa Herman, Jeanne Stiles, Elizabeth McFarland, Polly Toland, Leone Seastrom, Elizabeth Crawford, Elizabeth Goetsch, Marthedith F. Stauffer, Virginia Brown.

For thousands of years mankind has believed in the unprovable—in the power of prayer, the power of prayer actually to change the physical universe. Some people said that was superstition, but one of these days we may have scientific support for its truth. Prayer is the most intense concentration of the whole body and spirit on the will for the highest good. Is it not reasonable to suppose that such concentration actually sends out into the universe rays of some kind, communications of some kind, that create or change vibrations? And is it likely that what millions of people have believed through millennia of time is silly superstition?

In my own life the most lasting influence was my father. In worldly terms, he was not a "successful" man. Like Wordsworth's Lucy, he "dwelt among the untrodden ways," living out most of his days as a small-town minister. He was not a great preacher. But the purity and goodness of his spirit; his love of beauty, whether of nature, or literature; his allergy to everything tawdry or cheap; his quiet intolerance of evil; the broadness of his humanity; his patience; his simple and profound religion, that recognized Christ as a continual presence and example, moved everyone with whom he came in contact. In his quiet way he helped unknown numbers of people to straighten out their lives—and with no knowledge of modern psychiatry. He never lived in a village whose gardens did not improve because of his knowledge and love of flowers. When he died, several thousand people came to his funeral. And I never go to upstate New York where we lived but some elderly people manage to see me "because we knew your father."

It is hard to find anything remarkable that he did. But he was, in himself, remarkable enough to be remembered a generation beyond his life by those who knew him. He changed the spiritual climate around him, and always for the better. But I cannot remember that he ever argued. He set standards for himself—and they were somehow catching.

I CANNOT imagine that communists would have gotten anywhere within the radius of his influence. He would not have hated them—he hated sin, but never sinners. He would not have closed his mind to the evils they denounced—he was as sensitive to injustice, and to all attempts to push anyone into a cruel inferiority, as though it had happened to himself. But he was absolutely allergic to demagogy, or to Utopian ideas that life and society could be transformed by the application of any mechanical system, or that good could be accomplished by evil and violent means. He knew the root of all is in man—in his relation to God and to his fellow men. He did not even grasp for himself the reality of social differences. He treated the poorest negro workman with exactly the same courtesy he extended to the rich or famous. For him democracy was something to be lived, not something to be talked about. Democracy was caring for each other, and helping each other. It was, in his mind, God's will for society. It was a godly and Christian way of life, that first of all made demands upon one's self, constant, daily demands.

HE taught his children, more by influence than words, gratitude—gratitude to God and to this country. It never occurred to him that there was something wrong about patriotism. It was as natural for men and women to love their country as it was to love their parents or their children. Their country was the soil that bred and sustained them, given to them to cherish, and improve, and pass on, and, if necessary, defend. Patriotism was not nationalism or chauvinism. He could say with Mazzini, "I love my country because I love the idea of country, wishing nothing for my own country that I would not readily grant to all others." He took it for granted that all men were patriots wherever they lived, and that that was a link between nations and not a division.

Patriotism to him meant homely things—remembering always the others; not putting one's own personal interests up as the only criterion of judging public policies; doing one's own work just as well as one possibly could, because the nation's creativity was only the total of everyone doing his best; trying always to give a little more than one received, because that margin was the nation's wealth to build on and pass on; not being discouraged, because discouragement was a sin—and a sin that infected others; not behaving unseemly, for that corrupted society; and admiring—admiring achievement of all kinds, admiring heroes and great characters; admiring beauty and goodness, and truth; admiring the well-plowed field, the tended forest, the bird song, the stars, the pattern of a snowflake—the wonder and mystery of life—the wonder and mystery of birth and growth and death.

And always opposing to evil, the positive. Not even weeping for one's sins and errors; just recognizing them, seeking forgiveness; and beginning over again—a new life, every morning, every day. Not perpetually denouncing evil, to blow it up in everybody's mind, but proclaiming "glad tidings, of great joy," knowing that the tiny light of one candle is stronger than all darkness.

I think my father was an exceptional soul. But in thousands of homes throughout this country are mothers and fathers and citizens who every day are helping to build and rebuild our great home, without doing much beyond their daily work; never seeing their names in the newspapers; but simply radiating from themselves warmth, confidence, belief, trust, decency and courage. They make the human climate of America; they—too modest even to think it—are helping fulfill Walt Whitman's vision of "a city invincible to the attacks of the whole of the rest of the earth," because it is "the New City of Friends."

THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Day You Die

By Daniel Whitehead Hicky

The day you die I will not say, "Poor dust,
How tired, though young; how rested now, at peace";
Nor shed a tear nor clasp an anguished breast
Above the new-turned earth that grants release.
I shall go seeking all you were, and find
Dark eyes that I remember where larkspurs blow,
And, listening, pluck your voice from the warm wind
As clearly as a red rose from the snow.
Granite can never capture nor hold you fast;
Forever at my side your steps will be,
Tracing the paths we knew and loved the best,
And searching restless patterns of the sea
I will find your face in all the tides that run,
Your laughter, defiant, lifting toward the sun.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Bake the Swift'ning* Sweetheart Cake

...in these clever new

HEART-SHAPED ALUMINUM LAYER PANS!

Set of 2 only 75¢ with the paper disc from inside a can of Swift'ning (or red portion of unwinding band)

■ They're new! They're a marvelous bargain! They're made of fine quality aluminum that will wear and wear for years!

Heart-shaped layer pans! With them and marvelous Swift'ning you'll turn out cakes to dream about.

Pure, snowy-white Swift'ning contains an exclusive quick-mix ingredient for lighter, lovelier cakes. And tests prove it makes flakier pies than any other all-purpose shortening.

Swift'ning gives you crisp, digestible fried foods. Swift'ning is extra nutritious. It keeps without refrigeration. Get wonderful Swift'ning today and send for your heart-shaped pans!

Swift'ning is digestible! Nutritious, too!

A Martha Logan Quick-Mix Recipe

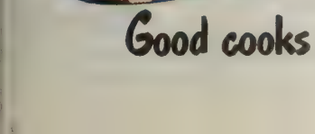
THE LOVELIEST CAKE YOU EVER BAKED!

Make it for a Bridal Party or for a Birthday; for a Wedding Anniversary, for Father's Day, or just to please some one you love.

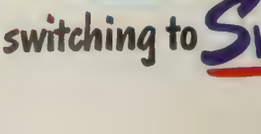
Preparation: Have all ingredients at room temperature. Preheat oven at 375° F. Line bottoms of 2 heart-shaped pans (equivalent to two 9" round pans) with waxed paper.

Ingredients:
- ½ cup Swift'ning
- 2½ cups sifted cake flour
- 4 tsp. double acting baking powder (5¼ if tartrate type)
- 1 tsp. salt
- 1½ cups sugar
- 1 cup milk
- 1 tsp. vanilla
- 4 egg whites

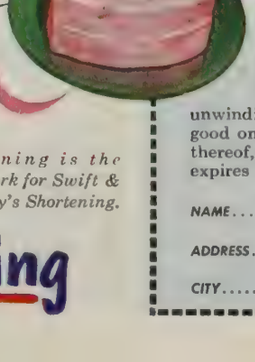
Step 1: Put Swift'ning in bowl. Sift in flour, baking powder, salt and sugar. Add ⅔ cup of the milk, and vanilla. Beat 2 min. on medium speed of electric mixer, or by hand using 150 strokes per min. Throughout mixing keep batter scraped from sides and bottom of bowl with rubber scraper. Scrape bowl and beaters.



Step 2: Add unbeaten egg whites and remaining ⅓ cup milk. Beat for 2 additional minutes. Scrape bowl and beaters. Pour equal amounts of batter into pans. Bake about 28 minutes, or till done. Cool.



Fill and frost with 7-minute icing. Reserve a little and tint to match flowers. Edge cake with tinted frosting, using tip of a spoon. Coil ribbon around plate (hold in place with bits of tape if necessary) and tuck sweetpeas, or other flowers, into loops.



Folder with recipes for 8 glamorous Special Occasion Cakes comes with your pans!

*Swift'ning is the trade-mark for Swift & Company's Shortening.

Good cooks are switching to Swift'ning

CLIP THIS ORDER BLANK! SEND FOR YOUR CAKE PANS NOW!

Swift'ning, Dept. F, Box 6365, Chicago 77, Ill.

Please send me my set of two Heart-Shaped aluminum Layer Cake Pans, and folder of Special Occasion Cake Recipes. I enclose 75¢ in coins and paper disc from inside a can of Swift'ning or red portion of unwinding band. (Allow up to 3 weeks for delivery. Offer is good only in the U. S. A. Void in any state, or subdivision thereof, where prohibited, taxed or otherwise restricted. Offer expires December 31, 1949, or when supply is exhausted.)

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

CITY.....STATE.....

The finest ever made!

Shhh!..

It's a delicious secret!

Only we know the wondrous touch of bakery magic that keeps two chocolate cookies crisper when spread with velvety cream filling! It's the reason no other English Style cookies have the tender firmness and cool, cool flavor of Sunshine HYDROX.

Try them today—and see! Your grocer has them in the pantry package or handy cellophane bag.

Sunshine
HYDROX
CREAM-FILLED CHOCOLATE COOKIES
in the pantry package or handy cellophane bag

From the Thousand Window Bakeries of Sunshine Biscuits ©1949

(Continued from Page 14)

couldn't be a matter of who's going to get that diamond ring, could it?

REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"Very funny! I would have to pick a man with a sense of humor!"

"I guess a sense of humor is what Husbands tell each other their wives haven't got."

So says Ogden Nash in VERSUS, his latest collection of verses.

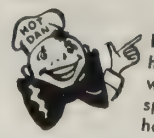
"A man in pajamas after nine Transgresses the housewife's Party Line."

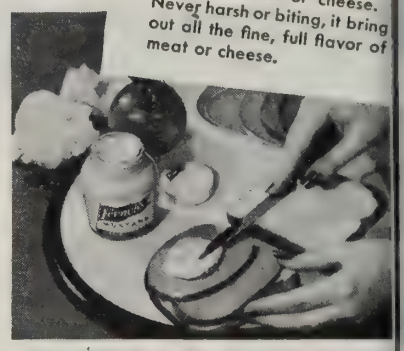
"A commuter is one who never knows how a show comes out because he has to leave early to catch a train to get him back to the country in time to catch a train to bring him back to the city."

"Middle age is when you've met so many people that every new person you meet reminds you of someone else.
And when golfers' stomachs escape either over or under their belts.
It's when you gulp oysters without bothering to look for pearls.
And your offspring cannot but snicker when you refer to your classmates as boys and your bridge partners as girls.
It's when you wouldn't visit Fred Allen or the Aga Khan if it meant sleeping on a sofa or a cot.
And your most exciting moment is when your shoelace gets tangled and you wonder whether if you yank it, it will come clean or harden into a concrete knot.
And Al Capone and Babe Ruth and Scott Fitzgerald are as remote as the Roman emperors,
And you spend your Saturday afternoons buying wedding presents for the daughters of your contemporers."



•

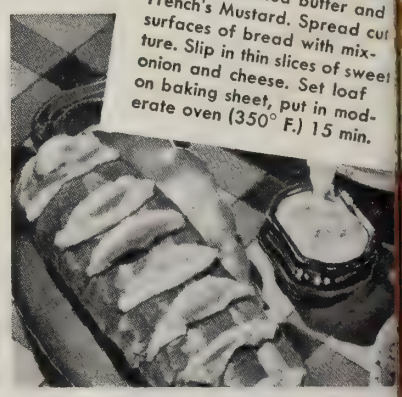
How the Victorian Age got that way is what we gleaned between the lines of THE LIFE OF THE PRINCE CONSORT, by Roger Fulford. This is by no means the theme of Mr. Fulford's excellent biography, concerned as it is with Albert's important but hitherto neglected place in English politics. But in spite of the fact that the politics are enormously illuminating, the personalities—for women readers at any rate—overtop them.



Victoria's court, before Albert stepped into it, was far from the formal respectable collection we had always assumed it to be. The Lord Chamberlain, Conyngham, whose wife was a Paget, had his mistress installed as housekeeper in Buckingham Palace, and Lord Uxbridge, the Lord Steward, also of the Paget faction, likewise had his mistress in the palace domestic staff. In fact, the newspapers of the day called Windsor Castle the Paget Club House (the Pagets being,

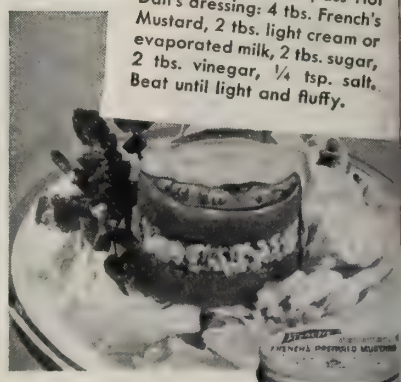
(Continued on Page 18)

Sandwiches



Lunchbox Special—For hearty he-man size sandwiches, French's is the ideal spread. Perfect with sliced ham, liverwurst or cheese. Never harsh or biting, it brings out all the fine, full flavor of meat or cheese.

are super



Toasted Party Loaf—Slic a Vienna loaf down to (but not through) bottom crust in thick slices. Mix equal quantities of softened butter and French's Mustard. Spread cut surfaces of bread with mixture. Slip in thin slices of sweet onion and cheese. Set loaf on baking sheet, put in moderate oven (350° F.) 15 min.

made with FRENCH'S

Tomato Salad Sandwich—Cut 2 thick slices from a large ripe tomato. Put minced ham between slices and pass Hot Dan's dressing: 4 tbs. French's Mustard, 2 tbs. light cream or evaporated milk, 2 tbs. sugar, 2 tbs. vinegar, ¼ tsp. salt. Beat until light and fluffy.

SMOOTHER—CREAMIER!

FREE!
NEW RECIPE BOOK
"Dining Delights"
Send name and address to The R. T. French Co., 1530 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.

Largest Selling Prepared Mustard in the U. S. A. tod
(Also made in Canada)

"We love lazy Sunday breakfast —with this quick, can't-fail coffee!"

You'll say it's dreamy, too—this easy way to make delicious coffee—right in the cup. Two cups, or ten if you like. And every cup just right!

Magically convenient! Just measure Nescafé* to suit each taste—add piping hot water and stir. Coffee's ready in a jiffy—good coffee—and right every time. No guesswork for strength you like. No fussing with messy pot or grounds.

Wonderfully flavorful... Nescafé has all the body and "lift" of freshly brewed coffee. Nescafé is brewed by experts... stays fresh and flavorful too, thanks to the added carbohydrates that seal-in all that goodness until you release it in the cup.

Yes, less work for you, grand coffee for all—when you serve Nescafé for breakfast, lunch, dinner, or any time between. Always keep a jar handy. Get Nescafé today—in the regular size or big economy size jar.

Easy Sunday-Best Breakfast

STRAWBERRIES AND CREAM
(get 'em frozen—ready to enjoy)

BUTTERED WAFFLES WITH HONEY
(use prepared mix—no fuss, no failure)

NESCAFÉ

No pot, no grounds—
just add piping hot water

If you like good coffee, you'll love Nescafé! Try it—see why more people drink Nescafé than any other instant coffee!

NESCAFÉ makes coffee right— every morning, noon or night!

Nescafé cuts coffee bills, too!

Serve Nescafé as your regular coffee—and save! Even a small jar makes about as many cups as a pound of ordinary ground coffee —yet costs less in actual cash.

BIG ECONOMY SIZE JAR SAVES EVEN MORE!

*Nescafé (pronounced NES-CAFAY) is the exclusive registered trade-mark of The Nestlé Company, Inc. to designate its soluble coffee product. It is composed of equal parts of pure soluble coffee and added carbohydrates (dextrins, maltose and dextrose) added solely to protect the flavor.

Want a handy extra oven in your new electric range?

Ask your Frigidaire Dealer to show you the double-oven Electric Range that makes cooking twice as simple!

Lifetime Porcelain finish inside and out for permanent beauty!

Double-quick dinners are so much easier to get with the double-oven Frigidaire Electric Range! Ask your Frigidaire Dealer to prove to you how much time you'll save when you can bake and broil electrically at the same time—or when you can bake, broil or roast a double quantity of food using both ovens at once.

And what grand big ovens they are! The exclusive Frigidaire Evenizer assures even heat distribution—the extra-thick insulation keeps the heat in the oven and out of the kitchen—and the porcelain finished surfaces and rounded corners make cleaning up a cinch for you!

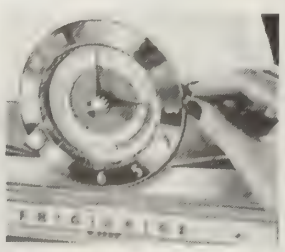
Top-of-the-range cooking is simpler and easier, too. You just cook your regular way—but get better results than ever with the 5 exact controlled heats provided by each of the Frigidaire Radiantube Surface Cooking Units.

Visit your Frigidaire Dealer today—let him show you more of the special advantages of this Frigidaire Electric Range—one of eight different models. Ask for a demonstration, too, of other Frigidaire appliances for better kitchens and laundries, including the Frigidaire Refrigerator and the Frigidaire All-Porcelain Automatic Washer.

Find dealer's name in Classified Phone Directory. Or write, Frigidaire Division of General Motors, Dayton 1, Ohio. In Canada, Leaside 12, Ontario.

Listen to Frigidaire's New Lum and Abner Show, Sunday nights, on your Columbia Station.

FRIGIDAIRE



Electric Ranges

The broiler's high-speed—and waist-high! And the extra-deep broiler pan with smokeless type grid broils foods easily. Also doubles as a roasting pan and trivet.

Now it's a small oven—now it isn't! The Tripe Duty Thermizer is so adaptable to your needs—as a casserole, a baking or a roasting oven, or deep-well cooker.

Really automatic cooking— with the Cook-Master Oven Clock Control! Move two hands and flip a lever—the oven turns on, turns off automatically.

(Continued from Page 16)

apparently, no better than they should be). Albert, however, once he got into his stride, put a stop to all this and a lot more. And the impact of his righteous indignation still resounds in every respectable home and in nearly every moral precept, of England and America.

Poor Albert! He had already had his troubles with an extravagant and light-minded father. "If you could restrain Papa from constantly asking me for money," he wrote home from England to a friend in Germany, "I should be grateful."

Albert was not popular in the early days, except with his Queen. "Discreet, dogmatic, and a doctrinaire, he lacked the lightness of touch and inconsequence which an Englishman liked and understood." Mr. Fulford explains. "Few men can have had a greater command of the bromide than had the Prince. The obvious fell from his pen in soporific profusion. . . . He approached the writing table as if it were a pew in church."

But how Victoria adored him! And how surely he guided the reins which she held in those little white hands! By the time he died, the country adored him too, and abandoned itself to mourning. The blanket of conformity had covered them all, and only a few remembered their earlier disapproval. Lord Orford, an eccentric Norfolk nobleman, was one of the exceptions. On hearing of the death, he at once changed into his brightest clothes, to express his pleasure that at least one foreigner was safely out of the way. But we do not want to mislead: this is a serious as well as an entertaining book, and a work of fine scholarship. In spite of the scattered remarks quoted here, Mr. Fulford held his subject in highest esteem.

•

A good malaprop, says Goodman Ace, radio specialist in malaprops, should have a special, behind-the-lines kind of humor. Like the woman who talks on and on about nothing: "She monotonizes the conversation." And the man who had to get up very early in the morning: "He got up at the crank of dawn." And the girl whose coming-out party ended in a free-for-all when she made her "debris." Insomnia is "mind over mattress," and there are a million others, "too humorous to mention." (It's a question how Prince Albert would have taken these!)

"Instead of counting sheep, why not try imagining it's time to get up?"

•

Cream Hill, by Lewis Gannett, is a lovely book about the home in Connecticut the author bought twenty-five years ago. About the seasons that rounded the years out, the birds that nested near by, the flowers that prospered in the garden that Lewis and Ruth planted, the wild flowers that they brought in from the woods, the neighbors, the weather, the work and fun. It was a week-end home for two busy people, and the exact opposite in

(Continued on Page 21)

get a "two-in-one" COSCO Step Stool

Model 4-D: Chromium, enamel trim; upholstered seat and back.

a convenient ladder Swing out the self-locking, rubber-treaded steps. Presto! It's a sturdy, steady, six-leg ladder for safer climbing. Handy—easy to use any place in the house.

a comfortable seat Swing the steps beneath the seat . . . or use them as a footrest. Either way, you're sitting pretty! Upholstered seat and form-fit back lighten tiring tasks.

four smart models Lighten your work—brighten your home—with a Cosco "two-in-one" Step Stool. Four all-metal models, five gay colors. Other Cosco Stools for every purpose, every purse, $2.95 to $16.75. At leading department, furniture, appliance and hardware stores.

HAMILTON MANUFACTURING CORPORATION
COLUMBUS, INDIANA

Also makers of COSCO Utility Tables

Visit your Youngstown Kitchen dealer and see this gleaming, white-enameled steel beauty—exactly as illustrated. It's so easy to own!

Dream kitchens with wished-for price tags utiful 66″ twin-bowl Kitchenaider-Mullin- r Combination (one of 10 models). Dishwash- and food preparation are wonderfully easy. drawers, two huge compartments. One-piece of finest, acid-resisting porcelain enamel. Spar- g white finish blends perfectly with modern liances and any wall and floor color scheme.

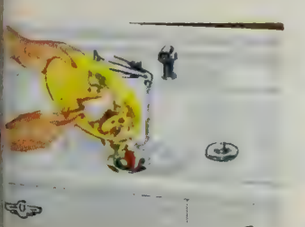
THERE'S more pleasure for your family in a Youngstown Kitchen than any other home equipment.

A gorgeous kitchen of lifetime, white-enameled steel that's just right for you is created by arranging a Youngstown Kitchenaider cabinet sink with base and wall cabinets and accessories. No costly remodeling!



This month Youngstown dealers are featuring the lovely kitchen shown above. Stop in and see the work-saving, 48″ twin-bowl Kitchenaider with laundry-deep second bowl (11″). Note the lavish storage space, wide work areas . . . the "extra touches" you're sure to want. Then you'll know it's Youngstown for you, whether you build or remodel.

The price is like a wish come true. A Youngstown Kitchen costs only a FEW DOLLARS a month, financing through dealer or bank. No wonder Youngstown is the unquestioned kitchen leader!

To learn the name of a nearby factory-trained dealer, call Western Union by number and ask for Operator 25 . . . or send coupon.

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION
WARREN, OHIO
World's Largest Makers of Steel Kitchens

Youngstown Kitchens
BY MULLINS

e magic! Mullinaider electric gar- e disposer shreds food waste, sends lown the drain. Fits all Kitchen- rs. Safe, simple operation. Ask FREE home demonstration.

See the swinging mixing-faucet and speedy rinse spray. Spray reaches all parts of sink top. Great for dishwashing and cleaning vegetables. Typical Youngstown value. See your dealer!

GET THIS EXCITING BOOKLET!

20 pages featuring beautiful Youngstown Kitchens in color. Full details of Youngstown units and tips on arranging a new kitchen. Enclose 10c in cash. No stamps, please.

I plan to build ☐

I plan to remodel ☐

I want a free home demonstration of the Mullinaider ☐

SEND COUPON TODAY!

Youngstown Kitchens
Mullins Manufacturing Corporation
Dept. L-649, Warren, Ohio

Please send me your Youngstown Kitchen booklet. I enclose 10c in cash, to cover cost of mailing.

NAME _____ (PLEASE PRINT)

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ ZONE _____

COUNTY _____ STATE _____ ★

Exciting! New!

PRELL REMOVES DANDRUFF IN AS LITTLE AS 3 MINUTES
LEAVES YOUR HAIR SOFTER, LOVELIER, MORE RADIANT!

→ "That Prell tube is terrific in the shower—no bottles or jars to break! And man—what Prell does to unsightly dandruff . . . !" says William Bendix, star of the radio show and Universal-International's film "The Life of Riley."

Doctors' examinations proved Prell—with its exclusive formula and its amazing patented cleansing ingredient—removes unsightly dandruff in as little as 3 minutes! And your hair shines with radiance after Prell! It's more radiant than with any soap shampoo known . . . more radiant—in hardest water—than with any leading cream shampoo! So soft, too, yet so easy to set, to curl, to manage.

Economical! Prell goes farther than any other known shampoo, because it's more concentrated. No messy jars or breakable bottles either—with that handy tube! Get a large size tube of this Radiant*Creme shampoo today—all your family will love it!

← Meg Randall—"Babs" in "The Life of Riley" film—loves Prell for hair glamor. "My hair shines with radiance after Prell—and it's so manageable!" she says enthusiastically.

Created by Procter & Gamble

®T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

I refused to look old at 40!

It's all right to "be your age," but you won't look it in your new Spirella foundation garment. Made to your individual requirements on Spirella's exclusive designing principle, it lets you bend and twist as you please because it lifts as nature intended, upward and backward for a naturally beautiful, active figure.

You'll get a preview of things Spirella does in the privacy of your home, when the Spirella Corsetiere takes your measurements over the patented Spirella Modeling Garment. Your individual Spirella fits like your skin! Doesn't ride up, or constrict at the waist. Doesn't pull on hose supporters. Famous Spirella stay holds its shape and your shape longer, too! Don't let your figure make you old . . . you can look, act, and feel years younger with Spirella's help!

For the name of your local Spirella Corsetiere, write The Spirella Company, Inc., Dept. L-6, Niagara Falls, N. Y. (In Canada, Niagara Falls, Ont.)

Press down on stomach, That's the cramped feeling of ordinary garments

Now lower your hands and lift up! That's like Spirella's all day comfort

Get a natural lift with

Spirella

(Continued from Page 18)

every way of Mr. Blandings' Dream House. The tale of the Gannetts' experiences is leisurely, peaceful, humorous.

After Lewis Gannett had bought his house, he learned that his great-great-grandfather had also lived there on the same hill. And by some scientifically accurate deducting, he works out the scene in nature as his ancestor saw it—the different trees that grew there then, the changes that had occurred in weeds and flowers and shrubs—as neat a piece of historical botany as you can find anywhere.

•

LESSER CROSSROADS, by Andrew D. Mellick, Jr., is another kind of account of an ancestor and how he lived. It is a re-creation of the 18th century in northern New Jersey: the Revolution in miniature, General Washington marching through to Morristown at the head of his small force, the redcoats not far away, and the Hessians and the Delaware River. Best of all are the titbits of daily living, such as boiling tea well, throwing away the liquid and eating the tea leaves with butter; and cooking sausages in chocolate sauce. The Governor of New Jersey at the time was a Tory, and the illegitimate son of Benjamin Franklin into the bargain. The great Tory stronghold was Brooklyn. And it took six days by water to get from Philadelphia to New York.

•

The 10 books which, in the opinion of publishers, influenced American thought most progressively in 1948, and from which the $1000 Gutenberg Award was chosen, are:

CRUSADE IN EUROPE,
by Dwight D. Eisenhower

CRY, THE BELOVED COUNTRY,
by Alan Paton

EDUCATION IN A DIVIDED WORLD,
by James Bryant Conant

THE GATHERING STORM,
by Winston Churchill

THE NAKED AND THE DEAD,
by Norman Mailer

NO PLACE TO HIDE,
by David Bradley

OUR PLUNDERED PLANET,
by Fairfield Osborn

ROAD TO SURVIVAL,
by William Vogt

ROOSEVELT AND HOPKINS,
by Robert E. Sherwood

SEXUAL BEHAVIOR IN THE HUMAN MALE, by Kinsey, Pomeroy and Martin.

The award went to ROOSEVELT AND HOPKINS.

•

HOW TO TELL THE BIRDS FROM THE FLOWERS, by Robert Williams Wood, is a book that might just possibly be on your shelf of old well-thumbed children's books. It came out in 1917, and we've never known child or grownup who, seeing it, hasn't been entranced.

•

The age of specialization in cookbooks has come. Now we have THE ART OF FISH COOKERY, by Milo Miloradovich. It has eighty-five Lobster recipes, to say nothing of Hake and Prawns and Eels and Cusk and Buffalo Fish and Black Drum and Albacore and Alewife Roe. No home adjacent to water can afford to be without it, and in other homes they can dream, can't they? Seriously, it is a splendid cookbook.

"I dress for a dinner dance... at 8 o'clock in the morning!"

1. "For a busy day, I love my chic ensemble in contrasting woolens with its matching bonnet. And, of course, I rely on gentler, even more effective Odorono Cream . . . because I know it protects me from perspiration and odor a full 24 hours!"

New Odorono Cream brings you an improved new formula in a bright new package. Stays creamy smooth too . . . even if you leave the cap off for weeks!

2. "For a brilliant evening, I remove the jacket and hat, and presto! My dress turns into a new off-the-shoulder formal! I'm confident of my charm all evening, too, thanks to new Odorono Cream . . . because I find it gives me the most effective protection I've ever known!"

It never harms fine fabrics, and is so gentle you can use it right after shaving! You'll find it the perfect deodorant.

New Odorono Cream safely stops perspiration and odor a full 24 hours!

(Now in new 25¢ and 50¢ sizes, plus tax)

7 salad dressings

FROM THIS ONE LEMON RECIPE!

Jaded taste buds wake up quick when you spring one of these Sunkist salad dressings on your family!

The thing that makes these seven dressings so appetizing is that they begin with that magical ingredient, fresh lemon juice! No other ingredient gives the subtlety and quality of flavor that fresh lemon juice provides. And—perhaps because lemons have a freshness that only nature can give—nothing else does so much to bring out the garden freshness of greens, vegetables and fruits.

You'll like these dressings, too, because they're so easy. Start using them on your salads now, to spark up your family's interest in these health-giving foods. And don't forget—fresh lemon itself adds a lot of health to salads by contributing its own rich store of vitamins.

Sunkist French Dressing

½ cup fresh lemon juice ½ cup salad oil
1 tsp. salt 2 tbsp. sugar

Mix together. Then, with this delicious French dressing as a base, make any of the seven variations by adding ingredients as listed at right. To have salad greens extra crisp, chill them in ice water with 1 tbsp. lemon juice added. Serve salads cold. Add dressing just before serving.

WANT TO MAKE SALADS MORE ENTICING? VARY THE FLAVOR THESE EASY, APPETIZING WAYS:

Using ½ cup Sunkist French dressing as a base, create the variation you want by adding ingredients as follows:

1. For Combination Vegetable Salads (as illustrated at left). Use dressing plain, or add ½ tsp. paprika, ½ tsp. celery seed, ½ tsp. mustard.
2. For Green Salads and Quartered Firm Head Lettuce. Add 2 rounded tbsp. crumbled Roquefort or Bleu cheese. Mix thoroughly.
3. For Fruit Salads. Add 1½ tbsp. red jelly and 1 tbsp. sieved cream cheese. (Whenever you use apple, banana or avocado slices in a salad, a quick dip in lemon juice will keep them from darkening.)
4. For Fish Salads. Add 2 tbsp. each finely cut water cress and cucumber. Marinate fish in basic French dressing until well seasoned before serving.
5. For Orange, Pear, Banana Salad. Add 1 tbsp. each finely cut mint leaves and maraschino cherries.
6. For Waldorf or Mixed Fruit Salads. Add ¼ cup finely chopped nuts.
7. For Orange Ambrosia Salad. Add ½ cup toasted almonds, shredded.

For scores of wonderful new recipes, send for that famous Sunkist Lemon Recipe Book. Free. Write Sunkist, Sec. 206, Box 2706, Terminal Annex, Los Angeles 54, Cal.

Fresh California
Sunkist Lemons

Lemonade-time coming!

Yes, but what's the use of waiting? Any time is the right time for the most delicious refresher of them all. Here's a [illegible]:

[illegible]
And keep [illegible] handy!
Put in covered glass jar (not metal or enamel) in refrigerator. Juice keeps fresh flavor for days, loses almost no vitamins.

Lemonade's ready any time- just add ice and water.

Time now for iced tea, too. Serve a generous lemon wedge with every glass.

FRESH LEMONS PROVIDE VERY SPECIAL HEALTH VALUES

Fresh lemons not only supply valuable amounts of vitamin B, but also rare vitamin P, and are among the richest sources of vitamin C. Essential for youthful energy, sound teeth and gums, vitamin C is absent from most foods, scarce in most others. You need it daily. Fresh lemons are important to health.

For the best lemons, get Sunkist in trademarked wrappers. Finest from 14,500 cooperating California and Arizona citrus growers.

UNMARRIED MOTHERS...

Better Maternity Homes

By Margaret Hickey

HARSH intolerance is still the portion of the unmarried mother and her child. Many girls fearful of society's penalties seek assistance far from home and at a time when they are least able to make a wise decision. As a result they are frequently victims of furtive living, bad medical care and heartless treatment by unlicensed agencies snatching for adoptable children.

Twelve states, Hawaii and Puerto Rico, as well as several large cities, now issue birth cards designed to protect the baby from the label of illegitimacy. But most communities continue to overlook the fact that the first step in helping the baby born out of wedlock should be sympathetic treatment of the mother. For the good of both the baby and herself the unmarried mother needs the same kindly, efficient care that all mothers should have.

Help Through Authorized Agencies

An expectant mother who does not know of a social agency to help her in planning for herself and the baby can obtain advice from the Council of Social Agencies if she lives in a city. Or she can consult the county department of welfare if she lives in a rural area or small town. They will refer her to an appropriate social agency, where interviews and guidance will be on an individual and strictly confidential basis. The assistance of these agencies assures girls of good medical care under approved auspices and protects them from the pitfalls to be encountered by acting through unauthorized sources.

If a girl can't afford to pay the full cost of care during pregnancy, and particularly if she is thinking of placing her baby for adoption, the necessary arrangements generally can be made more readily in her own state, according to the U. S. Children's Bureau. "The girl who plans to give her baby up wants to be sure that it will receive good care, and placement through an approved social agency will help to insure this," the bureau says.

Emphasis on Mother's Well-Being

The Salvation Army, one of the first organizations to give asylum to unmarried mothers, is now one of the most active in departing from the rescue type of institution and adopting the newer and sounder methods of hospital and home care. The Army's 35 homes provide temporary security and the best possible medical services for the expectant mother who doesn't have a wedding ring. Services in the 48 Florence Crittenton homes include a variety of educational and recreational activities from which girls may choose according to their interests. In some homes classes in sewing, nutrition, first aid, homemaking and similar subjects are held under volunteer leadership from the American Red Cross, Young Women's Christian Association, and other community resources.

Group Work

"Belonging" in a group, the feeling of acceptance, is often a big factor in helping girls adjust to the home and to their own situations. In a survey of homes caring for 1800 girls, the National Committee on Services to Unmarried Parents found group work most effective when based on the individual interests of the girls and when the girls themselves have a part in planning. THE END

Salvation Army Care

FOUR girls stood in a darkened doorway and looked across the hall, through dimity curtains on the glass doors leading to the hospital wing of the red brick mansion. They saw a still, white figure being wheeled on a cart from the labor room to the delivery room, and they watched as the obstetrician hurried in.

"Gee, poor Betsy," said Marjorie, 17. "I was with her in the recreation room. She wouldn't admit she was having labor pains and then she started to cry. She kept saying, 'Oh, my poor baby ——!'"

The girls were new residents of Booth Memorial Hospital, the hilltop house in Pittsburgh where the Salvation Army last year cared for 130 unwed mothers. There are 25 girls there now.

Nervous about Betsy and about themselves, the newcomers trooped upstairs to find Maj. Ruth Evangeline Kimball, a trained social worker, who is superintendent of the home.

"I'm scared," Marjorie told the major. "How can I ever go through with this? I'm disgraced all my life now."

Marjorie was a baby herself, six months old, when she first faced legal authorities. Her parents were charged with neglect and she became a charge of the juvenile court. She lived in institutions and foster homes all her life until last year. She was eight when the head of the family in one boarding home beat her because, holding a winning ticket in a raffle, she had selected a satin-gowned doll as her prize instead of a basket of canned goods. When she was 15, the court let her live with a married brother, declared later to be as unfit as the parents for whom she no longer has even an address. To get three dollars for drinking money, her brother sold Marjorie's dog and told the child the police had taken it.

Major Kimball knew all these facts. She listened while Marjorie told the rest—how, as a 16-year-old who had never even had a date, she became involved with a man twice her age.

"I guess it was because he paid attention to me," Marjorie said, "and when he said all those nice things I believed him. The case worker says it's because he was older and I was looking for my father. . . . Oh, what will I do?" The button-black eyes filled and she wept.

(Continued on Page 164)

HOMER PAGE

This expectant mother enjoys seclusion and good medical care at Booth Memorial Hospital. From her bedroom window she looks hopefully upon the outside world to which she later will return.

KEPPLER

Dearly beloved . . . from this day forward . . .

WAMSUTTA Supercale

The knowing bride will cherish your gift of incomparable *Supercale . . . for you are giving her more than fine sheets.

You give tradition . . . that has made Wamsutta the trousseau choice of six generations of brides. You give the pride which goes with the possession of Supercale. You give luxurious slumber . . . born of extra combing, over-200 thread-count and smoother Equi-Tension weaving.

You give magnificently . . . unforgettably . . . for the years. And when you have Supercale in your home, you enjoy the best sheet it is possible to make or buy.

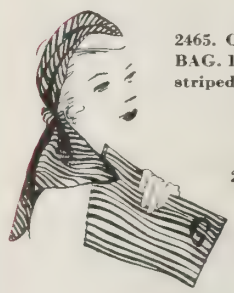
Write for our helpful booklet: "Guide for the Bride." Tells you what to select for bed and bath. WAMSUTTA MILLS, Dept. 31, New Bedford, Mass.

Organdy by John-Frederics. Slip covers and drapery of Wamsutta [illegible]. Coverlet of Wamsutta Batiste. Wamsutta Fabrics are available both by-the-yard and in better-styled ready-to-wear.

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Reference Library

BONNETS AND BAGS

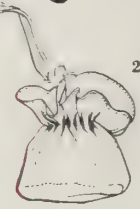


HOW many times have you wished for not one but two or three bright summer hats with matching bags or gloves? One in red—another in stripes? It's easy enough to have those dreams come true. Make your own accessories. Be budget wise and fashion perfect.

2461. STOCKING-CAP BERET AND BAG. 15¢. Use a bright cotton—polka-dot piqué or shantung.

2463. VEILING BERET. 15¢. Easy to make from wide-mesh veiling fastened to ribbon band.

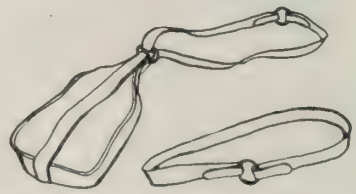
2465. CROWNLESS TURBAN AND BAG. 15¢. Smart in polka-dot silk, striped piqué or faille.



2500. CARRY-ALL BAGS. 15¢. Make one in canvas for swimming dates, another in wool for knitting.

2464. WHITE PIQUÉ BERET AND BAG. 15¢. The wedge-shaped sections are sewn together by hand.

2462. FIELD-FLOWER WREATH. 15¢. Wreath ties with ribbon. Other trimming ideas included with pattern.



2496. DRAPED BERET. 15¢. Make this to match gloves in piqué, linen or shantung.

2223. BASIC GLOVE PATTERN. 15¢. For original gloves, make your own in several different materials.

2477. CUFF GLOVE. 15¢. So crisp in white waffle piqué. Or try a soft color in faille.

2424. CORDUROY BAG AND BELT. 10¢. A bright twosome to wear with a simple cotton dress.

OTHER FEATURES

Lists are sent free on request. They give the title, number and price of all our booklets and patterns.

2008. LIST OF DEPARTMENTAL BOOKLETS. For your home, garden, beauty, entertaining and child care.
1695. SUB DEB BOOKLET LIBRARY.
1660. LIST OF JOURNAL HAT AND BAG PATTERNS.
2333. CHILDREN'S PATTERNS LIST.
2076. THINGS-TO-WEAR PATTERNS. Aprons, blouses, accessories.
1571. REFERENCE LIST OF KNITTED AND CROCHETED PATTERNS.
1752. HANDICRAFT PATTERN LIST. Things for you to make for your home, your children, gifts or yourself.

We will gladly send any of these booklets and patterns if you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes or Savings Stamps. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

THESE TINY DIAMONDS OF LUX

keep colors lovely up to 3 times as long!

GUESS WHICH!

Sheer dotted swiss and organdie in peppermint red and white. Compare the dress with the sample—guess which one has been Luxed!

ANSWER:

The sample was Luxed 12 times —looks as lovely as the dress!

TINY DIAMONDS of LUX give faster suds

Pour out some of the tiny diamonds of Lux—see how they billow up into thick, creamy suds the minute water touches them—faster than a wink.

...richer suds

These richer suds last and last . . . wonderful even in hard water! It's amazing the way they float away soil which other types of suds can't—yet they leave colors lovelier. Don't risk wrong washing methods!

...gentler suds

Believe your hands! Lux diamonds are milder. If harsh suds leave your hands rough and dry, think what they may do to delicate fabrics. Colors stay lovely up to 3 times as long with gentle Lux Flakes care. Anything safe in water is safe in Lux Flakes.

THESE TINY DIAMONDS OF LUX ARE ANOTHER TRIUMPH OF THE WORLD-FAMOUS LEVER LABORATORIES

Making Marriage Work

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph.D., Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

Understanding the opposite sex isn't easy—as any man will tell you.

Understanding the Male

IT isn't easy for women to understand men. Not only do the two sexes differ biologically but they differ psychologically and emotionally. The influences of environment, training and experience unite to widen the differences as time passes. And understanding of some of these differences is the first step in adjusting to them.

The sexes differ from the very moment of conception. If the cell has an x chromosome a girl develops, if a y chromosome a boy. At birth, a boy will weigh several ounces more than a girl and be nearly an inch longer. Throughout his life span, he will be larger and 50 per cent stronger than she.

His deeper voice is due to longer and heavier vocal cords. He is more active than she because his basal metabolism is higher. Consequently, he needs more fuel to keep him going. Since his production of hormones is more regular, he is steadier, less subject to moods and less able to understand her moods or to sympathize with them. He thinks of menstruation and childbearing as normal functions, and he may not view his wife's pregnancy as world-shaking.

Psychological differences are accentuated by environment. In school and college, he seeks achievement on the athletic field, she in scholastic accomplishment, and her grades probably exceed his. She is more facile in speech and excels him in language skills, in school and later. But in mathematics and mechanical aptitude, he is superior. He has more general information, she has more clerical ability.

Socially they differ sharply. Characteristically women are more interested in parties and organized functions than men. Women want to observe the amenities; men very often choose to ignore them. Husband and wife often clash because she wants to go out at night, he prefers to stay home to rest or work.

Sexually the male is much more aggressive. He takes the initiative in petting during courtship, and in marriage is far more demanding than she, because of his stronger desire. His sex drive, itself a form of creation, may be the reason for his greater general creativeness. Physical readiness is far less essential to her, so she should be generous in meeting his needs.

Many women don't realize that the average wife is healthier than the average husband, and will live several years longer than he. Her heavier insulating layer of fat makes it easier for her to adjust to changes in temperature. Since her heat production is less, she perspires far less. She is much less likely to be a victim of colds. Their tastes in foods differ because their needs differ; he requires about a fifth more protein than she. That is why he doesn't go for salads.

A woman's standards and ideals are generally more exacting than her husband's. She is more conscious of manners, more faithful to custom, more religiously inclined, and less tolerant of breaches of "acceptable" behavior. A male frequently rebels at the double standard of morality without realizing its foundation, that fatherhood can never be as conclusive as motherhood. She may imitate him by wearing slacks but he never imitates her by wearing a skirt.

Thus men and women differ. In some ways each sex is superior to the other. By understanding some of the characteristic differences between male and female, you may be better able to resolve some of the difficulties between you and your husband.

Of course there are many exceptions to the generalizations we have made. Perhaps these observations don't apply to you and your husband. But, if they do, their recognition may bring you both greater contentment and serenity.

Wives Who Work

THE married woman who holds a job outside her home is no longer a rare phenomenon. Today about one wife in five is employed, and one third of all employed women are married and living with their husbands.

There are many reasons why women continue to hold jobs after marriage. Some work from financial necessity, others for extra comforts, or because they prefer the routine of office, factory or store to housework. A minority are exceptionally talented and energetic women who continue careers from sheer interest. A few regard jobs as a hedge against the future, an outlet when the children are grown, or an emotional and financial resource if the marriage is broken by death or divorce.

Though undoubtedly in some instances the whole family benefits from the wife's working, a wife's outside job always creates problems, especially if the couple has or hopes to have children. To hold a job and achieve a happy marriage, a woman must be an exceptional wife—and she must have an exceptional husband.

Consider a recent letter we received from a working wife: "When we first married, I thought I would work for a few months until my husband got a promotion. But by that time we had bought a car and new furniture, and I kept on working to pay those bills. Instead of saving any money, we spent everything we made—and still do. We have lost any desire to have a family, and we are no longer close to each other. We don't even have the same friends. So I am going ahead with my job as insurance against the day when we may part."

In the pursuit of purely material goals, these two young people have lost sight of their original objective. Their marriage has ceased to be a real union, and has become an aimless association of two individuals bound together by little more than circumstance.

Yet some women have to work, to help support the family; others, by reason of talent or temperament, cannot happily substitute homemaking for professional employment. How can the wife who must work minimize the risk to her married happiness?

Here are some suggestions, based on a study of many marriages in which the wife worked. By comparing the happy and unhappy wives, we have identified some of the principles followed by successful wives who work.

1. She works only with her husband's approval.

2. The reasons why she works, whether for financial gain or personal satisfaction, are clearly defined.

3. There is a clear understanding about children—whether to start a family, and if so, when.

4. She avoids jobs involving abnormal hours, high pressure and nerve strain, or direct competition with her husband.

5. The wife's earnings are thought of as part of the joint family income, not as her personal spending money. Both husband and wife avoid raising their normal standard of living, so that no drastic reductions are necessary if the wife stops working.

6. The problem of operating the household is realistically faced, and some practical solution evolved. This demands effort and willing sacrifice, of both husband and wife.

7. Mixed social engagements arising out of business are avoided unless both can participate.

8. Last but not least, the wife must always be sure that her whole family is gaining more than it is losing from the fact that she works. A working wife who hopes to achieve married happiness must always put that objective first.

We repeat: It takes an exceptional husband and an exceptional wife to make marriage work when both work!

Do You Agree?

You constantly imply that wives should hold the marriage together. Doesn't a husband have ANY responsibility?

He certainly does—but the major elements holding a marriage together are within the walls of the home. A wife can see these more clearly, so her husband's complaints, even though unjustified, are symptoms that something is wrong.

Are You a Good Mother-in-law?

A happy relationship with your in-laws depends on many things. Some of them, such as the couple's financial status, you cannot control. But there is one important factor—your own attitude—which you alone determine. Questions 16 through 20 apply only to women living with married sons or daughters.

1. Did you get along well with your husband's parents?
2. Are you fond of your son- or daughter-in-law?
3. Do you like his (or her) parents?
4. Are you really proud of him (her)?
5. Do you hope the couple has children?
6. Are you satisfied with their standard of living?
7. Do you think their marriage will be happy?
8. Are some personal things included in your gifts to each?
9. Do they ask your advice and suggestions?
10. In your opinion, is the couple well matched?
11. Do you tell either how to manage the other?
12. Are you critical of either's personal habits?
13. Does the couple ever neglect you?
14. Has the couple serious financial problems?
15. Do you ever side with one against the other?
16. Is there a fair plan of sharing expenses?
17. Do all of you have sufficient privacy?
18. Are their friends persons whom you approve?
19. Do you live together without hard feelings or arguments?
20. Is there a fair plan of sharing the work?

Questions 11–15 should be answered "No," all others "Yes." With 12 or more correct answers to the first 15 questions, and four or more to the last five, you have an excellent chance to be a good mother-in-law. But with a score of nine or less on the first fifteen, or twelve or less on all, chances are against you. Better work on your attitude; it's the thing you can change.

Inches of Alençon-type lace on Textron's dress-sized slip. Also in white and black.

Spring Flower Freshness FOR YOU

Now Textron brings you Woodland Pink, sweet as Spring's blushing blossoms.

In a dress-sized slip with a border bloom of lovely lace. In a dream-world nightgown garlanded with softest net. Both in finest rayon crepe, soft as a bed of moss. The slip, with straight skirt, cut like your dresses to fit at the bust, waist and hips, and in dress sizes 12 to 20, is about $4. Or, for the fuller figure, in dress sizes 40 to 48, about $5. The gown, in sizes 12 to 20, is about $6. At leading stores throughout the country.

TEXTRON INC., Textron Building,
401 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

Charming nightgown in pink or blue

TEXTRON
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

OUSES • HOSTESS COATS • MENSWEAR • TRICOT LINGERIE • WOVEN LINGERIE

I want to know!

THE SUB-DEB

Edited by

MAUREEN DALY

PULL up a chair and join the harpy huddle—we've got some interesting information to give out. The Senior Home Ec class of Bryson High School, in Bryson, Texas, sent us a list of questions—ten of them, in fact—which they call "the ten questions to which high-school girls most want to have the answers." So pick a question from one to ten—any one of them might have the answer to the big problem that's been on your mind!

• Are boy friendships necessary for girls to be happy?

Definitely yes! Some girls get boy-conscious around thirteen or fourteen; some girls are eighteen or nineteen before the phone begins to give special Friday-night jingles. But from now on, you're going to be living in a boy-girl world. The teens is the time that girls grow up to the idea that they themselves will someday get married; and every date and every boy you meet from now on, whether you realize it or not, will help you to decide what you're looking for in a man. Those mad, momentary crushes will come and go for a long time yet—but start thinking in terms of deep and permanent friendships.

• What do boys like best in girls?

The fact that they are girls! Elementary, but true. One sex complements the other. Boys like girls who are friendly, intelligent and with just the right amount of sugar-and-spice in their personalities. Best of all, they like girls who like them and who show it, through a friendly smile in the halls, a bright new dress for a special date, or just through listening and laughing at the right time when a boy pulls his best wisecrack on a date.

• What do boys dislike most in girls?

Big-dealing and insincerity, two words which can really mean many different things. But, for instance, if you prattle on about your dad's salary, the price tags on your clothes, and your dates with all the top men around school just to impress, that's big-dealing. If you pull an Ava Gardner act when you're only fourteen, pretend to be good friends to a girl and then cat-chatter about her to boys, kiss a boy fondly on a date and then tell the crowd, that's insincerity. To make it short, simple and memorable: don't pull a phony act; boys don't like it.

• What can a girl do when she is unpopular and out of things at school?

"Unpopular" and "out of things at school" are often synonymous terms, so get into activities and drop the "unpopular." Don't just be a joiner. Select one thing that interests you, and get into a group of boys and girls with that same interest. You may not be star material to start out, but take a job behind the scenes, as prompter for the senior play, timer for the swimming team, pianist for the school operetta or assistant in the library. Get busy doing work for and with people. For a girl who's busy with a group her own age, "unpopular" is just another word in the dictionary.

• What's the best way for an average high-school girl to win attention from a boy indifferent toward her?

As far as he is concerned, you've got to stop being average. No girl can turn into the prettiest, the most charming or the most popular overnight, but you can try being the friendliest as far as he is concerned. Get someone to introduce you: if you date, try to arrange a double date; consult him on some school problem in which he has a hand and then follow up the first hurdle with conversations about things in which he's interested, during change of classes or just by friendly hello's in the halls. Once he's noticed you, the rest can be easy, but only if he's interested. All you can do (and not be accused of "chasing") is show that you want to be friendly—and if he's interested, it's up to him to take it from there.

• Does a girl who isn't pretty have a chance to have fun?

Yes, if she does two things. First, if she gives herself the all-out treatment in good grooming to look as attractive as she can—that means taking the best possible care of hair, skin and figure, plus studying fashion magazines as if they were textbooks to find out the best way to dress to flatter her type. Second, she must look for fun. This isn't always easy, especially for a girl in her teens. But she can try to make her own fun by inviting girls over to her house for a small get-together, suggesting a Saturday-night movie or working as part of a group on a church project. A girl will probably "look pretty" to anyone who thinks she's fun as a friend.

• Do most girls neck on dates? Is it wrong?

If by "necking" you mean hand-holding, an occasional kiss and such, then the answer is "yes," most girls neck on some dates, and "no," it isn't wrong. Wanting to kiss a boy or boys is all part of growing up—part of the new boy-girl friendships we mentioned in the first question. But a kiss should remain a sign of genuine affection, not given too easily, so that when you finally come to the decision that "this is love," you will still have healthy affection to give—with no regrets.

• Should a girl go steady with a boy if she can have dates with others?

Wait a minute—what's this you're asking? If a girl can date other fellows and still wants to, she just shouldn't think of going steady. Sometimes girls (and boys!) go steady just to be sure of having a date on the week ends; others go steady just to join the crowd in a school social custom; but most fellows and girls who go steady do it because they feel they are honestly in love and want to be at least "engaged to be engaged." The best rule to follow is: Don't go steady till you're sure it's love.

• How can I get my parents to understand such things as accepting my friends, allowing me to date, coming home late after school activities and such?

The best way to make your parents understand you is to prove, if only in little ways, that they aren't dealing with "our little girl" now, but with a teen-ager who's dependable and sensible. But be prepared—this can take a long time. Accept responsibilities by keeping your room straight, remembering dentist appointments and staying out of spats with your younger sister. Try to arrange to have your parents meet as many of your friends as possible and, if you can, get them to come to school for class plays, school open house, and so on—anything to make them realize that you're growing up and living a life of your own away from home. And it might help to see that they get a crack at the teen-age section of your newspapers and magazines where "parent problems" are often discussed.

• Some friends have belonged to a club of girls ever since they were freshmen. Now, the school principal says the club is a sorority and must be disbanded or the members will be expelled. What can they do?

Twenty-eight states already have laws forbidding secret societies such as fraternities and sororities in high schools. The chief reason for these laws is to prevent undemocratic methods of excluding any high-school students from an activity which they might wish to join. If the girls mentioned can show the principal that the club is open to all or any of the girls in their class, he may grant permission to continue. Otherwise, it is better to disband. No club is worth disloyalty to a whole school—so it's smarter to join the activities of the whole group rather than to be expelled as a cozy, exclusive clique!

"He loves me, he loves me not. . . ."

Why keep guessing, when you can find all the answers in the Sub-Deb booklet, No. 1658, DO BOYS LIKE YOU? Just send 5c to Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

Bewitching Bride!.. Bewitching Skin!

Campus hero captures "prettiest coed" for keeps! She's Rebecca Anne Bowen of Dallas. Lucky man is Carl Preston Wallace. Both are students at Southern Methodist University.

All his, now! In car, driving from church to Dallas Country Club reception, Carl plants kiss on his be-oo-ti-ful new "Mrs."! . . . a Woodbury-deb with petal-smooth skin!

Love at work! Carl and Becky started "going together" in high school. Four years (and many Woodbury Facial Cocktails) later, their romance is still "going strong."

Way to a man's heart? "Judging from my Carl," laughs Becky, "kissable skin counts plenty!" Easy to have — with Woodbury, made with smoothing beauty-cream ingredient.

SHE'S ANOTHER WOODBURY MARRYING DEB!

Gorgeous? Honeymooners take in Catalina scenery. "But any place—with Becky in sight—looks gorgeous to me," says Carl. Eye-filling sight to men—skin asparkle, a la Woodbury!

Quail hunt. Becky "sights" her aim—Carl "sights" her beauty—skin flawless smooth. Smart Becky! Counts on Woodbury for gentle cleansing. No irritation—no "skin-burn."

"Here's my Woodbury Facial Cocktail. One: rich lather massage. Two: rinse warm 'n' cold. Oh, how skin sparkles!"

Now, two sizes of Woodbury—facial and big new bath. Extra-mild—made by skin specialists for skin alone.

"I adore Woodbury's beauty-cream lather for my bath!" But naturally, it leaves skin—beauty complexion all-over.

Give your skin Woodbury's plus— a rich beauty-cream ingredient!

✓ ABOUT 16 CENTS PER TILE (size: 9" x 9")—and the sparkle-bright floor design is exclusively yours! With new, easy-to-install SLOANE QUALITY LINOLEUM TILE you can plan your own floor and do it, too—inexpensively from start to finish! This clever floor arrangement that makes three rooms of one was created with Linoleum Tiles 1278 (blue), 1297 (black) and 1291 (white). Many other brilliant colors available.

Check the low cost of these 3-in-1 beauties

New "do-it-yourself" ideas inspired by the better design and truer color of Sloane Quality Linoleum Products

Three ways you can live in one room and love it! Each done with gracious beauty that started with the floor—as decorators do. As you can do easily . . . and at surprisingly little cost!

Let your Sloane-Blabon dealer show you. See how inexpensive it is to plan and install your own handsome floor with colorful Sloane Quality Linoleum Tile; beautiful, economical, Resilient Enamel Rugs and Floor Coverings.

And see the many wonder colors and patterns in Sloane Quality Inlaid and Marbletone Linoleum . . . Koroseal*—the miracle plastic in Tile, Cove Base and Cove Molding . . . long-wearing Asphalt Tile.

See how you can make any room lovelier . . . easier to care for. Write for free folder telling how to design and install your own linoleum tile floor.

*B. F. Goodrich Co.

SLOANE-BLABON CORPORATION
295 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

✓ AROUND 10 CENTS PER SQUARE FOOT also buys the handsome Resilient Enamel Floor Covering (pattern 5271) used for the center area in this attractive 3-in-1 version. The coordinated-pattern Resilient Enamel Rugs (pattern 3271) used to set apart the "rooms" for eating and sleeping are also low in cost . . . and, like all Sloane Quality Linoleum Products, long on wear.

✓ ONLY 10 CENTS PER SQUARE FOOT (approx.)—for the wall-to-wall charm of this warm, inviting-looking floor. It's long-wearing, easy-to-keep-clean Sloane Quality Resilient Enamel Floor Covering, pattern 5235. The over-all floor design gives the room a generous sweep—the feeling of wide open spaces.

SLOANE Quality
LINOLEUM PRODUCTS

for better design and truer color

What Men Do When They are Alone

By
G. M. WHITE

In a novel by a woman writer we rarely find a male character left alone on the scene. For the truth is, few women writers will take the risk of imagining what men do when they are alone. —G. B. STERN

PERHAPS the only time a woman can't see through her husband is when she isn't looking at him. When the tiny quirks of behavior which reveal a man are not visible, no stretch of any imagination can conjure them. The truth is, few men writers will take the risk of imagining what a man does when he is alone. They have never observed one. Indeed, there is a philosophical question whether men even exist when there are no women to perceive them. I believe they do, though probably not in a form any woman would recognize.

It is too bad that women cannot see men when they are alone. Viewed dispassionately, a man is his most charming self at that time, certainly more charming than when he is asleep. This was proved by the results of an experiment conducted by a young man with nothing better to do. He shadowed himself one afternoon when his wife left him alone in the house with instructions to turn the oven on and set the heat control at 325° at 4 P.M. "The Hiltons are coming for dinner," she said, "and I don't want the roast overdone."

The husband yawned to conceal his intention to stay awake and record his activities. From his notes one can reconstruct an approximation of the behavior of the human male when alone. (The solitary behavior of the unmarried male would differ slightly, but who cares?)

1. Investigation and Research

After wife slammed the door, subject stared out the window, scratching his ribs and seeing nothing, for a brief period. Then he lit a cigarette and went into the kitchen, where he drank a glass of water and found an apple. The kitchen was otherwise barren, tidy and uninteresting. Doused cigarette in sink. Slowly polishing apple on his shirt front, subject moved into the dining room, where he noticed a glazed pottery bowl he had never seen before. Upon turning it upside down, a tax receipt for 1946, an Indian penny, a Dewey button and a scrap of paper fell out. On the paper was written: Tell Madge Creol. pat is P1, K1, yf, sl next st, b, K1, repeat ending P1. Mouse in kit. He studied this for approximately five minutes. Shrugged, replaced contents of bowl and added apple core.

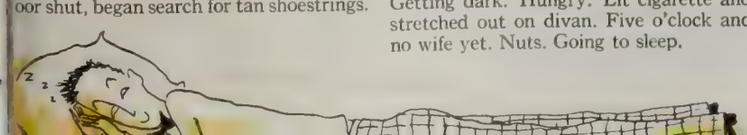
Subject went upstairs. Observed carefully the location of elephant-shaped stain on bedroom ceiling caused by rain leaking through roof. Noticed strange but pleasant odor upon opening wife's clothes closet. Dozens of dresses, peculiarly empty in appearance, hanging tightly together. Boxes stacked high on shelves, like cache of a shoplifter. Two boxes fell down without being touched. Christmas-tree ornaments.

As small opening in closet ceiling was obviously inaccessible, he decided not to climb into attic to locate leak. While picking up Christmas-tree ornaments, subject found favorite pair of old shoes, lacking shoestrings, in corner of closet. Forced closet door shut, began search for tan shoestrings.

Subject began slowly by rummaging through those drawers which contained his belongings, but someone (probably wife) had arranged contents neatly and hidden shoestrings elsewhere. Strong feeling of violating privacy noted during similar search through drawers used by wife. Spent ten minutes trying to extricate tentacled belt arrangement from other ridiculous garments. Gave up. Packed all the stuff back without further investigation, except to read a few old letters tucked in the bottom of the drawer. No shoestrings.

(Here the notes became brief and confusing, showing mounting activity and many digressions.) Poked in medicine cabinet. Iodine bottle rolled out and fell on tile floor. Broke. Went downstairs to get mop. Looked in kitchen closet. Doorknob came off. Went to garage to get screw driver out of car. Remembered wife had car. Swept out garage. Returned to kitchen and drank glass of water. Went down into basement for no reason. Came up.

Smoked cigarette and stared out back windows while scratching head and trying to recall what it was he had been looking for. Suddenly remembered shoestrings. Doused cigarette in sink. Began methodical search of all drawers and cubbyholes on first floor. Trouble opening some drawers because wedged tight with trash. Sorted out papers and other junk to be discarded and placed on table for wife to check through. No shoestrings, but found fan belt for car.



Subject then decided to surprise wife by getting waffle batter ready for evening snack. After brief search in kitchen, surprised to find all necessary ingredients. Spilled some. Mixed up batter. Put utensils in sink to soak. Tired. Went upstairs.

2. Rehabilitation: Physical

(In this phase of solitary behavior of the male, it should be noted that few men are ever able to spend as much time in the bathroom as they would like. Time for their beauty care is usually restricted to a few minutes each morning; it is remarkable they turn out as well as they do. Yet if a man stays in the bathroom an extra minute, his wife will say, "I don't know what you do in there that takes so long." It is not very interesting, but she might as well know.) Subject picked up bits of glass from broken iodine bottle and placed paper over spot now almost dry. Smoked cigarette. Leisurely showered. Shaved. Extracted two ingrown hairs from neck. Applied lotion. Brushed teeth. Inspected fillings. Looked down throat. Pushed nose slowly back and forth with mouth open. With mouth closed. Massaged scalp. Combed hair. Trimmed and filed fingernails. Deposited 89 old razor blades in slot. Dressed.

3. Rehabilitation: Mental Subject looked through bookcase and read titles of all books. Turned radio on. Turned radio off. Cleaned out wallet and counted money therein. Played recording of Shostakovich's Age of Gold Polka. Took down from wall for closer examination four pictures never seen before. Rearranged and rehung pictures, but hard to get straight on wall. Got out some road maps and spread open on floor. Looked at some old snapshots until bored. Went to see if newspaper had come. Looked up and down street. No paper yet. Leafed through some old magazines. Looked out window. Scratched. Getting dark. Hungry. Lit cigarette and stretched out on divan. Five o'clock and no wife yet. Nuts. Going to sleep.

Now at your grocer's

This sensational new and better wax-like cleaner for Glass and Silver

MADE BY BON AMI

...and it COSTS YOU LESS!

It's new! It's here! The most amazing cleaner you have ever seen! Useful in hundreds of ways, GLASS GLOSS cleans glass, silver, dozens of other things faster, easier, better than you ever imagined possible.

Months of research—countless laboratory tests—hundreds of comparisons by housewives are back of this great new product. GLASS GLOSS had to be better—had to be the finest! Final tests proved it to be all of that. Only then was it given the Bon Ami name, world-famous for the finest in cleansers.

Witness the magic and ease of cleaning with GLASS GLOSS. See for yourself how dirt, tarnish, discoloration just wipe away. No streaks! No smears! No hazy after-cloudiness! And the clear, glossy polish resists dirt—protects the finish.

Ask your grocer for GLASS GLOSS today. And be sure to compare the price—see how much less it costs. Then compare the results!

STARS 7 WAYS

- ★ Easier to apply
- ★ Dries faster
- ★ Wipes off easier
- ★ No after-cloudiness
- ★ Gives a high polish
- ★ Protects the finish
- ★ Costs less—Compare prices

Quickest, Easiest Cleaning Ever!

Just wipe it on—wipe it off. Windows, mirrors, all glass surfaces sparkle as never before! Cleans silver safely—without hard rubbing—and such a polish! Great also for nickel, chromium, other metals, kitchen appliances.

Don't forget...

BON AMI POWDER—the fast, easy, safe cleanser for your bathtubs and sinks—now has a great new partner in GLASS GLOSS. Every home needs both of these fine Bon Ami products.

Fifty Years Ago In The Journal

MY Wild Irish Rose was the hit tune of June, 1899. Ocean beaches swarmed with boys in red and blue prison-striped bathing suits, and girls took to tennis courts in starched shirts, straw hats and ties. Johann Strauss and the Queen of Hawaii died, and hydrogen was liquefied.

"The best treatment for thin arms," advises the June, 1899, JOURNAL, "is to wash them with a fine lather of soap twice a day and dry vigorously."

The up-to-date 1899 kitchen: "The ideal floor is of hardwood, laid watertight, with a drain in the center so that the floor can be flushed after scrubbing. Vegetables should be kept under the floor in a bin, reached by a hinged trap door."

"Silk stockings for babies may be purchased in tan, red, pink, blue, Nile green, gold and white. They cost $1.25 a pair and look pretty with fawn-colored kid shoes."

Suggestions for Mothers: "If the ears stick out, it is better to accept the fact philosophically."

A four-bedroom JOURNAL prize house, built in Pittsburgh for $2585, included (according to the proud owner) "an automatic hot-water heater, furnace, nickel-plated plumbing, and enameled bathtub."

"A simple pin is the only form of jewelry that a girl should be permitted to wear until after she is fifteen."

Writes cooking expert Mrs. Rorer: "I certainly consider cakes injurious; icing on the top makes them even worse. While I fully realize that many people still consider cakemaking a necessity, I am quite sure that the next generation will look at this from a different standpoint."

Journal about Town

CHARLES ROTKIN

With a new look, but the same old message, Liberty greets the newcomers.

Gossip about people you know, editors you like and what goes on in New York.

BEDLOE'S ISLAND, down the bay, and the famous old statue that towers up from it to welcome all liberty-loving arrivals from abroad have both been given a bright new look for the half million visitors who will clamber up into the monument this summer. They've made the island larger and neater, installed a modern heating system and other utilities in the pedestal of the statue, given the figure itself a good going over. Of the anticipated half million visitors, Chief Guide Hafner tells us 90 per cent will probably make the half-hour-or-so climb up to about Liberty's shoulders; and a lot of them will want to know why they can't make the forbidden climb on up to the torch. To which his answer is, it's four stories farther up, and all by ladder. One liberty he considers too risky to allow.

•

Down below our Workshop window, the best building in sight is the Museum of Modern Art—its looks living up to its name. From up here you can't quite see behind it, in the sculpture garden beyond, the biggest single object any art museum here has ever put on exhibition: a full-size modern house, through which a steady stream of wide-eyed, house-hungry visitors will be flowing every day from now until the end of October. Whether the crowds will break the record set three summers ago by the same museum's exhibition of the JOURNAL's model modern houses remains to be seen. If they do, Richard Pratt stands to lose a modest wager to Marcel Breuer, the brilliant architect of this present remarkable house—a wager being witnessed in the picture below, just before the house was finished, by the museum's Peter Blake, whose book on Breuer will be published this month. Not only the colorful functional house, but much of the furniture in it, is Breuer's design, including the children's large lightweight play blocks in bright colors that match the house. Don't miss it if you come to town. Even if by doing so, you help Breuer win his bet.

•

Only last month we mentioned the milliner here in town who will rent a hat for anything from a blind date to a full-dress wedding; and already the beauty department is telling us of a place right over on Fifth Avenue that will rent you a hair piece to suit any occasion that comes along. They have from four to five hundred hair pieces in stock: bangs, chignons, falls, braids, clair-de-lunes (which are clusters of curls), puff chignons, and things to wear over the ears; and they show you as many as fifty ways to wear them. $3.50 an evening for a beautiful set of bangs; $25 for a full wig.

•

Down in Dallas recently, getting material for Profile on Youth, which begins in this issue, Maureen Daly, in the course of her investigations there, made the acquaintance of Bill Decker, sheriff of Dallas County. So impressed was the sheriff with Maureen's intelligence (and charm, he added) that what did he do but appoint her a deputy sheriff; providing her with a most official document to bring back here as proof—all signed, sealed and delivered; and herself pretty proud to be an officer of the law, the first and only deputy sheriff on the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

•

Jan Weyl wears a cute little weskit, with pockets for keys and a compact on a chain, very fetching and practical, as you can see; the compact made from an old-fashioned gold watch, with a place for powder and pad where the works used to be, and a place for a picture where it used to tell the time.

Old watch—new compact.

•

William Fink has just been bringing us up to date on two of the JOURNAL'S star illustrators: Al Parker's Certificate of Merit from the Art Directors' Club for his girl-in-the-bathtub illustration for the December installment of Kinfolk, and Coby Whitmore's determination to make the Indianapolis Speedway races on Memorial Day—an event he never lets magazine dead lines make him miss. As much of a habit as Al Parker's prize-winning proclivities, Coby's infatuation for racing cars has made him the friend of all the famous racing drivers and mechanics. So far, however, thank goodness, he himself hasn't tried winning prizes on the track.

•

A New York survey indicates that jobs which attract girls must meet two requirements: allow them to meet men and make money.... If all the movie villains slain by Errol Flynn were placed end to end, they would stretch a quarter of a mile.... Ingrid Bergman, in Italy making a movie, says her make-up supply consists of one lipstick.

The JOURNAL's Architectural Editor makes a bet that he'd like to lose.

MORRIS ENGEL-SCOPE

Pride can come only before a woman falls in love . . .

EVEN a small wind, if constant, will bend a twig. The twig in this case was the gravity of a child called Eliza Beck, and the wind was the laughter of the Beck family. The Becks were as gay and happy a pair as ever lived on Adams Street, and when they produced this beautiful but solemn baby, they were astonished. It was plain very early that Eliza's solemnity went deep. If you played peekaboo with her or tossed her to the ceiling, she never crowed with laughter, or did anything but look at you gravely out of those great gray eyes as if to say, "You're behaving childishly!"

"She's a throwback! She's Great-aunt Hope to a T!" Mrs. Beck said. "And no one was ever named so ridiculously as Aunt Hope!"

Still, they might have won her over had it not been that Peter came along very shortly and was the happiest, most laughter-filled little boy in the world, with an undiscriminating love for everybody and everything. It wasn't that the Becks loved Peter any better, but they certainly understood him better. It wasn't that they wouldn't have liked Eliza to come bounce on the big bed of a morning or play the mad wild-animal game with bedposts for trees of the jungle, but that Eliza sat on a little hassock and watched them solemnly and would not, simply would not enter into their nonsense. Peter knew what a joke was before he could walk or talk, but Eliza took life from the bassinet stage on with complete seriousness. Even though they loved her, they couldn't help laughing at her.

"How's Hamlet this morning?" her father would say. "Up to bananas on your cereal?"

"Look out," her mother would answer. "You can't be sure she hasn't read Hamlet!"

One of the first incidents that showed the twig had been bent was when Eliza took a little truck of Peter's and hid it in her toy chest. It was one of those perfect miniatures that children love. It was only an inch long, but very sturdy, and had all the details of a real truck. It was beautiful and satisfying beyond measure to Eliza, and she loved holding it in her hand. But, knowing how special it was, she knew the more that she had no right to it, and felt very wicked at keeping it. For some three weeks she lived in this state of sin, suffering over it in the way children do.

Then Peter discovered she had it, but he didn't fly at her and demand his treasure. "You can have it," he said, with that reckless generosity of his that was in its way as unchildlike as Eliza's solemnity.

This angered Eliza terribly. She could not bear to have the treasure or her own sin taken lightly. The only way open to her was to pretend that Peter (Continued on Page 104)

THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE NOVEL

ILLUSTRATED BY GOBY WHITMORE

Nobody's

"You are being unpardonably personal and rude!" she said.

that Special

By Nelia Gardner White

Sometimes a girl can go just too far!

By WILLARD H. TEMPLE

She had swollen blue eyes, but all the same she was beautiful. She hit me the way California hit me when I first came out from Iowa. When I first came out from Iowa I took one look at the mountains and the palm trees and the clear blue sky and I said to myself, Brother, I said, this is the place for you. She was visiting her cousin next door. Her name was Betty Drayton and she was from New Jersey.

"Welcome to Lotusland," I said. "How do you like California?"

"You can have it," she said. She blew her nose and sneezed. "Excuse my appearance," she said. "Back in New Jersey I resembled a human being. I seem to have an allergy to something out here."

"Well, right here," I said, "we're surrounded by orange groves. You're probably allergic to the pollen. If you were closer to the ocean you'd be all right."

"I spent a week end at the beach," she said. "I came down with a terrible sinus infection."

It's practically illegal to talk that way in California, and not true anyway. I pointed out to her how people from all over the country came out to California for their health and practically live forever.

We were out in the patio and the telephone rang inside the house. The girl looked at her watch. "That will be George," she said. "It's seven o'clock back in Plainville, New Jersey, and night rates will be in effect." She ran back inside the house.

Her cousin said to me, "Don't mind what she says. She's really a very sweet kid, Joe. And it takes a little time for the Sunny Southland to work its magic on people."

I invited her out to dinner the next night. She was taking some medicine and her nose had stopped running and her eyes weren't swollen any longer. They lighted up like a pinball machine when she talked about New Jersey. She told me about George back there. He was older than she; she worked for him as his secretary. He had been after her to marry him and she couldn't make up her mind. She had come out to California to visit her cousin and get a perspective on George. The difference in their ages bothered her. He was an elderly man—about thirty-five.

"It's practically criminal," I said. "What kind of a character is he? Youth should mate with youth."

Her cousin—he came from North Dakota—was the kind of guy who didn't want to do anything but take care of his geraniums. It made him very happy that I took this girl off his hands and showed her around sunny California. But if she had been any other girl I would have dropped her like a hot potato.

I drove her around Beverly Hills and showed her the homes of the movie stars.

"I don't go to the movies much," she said. "I read a lot."

I drove her along Wilshire Boulevard.

"It's nice," she said, "but we have maple trees and elms along Main Street in Plainville, New Jersey."

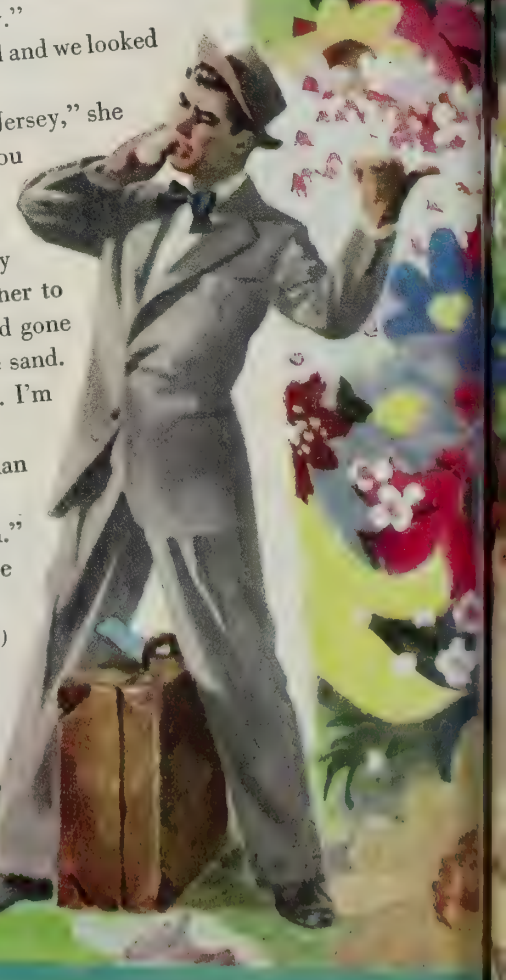
I took her up in the hills above Hollywood and we looked at the lights.

"There's a hill north of Plainville, New Jersey," she said. "We don't have searchlights, but you can see the stars. No smog."

With any other girl I would have put her down as a character. But I loved Betty in spite of her warped outlook. I asked her to marry me the next Friday night. We had gone down to Laguna and were sitting on the sand.

"Joe," she said, "you're a sweet boy. I'm terribly fond of you."

"But you're going to marry this old man back in New Jersey," I said.



She nodded. "I'm afraid so, Joseph."

"Out here in California," I said, "we don't take no for an answer."

(Continued on Page 94)

ILLUSTRATED BY Jon Whitcomb

The most Beautiful

Girl in California

Let come

Everything was exactly as Ursula had expected.
The children were listening to William's tales, which he had laboriously learned.

ILLUSTRATED BY

love Last

What kind of man is it who considers his children more important than his wife, and tells her so?

By Taylor Caldwell

URSULA WENDE had lived her twenty-seven years in Andersburg, the quiet nineteenth-century town where she had been born and where her father had been a schoolteacher until his death. There she had grown into a pattern of life which satisfied her and which her friends respected, and she looked forward to a full and independent future which would be of her own making. But the vigor of an expanding industrialism swept into the petty genteel intrigues of Andersburg with the organization of the Prescott Lumber Company, at the same time that the embittered, ambitious but dynamic personality of William Prescott broke across the well-shaped plans of Ursula Wende. He had come to buy up the potentially valuable real estate and to build a fortune, to marry. It was Ursula's fifteen acres, on the east side of town which he wanted. Before she had time to reflect, she found herself engaged to this man whom she knew to be unscrupulous and egotistical, but who was also the only man she would ever love.

Copyright, 1949, by Reback & Reback

II

Friends of Chauncey Arnold often wondered if and why his wife loved him. She had certainly not married him for his money, for at the time of their marriage he was the manager of his father's sawmill, and she had a small fortune of her own. Her father had been a successful physician.

Had she been similar to her husband in personality, the question would never have arisen. But she was gentle, stately, full of personal integrity. It seemed incredible that such a woman, so gracious and fastidious, could love such a man. Yet when she looked at him, her face softened with tenderness. She laughed at his dullest jokes. Sometimes he spoke rudely to her and she ignored it. It never occurred to anyone that Alice Arnold loved her husband because he loved her.

Alice was not unaware of her husband's faults. There was a pleasant regard between her and Ursula Wende, and she occasionally visited Ursula, but always alone. No one needed to tell Alice that Ursula had an aversion for Chauncey Arnold. Had Alice been less intelligent, she would have resented this. But, blessed with extreme subtlety, she was not indignant. She knew that others had a right to their aversions, and full liberty of choice. It was not a question, to her, of loyalty to her husband; it was rather a respect for others' likes and dislikes.

Chauncey loved Alice devotedly, in spite of his rudenesses at certain times. She was an endless puzzle to him. He might sometimes berate her for "spoiling" their son, Eugene. But she knew he loved her.

Alice was as devoted to Eugene as she was to her husband. But, with the inconsistency of human nature, she expected more of her son. Eugene was both intelligent and astute. Chauncey might accuse Alice of spoiling the boy, but it was he who truly "spoiled" him. Had he not been so intimate with his son, treating the boy, from earliest childhood, like a man whose views should be respected, Eugene might not have developed that cold arrogance so characteristic of him. Eugene, too, loved money. But he did not gloat at the thought of it,

(Continued on Page 66)

"My husband was horrified at my working in a mental hospital. Now I think he envies me the work. His civic work is fund drives—mine is human emotions."

PSYCHIATRY NEEDS YOU

What can I do about the mentally ill? Anyone who seriously asks this question will find a thousand answers.

by JOAN YOUNGER

PHOTO BY ESTHER F. BUBLEY

"THE first week I worked at the mental hospital I was scared," he said. "It had taken me a year to make up my mind to take the job, and, when I got it, I wished it had taken me another ten.

"Every time I went into the ward, I got a creepy feeling. I hated to turn my back on the patients—anything might happen, I thought. There was one big man in particular. He had been a cop before, and the other patients called him 'the Pest,' because he talked so much. I'd been watching him and I'd noticed he held his right arm in a funny sort of way. We were going back from the dining room one night and he happened to be walking right in front of me when, without thinking, I put my hand on his arm and said, 'What's wrong with it?'

"He pulled away from me, and I started to duck. Then I noticed he was ducking too—and he had one arm up like a fighter protecting himself. It struck me, suddenly, that he was scared of me. I was so astonished I couldn't speak for a few moments. I looked around at the rest of them, and I had to laugh. They were all scared of me—scared I wouldn't like them and be kind to them, just like I was scared they'd be hard on me.

"It was quite startling. After that I started thinking of them as human beings, and it was amazing how well they responded. One boy had been living in a world all his own for two years. He was considered hopeless. I talked to him for weeks like he was normal and then, suddenly, one day he looked at my cigarette and said, 'Smoke?' I gave him one—from then on he talked to me. In six months he'd improved enough to go home. He works in a tie shop now. And that cop I spoke of, he turned out to have a dislocated shoulder—and after I got him treatment for it, he turned out to be a nice guy too. He's back on his beat now—and we're still friends.

"There's no good reason why it should have astounded me so to discover that the people we call 'crazy' still have hearts and minds that work, but it did. I wish everyone could find it out, for there certainly would be a change not only in our attitude toward the mentally ill but in their chances of recovery too."

This man spoke from his heart. It was a combination of circumstances which brought him into contact with the mentally ill: he was one of the conscientious objectors who were offered jobs as attendants in mental hospitals as an alternative to camp labor. He found the conditions so appalling that he decided at the end of the war to stay in the field and do what he could. Today he's on the staff of the National Mental Health Foundation—a three-year-old organization founded by four other former CO's and dedicated primarily to bettering conditions and facilities for the mentally ill.

In their aim, they are like the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, the Group for the Advancement of

(Continued on Page 129)

There's a Man in the House

By Harlan Miller

I rebel against a code of etiquette slanted for the ladies. It seems my wife properly can (and does) invite attractive males to our parties. But if I asked a few pretty girls to drop in, people's eyebrows would go up a foot. Maybe it's time for a revision of Emily Post.

✧ ✧ ✧

Our youngest has heard war talk and issued his first orders: "Daddy, if there's another war I don't want you to go! Last time I was little, and I didn't know you very well, and didn't miss you. But now I know you better and I want you to stay home." Full of blarney, aren't they?

✧ ✧ ✧

One objection to "grounding" our teen-agers from the family car is that we're forced to run our own errands, and struggle with traffic ourselves instead of letting them pick us up in real grandeur.

✧ ✧ ✧

I'd take it calmly if for a moment your genial husband is absent-minded to you or gruff to the children. His secret reason may be that an old tune he's forgotten suddenly reminded him of a boyhood sweetheart whose name he can't remember.

✧ ✧ ✧

A woman far too honorable to kiss a man merely to ascertain if he's been drinking isn't above giving her small boy a good-by hug, just to see if his neck and ears are clean.

✧ ✧ ✧

My next-door neighbor's daughter contends there's more privacy in a one-room apartment in a big town than in any house on a fifty-foot lot. "The question is," ponders her father, "how much privacy does a girl want?"

✧ ✧ ✧

My priceless tip to this month's bride is an old recipe I inherited from my grandmother: Three kisses a day guarantee a happy marriage, and twice as many on Sunday.

✧ ✧ ✧

Perhaps the brightest family idea I ever spawned was to buy two small houses, connected by an arcade, one for the children and one for ourselves, instead of one larger house. But we blushed at what the neighbors might say, and my Dream Girl would have none of it. Just a whim that might have made history.

We shipped home three bushel orange baskets full of sea shells, from our third honeymoon on a Florida beach. Not banal souvenirs; we're breaking 'em up to mingle with the gravel in our garden path, as a faint reminder of the distant blue ocean.

✧ ✧ ✧

I was trying to sell our two older children on a vacation trip to the far Northwest.

"Maybe Vancouver'd lure you away from your chums for a few weeks," I said hopefully.

Our nine-year-old was lying on the floor, looking up "planets" in the cyclopedia. "I can be lured," he said, without looking up.

✧ ✧ ✧

Our locker-room cynic at the country club thinks men with pretty wives ought to keep an eye especially on their intimate friends. "I've never seen any woman," he drawls, "dillydally much with her husband's enemies."

✧ ✧ ✧

Occasionally I swear off smoking awhile, just to prove I'm a stout fellah. I don't know which gives me more satisfaction: the absence of smoke from my bronchial tubes, or freedom from pipes, cigarette cases, holders and lighters in my pockets.

✧ ✧ ✧

My grandmother claims she scooped Salvador Dali by a generation. She was using conch shells for decoration in her parlor and garden thirty years before he ever painted a picture; and she insists grandfather (no artist) was always leaving his dresser drawers open.

✧ ✧ ✧

I'm amazed they've never built a kitchen refrigerator that can be locked after dinner. It might put a stop to my midnight raids on the leftovers—provided I didn't have a key. (Maybe it ought to be a time lock.)

✧ ✧ ✧

"No woman's ever more grotesquely funny," says Betty Comfort, removing an anonymous tricycle from the driveway, "than one who's suddenly discovered sex and acts as if she invented it. If the men could only see how screamingly funny!"

✧ ✧ ✧

I used to argue that a man could be lukewarm about fishing without revealing himself as a rotter. But now I've got to talk enthusiastically about fishing or my wife's family might think her marriage was a mistake. (They catch 'em but won't eat 'em.)

✧ ✧ ✧

The man next door tells me his son wants to get married as a college freshman, arguing that "Two can live as cheaply as one" on the campus. "I wonder," muses my neighbor, "whether it's too late for me to sell grandpa on that idea."

✧ ✧ ✧

No military hero is ever so triumphant as a woman who finds dust under another woman's furniture. "Yes," corroborates my wife, "it's a point of honor never to leave a guest room neater than I find it."

✧ ✧ ✧

When we were courting all we needed for a picnic was two sandwiches, something to drink and a book of poems. Now we often take along seven different kinds of pickles.

✧ ✧ ✧

The newlywed bride in our block says she never listens to soap operas, but likes to have 'em turned on. "It's kinda company," she says, "while I'm washing the dishes, and it's even better if I can tune in two stations at once."

✧ ✧ ✧

My wife now admits that my doctrine of inconspicuous stowage enlarges every room in the house. My basic theory: If you keep your dinguses a foot lower the room seems two feet longer.

✧ ✧ ✧

When your wife insinuates an extra egg mercifully into your reducing diet . . . when your daughter phones you "Happy Birthday" from college, and the call doesn't come collect . . . when junior okays your taste in neckties and political views by adopting 'em all, then a 100-watt bulb flashes on in your chest and you know family life will still be mankind's bulwark when they're scooping up the pyramids with a teaspoon.

✧ ✧ ✧

New decree on our imaginary family bulletin board: Our youngest must now try on all of junior's outgrown garments once a month. Otherwise he outgrows 'em, too, without ever wearing 'em.

✧ ✧ ✧

My neighbor in the disguised duplex complains that he and his wife aren't invited out to dinner so often lately. "And all I said," he confides, "is that my wife's friends seem just like sisters to me!"

✧ ✧ ✧

So far I've found only one successful way to deal with my wife's occasional blunders in new hats: I hide 'em.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART, MELLON COLLECTION

THE SUITOR'S VISIT

PAINTED BY GERARD TER BORCH—1617-81

For brief story of artist and his work, see Page 170

a changing world, faced with bewildering and complex oblems, Cynthia Barnes thinks she knows what she wants.

PROFILE OF YOUTH

JACOBI

MARGARET MEAD: "When mothers cease to say, 'When I was a girl, I was not allowed . . .' and substitute the question, 'What are the other girls doing?' something fundamental has happened to the whole culture."

WIDE WORLD PHOTOS

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER: "Today the business of living is far more complex than it was in my boyhood."

ALFRED C. KINSEY: "Individuals in our American society rarely adopt totally new patterns of sexual behavior after their middle teens. It would appear that the changes that do occur represent departures made by . . . adolescent children from the patterns of their parents."

WHAT are the facts about our 15,372,000 teen-agers? What is their life—and their future—as they see and live it?

What do they themselves think about morals, religion, politics? What do they like to eat, to wear, to do? These questions are important because they help us determine what America will be like in twenty years.

Some argue that there is no stability for our youth because of the threat of future wars; others declare that the dangers around them have brought them to early maturity. Some say they have no knowledge of sex; others, that they have too much. We are told they need to get married young—and, at the same time, that they don't wait long enough. Statistics show that only two or three out of each ten high-school students go to college; that another two or three drop out of school when they are sixteen. But statistics don't show why. It is said that careers for women, and the many doors now open to them, are creating a new kind of girl—and a new boy-girl relationship. But is it true?

To answer these questions, the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL is compiling this report on American youth. In this and forthcoming issues, we will present, objectively, findings on the individual lives of twelve different high-school students, report the group life which they share, and the problems that worry them.

We have chosen our young people from the North and South, the East and West; from the hangouts and libraries; from the popular and aloof, the leaders and followers. Some are planning professional careers; others are preparing themselves for marriage; some just want a job—any job. You will meet a small-town boy from Iowa; an ambitious career girl; a trade-school boy; a teen-ager from a broken home; a boy pointing for one of the professions, among others. None is typical—yet all are typical. We have made no attempt to separate the things we approve from the things we disapprove. We are presenting them as we found them—twelve Profiles of Youth.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

Profile of Youth

"The first time I ever really cried was when my older sister got married last year. I didn't even care that it meant I could have my own room."

My year of decision

CYNTHIA BARNES is a lucky girl. On June second, at eight o'clock in the evening, she will be graduated from Woodrow Wilson High School in a white-lace-and-organdy formal, with two baby orchids for her hair, a B average in grades, and a date for the Senior Party, a traditional all-night dance that lasts from diploma time to a sunrise breakfast in a local restaurant at seven A.M. By the time her last dance program is pasted in her scrapbook that June morning, seventeen-year-old Cynthia will have used her $275 graduation wardrobe (two evening dresses, a Senior Day outfit with hat and gloves and six summer cottons with accessories) to attend fifteen dances, twenty Coke parties, twelve teas, eight luncheons and six open houses, besides herself entertaining with a backyard barbecue for the staff of the Senior Annual, of which she is coeditor, a luncheon for twelve friends in the pink-and-blue plushness of a downtown hotel dining room, and a dance for the whole senior class sponsored with a group of girl friends, at one of the city-owned clubhouses along White Rock Lake, outside Dallas. Best of all, The Gabby Tabby, the senior humor publication distributed on graduation day, will feature her name in a weak-humored but all-approving item: "What if Cynthia were a stables instead of a Barnes?" As a student and as a personality, Cynthia Barnes "belongs."

"Dad was a freshman at Baylor and mother was just 17—I guess that's why they think it's good for us to fall in love and marry young."

Average movie-and-malted date costs boy $2.00; part-time jobs net from $24 to $76.50 per month.

Woodrow Wilson, a rambling red-brick building, as carefully landscaped as the suburban homes around it, is a school that puts strong emphasis on good grades, special talents and constructive discipline, and enjoys watching its students grow up and out as individuals highly social and conscientiously schooled in a special kind of Southern gallantry and charm. The faculty is a sophisticated, teen-wise group alerted to keep up with the varying needs of over 1400 students ranging from those whose families came to Dallas for factory jobs in the war boom to teen-agers with rooms of their own, $15-a-week allowances and families who keep "three in help."

But Woodrow Wilson is not a "country club" high school. Most of the students are faithful churchgoers (Sunday-night church services are a favorite date activity), and many of the girls hold Saturday jobs as models or department-store clerks, while the boys have early-morning paper routes and work as "packagers" at local self-service markets. The school itself has the progressive atmosphere of a small college. The upper halls are hung with Monet and Gauguin prints; on Friday afternoon Maurice Evans and Laurence Olivier records are played in the school library. Every morning, to start the day, a student reads a self-selected passage of Scripture over the school's $3000 speaker system (a gift from two senior classes of past years) connected with all classrooms. Last year the Woodrow Wilson football team, cocaptained by hulking, sixteen-year-old Bill Forester, R.O.T.C. colonel, member of the National Honor Society and ex-class president, took city championship, and next fall the team, accompanied by the coach, the school nurse, a Spanish teacher (Continued on Page 82)

Cynthia picks Senior Speech as favorite class, spends one hour a day on other homework. Math is hardest subject; biology themes are easy. "Almost everybody just copies the facts out of the encyclopedia."

Most girls spend $1 to $5 a week, not including clothes allowance. After-school soft drinks cost 25c a week; 25c a day buys sample plate lunch of meat loaf, black-eyed peas and corn bread in Woodrow Wilson cafeteria.

"Down here we don't just get married young—we all get married when we get asked." Cynthia hopes to have three children; is willing to start out on $200 a month.

"Driving a car is the way I like best to get exercise." But, as a good sport, Cynthia tries hard in gym class, will play softball with girl friends but prefers miniature golf "if we must play something on dates."

"Tummy-busters" for two: five flavors of ice cream, four kinds of sauce, a banana, whipped cream, nuts and cherries cost a dollar apiece, and "they're ace keen!"

Too Typically Texas

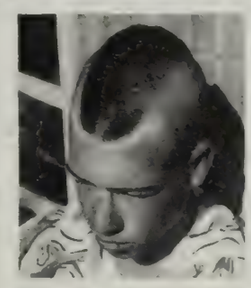
IN Texas, fads and fancies tend to be extreme. Dallas teeners paint jalopies in polka dots and stripes, drive a 1927 hearse. Their language is vivid: "She's just out to get your votes" (trying to be popular); "He drags a rough reputation" (a wolf); or "Sit down, you've got your votes" (stop showing off).

They like salted peanuts in Cokes, strawberry-sundae sauce floating in root beer, or ice cream between soda crackers, but will settle for hamburgers and Suzy Q potatoes. One of their hangouts has a bell system which warns teen customers when a study period is over and next class begins; another gives free chocolate sodas to any kids sporting all-A report cards.

They love to dance: one high school even sponsors two before-class dance sessions at 8 A.M.; another holds after-school dances in the library. Answering the phone, teeners say: "Shoot, it's your nickel"; "State Prison, Inmate 13"; "This is heaven, which angel do you want?"; or "I don't care if you did call, I don't want to talk to you"—with a quick bang of the receiver.

Their slang is so complicated that even teeners themselves, changing high schools, sometimes need an interpreter. A "lotus" is a boy; a "lotus blossom" is a girl. If a girl "courts to get her votes," she necks to be popular. And if she "courts up a storm," she necks heavily. A boy without money is "broker than the Ten Commandments"; a "lovely" is homely; "saggy" is tired, but "soggy" is dull. "You're all right in your place, but they haven't dug it yet" or "You're a neat guy, but there's just no demand for them" is a brush-off. A boy trying to get a date with an extra-popular girl may find it's "as easy as stacking greased BB's with boxing gloves on."

"Race night"—on week ends Dallas boys say they take their family cars to a straight stretch of road just 7/10 of a mile long, race at 85–95 mph. Result: thrills and cops getting caught.



Everybody's doing it . . .

. . . Dallas boys are sporting boogie haircuts (short on top and long on the sides), burr cuts (clipped to within an inch of the scalp) and even Apache cuts (which, unlike boogie cuts, leave a ridge of long hair on top of the head). The Hollywood cut (long on the sides and sweeping back to a "duck point" low on the back of the neck) is even more striking with long sideburns. With peroxide, ammonia and an old toothbrush, many boys have bleached their forelocks blond; one school's baseball team turned their burr cuts a bright, straw yellow. Hats may be Army fatigue hats, floppy, visored golf caps in loud checks and plaids, striped railroad engineers' caps, and pastel felt "zoo" hats with a four-inch brim and a foot-long pheasant feather. Yellow or lime shirts with big collars and print Tarongs (small piece of tie silk which hooks under the shirt collar) add more color. Knit ties are either tied in exaggerated Windsor knots or flipped beneath the shirt collar and not tied at all. But Texas boys really prefer open-neck sports shirts and cardigan jackets because they hate to wear ties—"the terrific heat, you know."

Going steady . . .

. . . may be a matter of love ("We're engaged to be engaged"), pride ("He wanted me to wear his R.O.T.C. cross guns") or, for most kids, merely Saturday-night social security—"so you always have a date for big doings." Athletes are most sought—a "really popular" girl may end up going steady with a football player, a basketball player and a baseball player the same year, in each one's big season. Steadies exchange class rings (taped in to fit) or I.D. bracelets; appear in identical reindeer sweaters, turtle-neck T shirts or bright Argyle socks. An athlete's girl wears his gold football or baseball on a thin chain around her neck, sometimes even his bulky "letter" jacket. While some couples go steady only a week, the average last three months. A few serious couples marry soon after graduation. On dates they flock to "mean movies" and good Westerns; hoot and whistle when Texas is mentioned. They like very slow dances involving low, deep knee-bends and the Sunset Stomp, a fast cross step; are reviving the Charleston, but can't whip up much enthusiasm for jitterbugging and jazz. Smooth tunes are "fine like wine"; Western songs are "ginger peachy."

Fast footwork . . .

. . . At sock hops, and even formal dances, teeners line up their ballet slippers and "bold look" shoes (thick leather with extra-heavy soles) at the door while they dance smooth numbers in their Argyles or bare feet. Square-dancing clubs meet every Friday night: girls wear pony-skin loafers and fringed suède jackets or long billowing gingham skirts (maybe matching their steady's shirt); boys (who usually wear tight blue jeans low on the hips with no belt) are fancier still in tight-fitting "frontier" pants with fancy pockets and embroidery, equally decorative Texas shirts and high-heeled cowboy boots—"because they make lots of noise when you dance." A few even bring sheepskin-lined slippers to wear between square-dance sets. One school's football team wears big black Stetsons for identification off the field; another team started a new fad when they appeared in identical blue-and-white-striped bib-front overalls—known ever since as "cheat pants" because the white stripe could be ideal for writing exam "crib notes." Overalls are "climbing the ladder of success."

Sex freedom and morals in the United States

THROUGHOUT the country, sex, according to high-school students, is the most important personal problem facing teen-agers today. Every boy and girl wants to be popular, and the mark of popularity is frequent dating. These dates mean a new personal freedom and endless hours spent alone together in movies, at dances and in parked cars, with the privacy and opportunity to "go ahead." The resulting conduct, if found out, is mercilessly censured.

Sexually, adolescence has always been a troubled time, but teen-agers today in the United States have a sex problem much greater than any equivalent that faced their parents at the same age. Social customs have changed. For too many, religious restrictions no longer exist. Proper sex education in the school or in the home often gives specific biological facts, but neglects to offer necessary psychological props. In short, teen-agers have been given freedom, but are expected not to use it. The result is that with many high-school students there is, often, a vast and disturbing difference between what they are "told to do" by parents and "what the crowd really does."

Because of the increasing importance of this problem, the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL decided to study it at its source, by reporting, objectively, the attitudes and reactions of teen-agers themselves in every section of the country, North, South, East and West. The following information was obtained through personal interviews with many students. Most of them talked frankly—in their homes, after school, and in the favorite drugstore hangout; many were eager to discuss conflicts which had worried them for some time. For even among boys and girls whose backgrounds and family incomes warrant a certain social security, and who have benefited by a progressive and intelligent sex- and health-education program at school, the handling of sex is admittedly a definite problem.

The date life in most large high schools throughout the United States follows a set pattern. Most of the seniors have been dating High-schoolers to whom sex decisions have become an immediate problem believe that help must come chiefly from their own homes. A few feel that parents do understand what their children are going through.

" . . . Why couldn't you answer the important question I wanted to ask you without my asking?"

Many states forbid sale of liquor to persons under 21, but "anybody can find a friend who looks 21."

"Any fellow needs a few courting experiences to find out what's true love and what's just a high-school escapade."

for the past three or four years, beginning at 13 for "movie dates" and 14 for "car dates" as a general rule. About 20 per cent of the high-school seniors "go steady." This is a figure hard to compute, since the paths of young love are rough and "going-steady" bliss may last anywhere from a week to the full three high-school years.

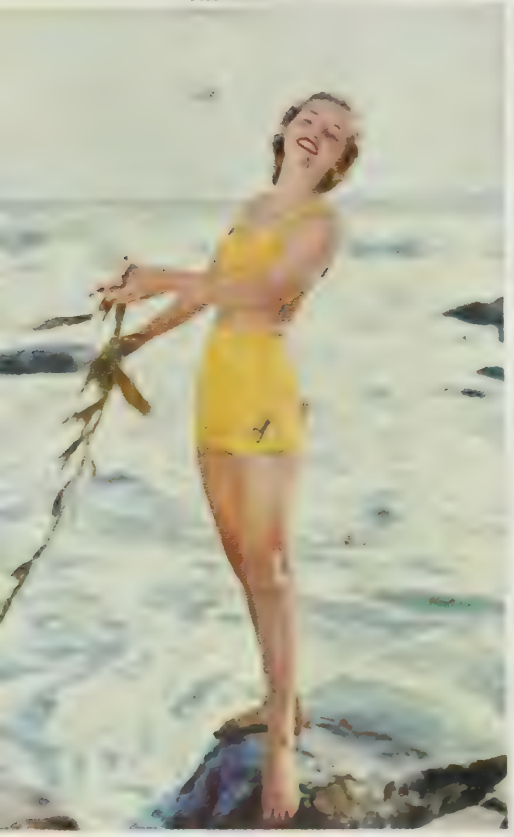
That "first date" at 13 or 14 was usually a timorous or boisterous attempt at a Saturday-afternoon movie. An awkward afternoon theater party given by a girl in the grade school was remembered by several boys as their "first date." One girl said that she attended her first formal at 11, had her first "mad crush" at 12, and by ninth grade "was just an old hand at anything." A socially cognizant boy took his first date to dinner and an ice-hockey game at 12, "though it was really sort of a business obligation of my father's." Most high-school students of 17 or 18 who go in for dating at all say they date two or three times a week, at the week ends. A few of the steadies fit in five dates a week, counting Sunday-morning church and Sunday-evening services as separate dates.

For most young people, Friday or Saturday night dates mean a neighborhood movie followed by a malt and hamburger at a restaurant hangout, a private dance, or an evening at a favorite juke-and-jive dance spot on the edge of town. And, according to the students, the most important part of every "car date" is the forty-five minutes to two hours spent in "courting." As one boy explained, "With some girls, courting comes before or after hamburgers. And with some girls, it comes instead."

And what is meant by courting? A few generations ago, it would have meant "spooning" in the more intimate stages. Currently, in most high schools, it is termed "necking," and in many parts of the South and West it is called "courting"—"just a lot of hugging and kissing," "a little talk,

(Continued on Page 86)

With help from her family, a pregnant girl may just "go out of town"; another must wait for child in a foster home.



Sex classes brought just one parent's complaint: "I didn't want my child to hear the word 'pregnant' till she married."

ersucker shorts and bra for the beach, 95, combine with skirt and jacket.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

shion in lemon yellow—young, two-piece, n-hipped swim-suit by Mary Ann Deweese.

SUMMER TRAVEL COAST TO COAST

By Wilhela Cushman
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Seer-sucker skirt, perfect "separate," easy to wash, $7.95; white piqué hat, $6.95; blouse, $5.95; shantung scarf.

For travel by car and seashore resorts: skirt, $7.95, and jacket, $8.95, part of the four-piece seersucker outfit, by Stephanie Koret.

Clothes that are good travelers have a far-flung life. A seersucker casual is right in a thousand settings; a shantung suit or chiffon evening dress at home in cities a continent apart. This year we're giving you a long-range plan, choosing from California-designed fashions for their fresh outdoor look, their easy-to-pack-and-to-keep fabrics, their enormous adaptability. Emphasizing seersucker—a four-piece wardrobe-within-a-wardrobe, cool and wrinkle-proof for hot-weather travel, sight-seeing, days on the beach. Doubling on shantung—a suit and a dress in the natural raw-silk color. Stressing the importance of something with a bare top and wisp of a jacket that multiplies its uses—a brief, quick-drying bathing suit, a slimmest-of-the-slim lightweight wool suit, a fleecy-warm throw-over-everything topcoat. See how they're worn, how they go together.

SUMMER TRAVEL COAST TO COAST

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Natural silk pongee dress, around $15, with straw belt and straw pumps. By Joy Kingston.

Shades of gray in sheerest chiffon, light to pack, little pressing; around $49.95. By Charles Sorel.

Coast-to-coast wool coat, $69.95, for everything. By Alfred Simmons.

Straw pumps and bags are the fashion, light in your luggage, right for silk shantung or cotton seersucker. The small cloche is the travel-perfect hat—white piqué for cottons, natural string or soft felt for wool or silk suit. Gloves are white cotton or chamois doeskin, scarfs gold and turquoise shantung, jewelry coral and turquoise beads, pearls and gold bracelets. Add brown calfskin pumps and a big barrel bag for en route, air-cool dancing sandals, white-linen or spectator pumps for destinations.

Bare-top seersucker dress and bolero, straw belt, white accessories, $35, by Helen Gudgell.

BAG BY MATTHEWS

Travel topcoat for a wardrobe based on beiges can be red or blending beige, $125. By David Isaacs.

Natural rayon shantung suit, hand-finished, around $50. Raffia pumps, straw bag, veiled cloche. Suit by Louis Gerst.
HAT BY REX

Checked wool suit by Louis Gerst, around $65.
HAT BY JOHN FREDERICS

Toast-color piqué, $22.95. By Murray Goldstein.

Rayon with jacket, $39.95. By De De Johnson.

What can you do when your landlady has you at the end of a lease?

"THE trouble with the war was it changed everything," Pauly philosophized plaintively while opening another can of shrimp, "even us."

"Don't you think Chi ought to get a little credit for you, darling?" I murmured as I poured cocktail sauce into the fluted little glass in the center of the big solid-silver canapé dish. I always feel very tender toward Chi, even if he is married to Pauly. Back in our youth he was the first boy I ever despised.

"Hey, Maudie," Davy, my dear helpless husband, yelped from the stove at the other end of Mrs. Roberts' vast kitchen, "the bacon won't wrap around these cheese things. It just buckles."

"Take it easy, loved one," I soothed him like the good wife I try to be. "You'll last longer."

" 'Take it easy,' she says! Listen, toots-face, I ask you a simple question and do I get a simple answer!" Davy strode across the kitchen and masterfully stuck a plateful of lovely crisp bacon under my nose. "Let's just see you take it easy and wrap that!"

Davy can be about as sharp as a marble sometimes, I've discovered after being married to him for the worst part of two years. I'm not sure if it's just him or if like they say men are dreamers and what's wrong is when they're awake.

"Um, it's yummy," I said, nibbling a piece. "Nice and crisp the way I like it. I'll just eat it all myself while you cook some more half raw so it will wrap."

"Trichinosis specials they'll be," Davy muttered darkly, as he went back to the stove.

I didn't have time to explain to him the difference between bacon and fresh pork because Pauly was pleading for the second or third time, "Do I show? Rigor mortis, do I show that much?" Pauly is sensitive about being on the nest again so soon.

"Don't worry, dear," I said truthfully, "in these uniforms neither of us shows whether we're a boy or a girl or how many."

Davy always said Mrs. Roberts' maids were built like lady hammer throwers, which was just Davy trying to be funny until, alas, that's just about what happened and at such a time, with a formal dinner all planned in honor of wonderful Colonel Davisson, our future governor—after the election he would be, that is—and Mrs. Roberts too unnerved to decide who she was for, the cook or the waitress. So then they both left—the maids, I mean. Although the maid problem is one problem that Davy and I don't know about, I could see what a crisis this was turning out to be, even if Davy couldn't.

I'm afraid Davy is politically not very mature, because the way he talks you get the idea he thinks he's running the country, instead of the top name on the ballot where you put the X. I myself am a Young Republican. I don't exactly understand the difference between Democrats and Republicans, but it makes poor daddy so sad every time the Democrats win that as soon as I could vote I just naturally decided to be a Young Republican and do what I could to help. Mrs. Roberts is a Republican, too, and a perfect love, even though of course, poor dear, she can't be a Young Republican.

"Well, well, you dear child," she said the first time she came to call and I was putting Bruce, our baby, into his bunting. "Another little soldier in the crusade." Meaning Bruce.

I said yes indeed—only of course I didn't mention how Bruce had to be a sort of part-time soldier on account of Davy is a Democrat. Bruce is a strong baby, Davy says—he's got a two-party system. That's Davy for you, the wit.

Well, this time Mrs. Roberts mentioned working—not fighting—for the party, and believe it or not, that was just exactly what she meant literally, when she came to tell us about the maids. She was absolutely desperate—she said she'd even make it a buffet supper instead of a formal dinner, except the wrong people would be sure to monopolize Colonel Davisson. It was perfectly natural for her to turn to me for help because besides being a Young Republican, Davy and I live in the apartment over her garage, so she's always sweetly asking us to do things and we're always cheerfully doing them, the way you do these days when somebody has you on a month-to-month lease.

But this time I could smile without trying when Mrs. Roberts distractedly patted her lovely white curls and said, "My dear, I wouldn't ask you if it weren't for the cause."

(Continued on Page 132)

By Graeme and Sarah Lorimer

"Okay," Davy said. "Sacrifice me." For the moment, love was to me just the tenth word in a telegram.

ILLUSTRATED BY

It takes time to tell a love story, perhaps even as long as twenty-five years.

Silver Wedding

She saw her daughter's wide, startled eyes, and a wave of color swept into her face.
"Do I look nice, Ginny?"
she asked shyly.

By Dorothy Thompson

ARRIVING at his office at nine in the morning, Henry Maynes, fifty-five-year-old Chicago lawyer, saw at once the date at the top of his engagement pad. He was appalled. "Is this the twenty-seventh?" he asked his secretary.

"Why, yes, Mr. Maynes," Miss Smith answered wonderingly. "Why?"

"I grow senile," he said. "I thought it was the twenty-sixth." He reached for the telephone, but put the receiver back without dialing. "Will you call my wife, Miss Smith, and tell her I shall be home early—around four o'clock? It is my wedding anniversary—the twenty-fifth. I want to surprise her. Now, what must I do today that cannot possibly be postponed?"

Miss Smith told him that apart from rechecking a brief and dictating answers to a dozen letters, there was nothing absolutely urgent.

Henry Maynes applied himself to the brief, and told Miss Smith to check the theaters and find out what was on.

"There's an opening," she interrupted to say. "Katharine Cornell in Antony and Cleopatra. I'm afraid it is sold out, but I'll call the agencies."

"Call Tom Blakelock," he advised. "He's got money in the show. Tell him it's my silver wedding."

Two hours later he said, "You have good taste in clothes. Is there anything in your contract that forbids you to help me shop—for a lady?"

"Oh, I'd love to," said Miss Smith, her eyes sparkling.

They visited a fashionable Michigan Boulevard shop. There Henry bought a white dinner dress; a short, sable-dyed-kolinsky cape; a handsome costume-jewelry bracelet; a complete set of French-imported ninon underwear; a silver evening bag, evening slippers of silver leather, and six pairs of almost invisible nylons.

When his purchases were complete, and while he was waiting, he took a good look at himself in one of the long mirrors near him. He saw a well set-up gray-haired man, a bit thick around the waist, but no paunch; sound, square, white teeth; a straight nose; a network of quizzical, humorous lines around gray eyes; when he smiled a cleft, definitely a dimple, appeared mischievously in one cheek.

The saleswoman, returning with the boxes and observing his checkup, remarked, "The lady who gets these things has a distinguished husband."

This made him absurdly merry. As he went down in the elevator he tried to remember how he had looked twenty-five years ago. Very slim, he remembered, with thick, brown hair Gertrude had loved to smooth back from his temples. "It's lovely—like bronze wings," she had said foolishly. He remembered his face as it appeared on the wedding photograph. Callow, definitely, he said to himself. Not at all distinguished.

Quite otherwise, in the taxicab, he remembered Gertrude. She had been beautiful! That narrow little face, that soft little mouth, pink it was—and what had happened to girls' mouths, in the meantime? he wondered to himself. Did they deliberately paint 'em big beyond their natural boundaries? Darned if he knew, but he thought of Ginny. Ginny had a mouth like that. Crimson, wide, and with sharp edges over square, brilliant teeth. Ginny was his daughter, aged twenty-three, and mother of a three-month-old son. He smiled quite tenderly as Ginny passed through his mind, but astonished himself by muttering, "Not my type. Definitely not. Takes after my Aunt Hat."

Aunt Hattie had been the bane of his childhood—his father's sister and a much-admired career woman. Handsome but bossy, he recalled. Ginny wasn't bossy—not exactly—but why did she always say "co-operate" when she meant "lend a hand," and why did it always turn out to be a one-way co-operation—Ginny's way? Not considerate, he remarked to himself. Good girl, but not considerate. Not like Gertrude.

He halted the taxi to stop at a florist's and bought an orchid—a big white orchid, with touches of pale green. White, green, gray, light red—those were Gertrude's colors. Brown eyes were rarish, he thought, with (Continued on Page 178)

ILLUSTRATED BY ANDREW LOOMIS

Sheer brown-and-white voile makes the most feminine of afternoon dresses: white organdy tie and cuffs. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 6781, 12 to 20. Matching gloves.

The ever-popular shirtwaist dress in linenlike cotton. Vogue Design No. 6767, 12 to 40.

Mauve chambray "slip dress" has its matching striped jacket. Vogue Design No. S-4988, 12 to 20.
HAT BY BETMAR

NEVER have cottons been more beautiful. Never have they looked newer. They lend themselves to precise tailoring or to subtle draping . . . they wash like hankies. Sheer polka-dot and printed voiles, chambrays in plain colors with stripes to match, crisp piqués, blends of cotton and rayon—all in heavenly colors. Cottons at home in the city or country . . . made crease-resistant by new methods and careful manufacture. You will find cottons one of the easiest fabrics to sew . . . inexpensive to buy . . . and comfortable to wear.

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order them by mail, enclosing check or money order, from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. (Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

CAPTIVATING COTTONS

By NORA O'LEARY

Cotton combines with rayon in beautifully textured green butcher linen. Accent with yellow. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 6778, 12 to 40.

HAT BY IRENE

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Crisp embossed piqué in a one-piece, buttoned classic. Plunging neckline, kimono sleeves. Vogue Design No. 6792, 12 to 20.

Gingham, piqué and velvet ribbon combine on a summer day. Junior Vogue Design No. 3286, 9 to 15 years.

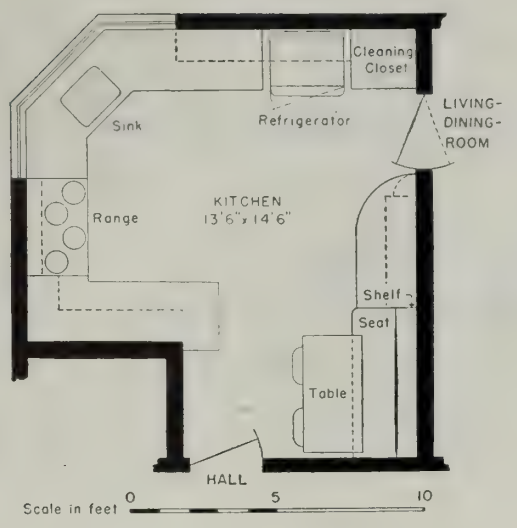
Pattern for navy ribbon beret and gingham cartwheel, No. 2542, can be ordered from Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Pa., for 10c.

Other views, yardage and prices of Vogue Patterns on Page 166.

© VOGUE

Through the window you see a comfortable corner for meals in a house without a dining room. Serving counter and storage for china and silver at left. Fun to eat here!

The Pink of Perfection



By GLADYS TABER

Even in January it will still be June in this charming kitchen which weaves new patterns

PHOTOS BY STUART-STEPHENSON

Sturdy pull-out shelf provides sit-down work space every woman wants for odd jobs.

THE white picket fences of New England are freighted with red ramblers and pink Dorothy Perkins and little delicate silver moon roses. In the Midwest the great fluffy peonies spread their lavish petals, the spiked delphinium stands in proud rows. In the South the whole world is flowering, and in the West the color of the bright sky is repeated in a million sunny blossoms. For this is the lovely, the romantic month—June!

What could be more natural than that the Journal should build for this month a romantic kitchen, a kitchen that is "such stuff as dreams are made on." It is not a temporary budget kitchen, it is a kitchen to work for and plan for and save toward. The bride who is cooking on a hot plate can tuck this kitchen away in her scrapbook with the (Continued on Page 185)

In the kitchen of your dreams you can now have steel cabinets with a durable baked-on enamel finish in soft clear colors.

lor and convenience.

Have a Nice Week End

To enjoy the week end as much as your guests do, keep the food simple, decide on a two-a-day meal plan and make some dishes do double duty.

EARLY LUNCH

Serves Six

Fresh Pineapple and Strawberries

Baked Deviled Eggs and Asparagus

Garden Salad

Blueberry Muffins Honey But

Coffee

SUPPER
Serves Six

Vegetable-Juice Cocktail

Potato Chips Avocado Spread

Chicken Pie Peas

Hot Biscuits and Gravy

Jellied Cherries and Cottage-Cheese Salad

Coffee

PHOTOS BY STUART-FOWLER

By ANN BATCHELDER

ALTHOUGH there's a rare crop of June weddings round about, and at several I shall be "among those present," don't get the idea that June, for me, is going to be devoted exclusively to listening to the Wedding March and eating chicken salad and ice cream. It isn't. There are other activities on my agenda, and prominent among them is preparation for the summer week ends. Among my friends are a goodly number of born week-enders. I used to be a pretty good one myself. Aside from the board and luxurious surroundings for two or most likely three days—that old Friday-to-Monday business, you know—I loved the packing up and leaving the "don't-leave-milk" note for the milkman. I loved to think of the Sunday papers that would stay right where they were heaved on the steps, except for the funnies which the neighbors' children helped themselves to.

(Continued on Page 152)

LINE A DAY

By ANN BATCHELDER

1 Talk about the housing shortage—there isn't any at my place, let me tell you. There are several little houses in the "woods section," all occupied. The three-story wren house atop the porte-cochere; the robin house near the patio; and among the big rocks, every wood-flower family has an apartment. Everything rent free.

2 This is the time of year when folks think up ways to do things with three of spring's best vegetables—new potatoes, garden asparagus, and green peas.

3 A vegetable dish you won't forget in a hurry: Take two or three cups of cooked green peas and a cup of asparagus tips. Only the tips. Heat them together in a little butter or margarine. Season, and pour over them a cup of scalded cream.

4 Little new potatoes are best boiled in their so-called "jackets." Then the jackets come off without paring, and you've got something. Roll them in butter and chopped mint or chives or water cress. Toss them in scalded, seasoned cream, if you'd rather. Either way they're delicious, and be sure not to cook them too long.

5 Red caviar? That's what they say. But it has about as much to do with real caviar as a sunflower has commerce with a regal lily. It's only salmon eggs. Don't let the word fool you.

6 Now red caviar is very good indeed in certain ways. Not much to eat on a canapé, but try mixing a little with mayonnaise, and use with fresh boiled (frozen, maybe) shrimps. Dress or dip, as you like.

7 Looking for a little different dessert these days? Bake some custards in cups. Divide the mixture, and flavor some with vanilla, some with caramel and some with coffee. Bake, setting the cups in hot water, until a silver knife comes out clean. Takes about 30–35 minutes in an oven at 350° F.

8 Next chapter: When they are cold, cut out a piece from the centers, fill them with flavored whipped cream, and return the little tops—or top each one with a meringue shell. Serve in the cups, very cold.

9 Try toasting some coarsely chopped walnuts—and adding them to chicken salad. That different touch that wins applause.

10 Now the jellied-soup season begins in earnest. Garnish your jellied consommé with finely minced parsley and chopped chives, mixed together. Don't forget the lemon.

11 When your cheese soufflé is on the menu, add to the soufflé mixture some finely chopped green onions and some crumbled, crisply fried bacon.

12 Combinations are good. But has anyone thought up a combination can opener and paring knife for picnic purposes? Never mind. Someone will. I myself am working on it.

13 What is known as Oriental Salad, in the circles in which I move, means a sort of salad and dessert in one. That's a combination for you. Choose the very hearts of fine lettuce. Make into cups.

14 Chapter II. Fill them with dates stuffed with nut meats, prunes filled with cream cheese or Roquefort cheese, slices of preserved ginger and sliced kumquats. Now add stiffly whipped cream to mayonnaise, then a little ginger sirup, and dress the salad—or pass the dressing, as you please.

15 From an old cookbook: "Many cooks depend on very unreliable kitchen aids, one of the worst being kitchen scales. Who knows what tampering may be done to these by the children, such as weighing the cat, etc., thereby putting them out of gear. Depend only on measures, not weight." Weighed my cat in the pantry. Seven pounds.

16 Always experimenting, I took on baked tomatoes a short time ago. You know how I do them. Nice firm tomatoes, plenty of bread crumbs, butter and basil, with salt and pepper. But—just to see, I added a little orégano and a touch of marjoram. Made good in a big way.

17 A truly great dish is macaroni au gratin, and the gimmick here is—mace. That old-fashioned spice—mace. Only a little. Don't go berserk. Watch the reaction.

18 For the cold-meat platter: Spread cold boiled-ham slices with seasoned cream cheese and roll them around thin slices of dill pickles.

19 In case you think a coupe is always a motorcar, it isn't. Get a quart of vanilla ice cream. Serve it in coupe glasses, pour over each serving a lavish pour of apricot sirup. Garnish with apricot wafers. Add some grated chocolate—and what a coupe. It's a coup!

20 A pretty nice jelly dessert is this: Mix two cups of grape juice with two cups of ginger ale. Add the juice of a lemon. Set with unflavored gelatin. Serve with cut fruit—might as well make it in a ring mold and fill the center. Serve with cream-diluted mayonnaise.

21 When you start broiling a steak, try spreading it with some chutney. What a flavor! And another little chutney thought. Serve your hot Welsh rarebit as usual, then add a spoonful of chutney in the center of each serving.

22 One of the simplest and one of the nicest supper dishes is only this: Hard-boiled eggs cut in quarters, peeled mushrooms and flaked sardines, all in a rich cream sauce in a casserole, covered with cracker crumbs and grated Parmesan cheese, baked, eaten.

23 What is a vogue? Skirts go down, then up they go. The boyish bob, then the girlish blob. That's vogue. But vogues in eating don't go that way. Witness the ham and eggs, the corned-beef hash, the blessed old chicken pie. Keep it in mind—you can't beat that vogue.

24 A cheese sandwich without mustard is like a dowager minus her emeralds. But, put a little mustard on the cheese in your sandwiches. Then dip them in egg beaten up with a little cream, and fry them in butter or margarine. Have them hot.

25 Creamed lobster on rice is epicurean. Same goes with chicken. A garnish of cut almonds and coconut helps.

26 Shad roe may be broiled, spread with butter or margarine, seasoned with salt and pepper, garnished with crisp bacon, and served with fried hominy, accompanied by sautéed pineapple. This is a real treat.

27 Take your fish-ball mixture and mix with it about half as much finely flaked lobster or fresh crab meat. Beat in an egg to bind, and add a little cream. Make up in finger-size cakes and fry in deep fat. How good, how wonder-working as an appetizer.

28 Halve some fine ripe cantaloupes. Chill them very well. Fill the halves with vanilla ice cream and cover with crushed ripe raspberries.

29 Try a molded cheese salad, garnished with nasturtium leaves, water cress and little white grapes. This is something out of a dream book.

30 Now is the end of the day and the end of this contribution to good eating. But if I don't get busy right away, I won't eat trout tonight.

I LISTENED

Oh! when was I as young as now?
I cannot quite remember—
I listened to a lover's vow—
That must have been December.

I listened to a lover's vow
But never spoke my heart.
For I was older then than now
And we are years apart.

So many years have passed us by
And he is old, but young am I.

BORDER DESIGN BY JOHN A. TERRY

Seen throughout the old French Quarter of New Orleans are a variety of graceful iron "lace work" grilles. This one is reproduced from a balcony on St. Charles Avenue.

Campbell's take pride in bringing you this famous soup of old New Orleans

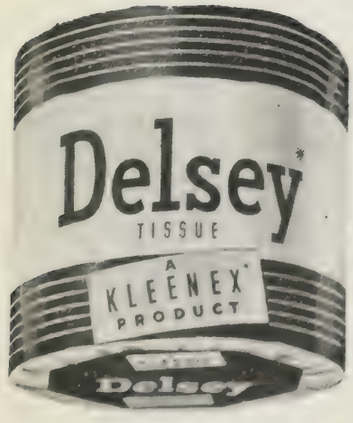
Old New Orleans can't be beat
For gaiety and fun;
For truly wondrous things to eat
From morn to setting sun!

A different, delicious CHICKEN Soup adapted from a cherished old Creole recipe

You're bound to enjoy Campbell's Chicken Gumbo Soup. You'll relish the rich chicken stock, crammed with a wealth of luscious things: green okra, red-ripe tomatoes, fluffy rice and tender pieces of chicken—all seasoned with savory herbs.

Just try this fine soup soon. Probably you'll see it become another family favorite. Be sure to get some at your grocer's!

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL



A soup to remember . . . and look for

Campbell's CHICKEN GUMBO SOUP

Hey Mom!... Better get Delsey—it's soft like Kleenex Tissues!

Delsey toilet tissue

A KLEENEX PRODUCT

Double ply for extra strength!

* U. S. PAT. OFF.

LET LOVE COME LAST

(Continued from Page 39)

as did Chauncey. Eugene had a vast respect for money, whereas Chauncey only desired it as a thing valuable in itself.

When the first days of danger arrived for Chauncey, Eugene knew it. The financial catastrophe was no shock to him, as it was to his father. He had listened to Chauncey's incoherent denunciations of William Prescott. He had seen William often in Chauncey's offices, and had recognized William's tremendous vitality and force; he knew that here was a man of ambition and imagination, a man who could not be stopped.

A month before the final collapse of the American Lumber Company, Eugene had said to his mother, "Papa doesn't see that Mr. Prescott is a man who knows what he wants, and intends to have it. I can understand that. In his place, I'd do just what he is trying to do."

Alice was more than a little shocked. "But, my dear, Mr. Prescott is a very unscrupulous man, and a bad one."

Eugene knew it was all inevitable. But when Chauncey returned home ill, in a state of collapse, the boy helped put his father to bed. It was Eugene who sent for a physician and insisted upon sitting by Chauncey's bed, while his father slept fitfully under the influence of sedatives.

EUGENE looked about the richly furnished bedroom. All this would have to go, of course. He, Eugene, no longer would be respected in his school as the son of Andersburg's richest citizen. His pony would be sold and the servants dismissed. Temporarily, at least, the family would retire to poverty.

For a few moments Eugene allowed himself to feel hatred for William Prescott. But he knew that this was foolish. His father had been a fool, unable to see what was right under his nose. Eugene had always known that William hated his employer. If Chauncey had chosen to be complacent, blind and condescending toward the man who was out to ruin him, he had no right to complain over the result.

Eugene was only twelve years old. But he began, as he sat by his father's bed during the nights that followed, to plot the destruction of William Prescott.

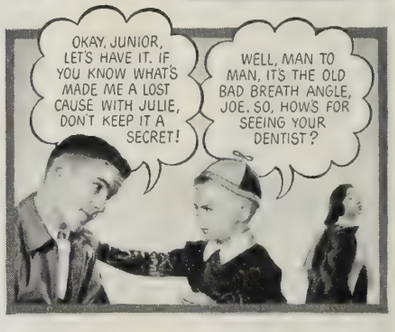
The day that William and Ursula were married, Chauncey Arnold died. Eugene did not cry at the funeral services, or at the cemetery. At his own request, he spent the night on a couch in his mother's room. He did not sleep till morning, but pretended to do so, in order not to disturb Alice. He lay awake, listening to her helpless, half-stifled sobbing. He was still young, and he loved his mother, and his hands gripped the quilts fiercely. The dark house lay empty about them. His father was gone. It was not until Eugene himself wept a little that he could sleep.

A week later Eugene said calmly to his mother, "I suppose there is enough left to see me through school?"

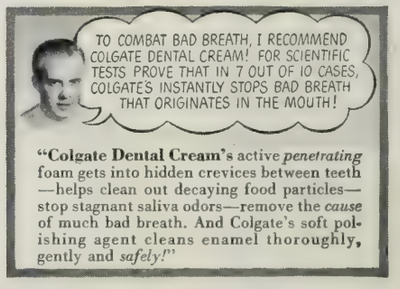
"Yes, of course," she said. "There is a fund set aside for your schooling, dear. Papa arranged that only two months ago. The courts cannot take that away from us. And I still have my own income. It's not much, but it will keep us alive until you are able to make your own way in the world."

Within ten days, a check for two thousand dollars arrived from William Prescott, accompanied by a note of condolence. He hoped Mrs. Arnold would not hesitate to call upon him if she at any time needed assistance.

Alice read and reread the note. The check slipped to the floor. Suddenly she began to weep again.



Eugene picked up the check and looked at it. "This money?" he said.



"I must send it back at once, of course."

Eugene gave her the check. He loved his mother. Once he had thought of her as a wise woman, but now it was only too evident that she was a fool. He accepted the fact. One always had to accept facts.

Ursula's wedding at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bassett was celebrated with as much

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth—helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

LATER-Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

Always use
COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
after you eat and before every date

pomp and lavishness as could be arranged on short notice. Mrs. Bassett was horrified when the bride insisted upon being married in the "homemade" blue dress which she had already worn. Ursula was obdurate about this. But she allowed Mrs. Bassett to fill the guest list with the town's most prominent people. She also relented to the extent of having her wide straw hat engulfed in yards of blue veiling, which was to cover her face during the ceremony.

William's wedding gift was a necklace of magnificent pearls. After seeing them, Ezra Bassett examined William's new bank account at his establishment. The money for the gems had not been withdrawn from this account. Mr. Bassett was both relieved and annoyed. Obviously the lumberman must have large deposits in other cities. However, so impressed were the wedding guests by the emerald ring and the pearls that the Bassetts glowed, as if they themselves were responsible for all this magnificence.

After the ceremony in the Bassetts' drawing room, appropriately banked with spring flowers, William Prescott stood beside his wife, talking pleasantly to her friends. He drank half a glass of champagne. Only Ursula knew that he was embarrassed to the point of agony, though he had approved the plans for such an elaborate wedding. He talked with his new directors and officers, but with such a wary, arrogant manner that she suffered for him. It would be a long time before he would be at ease with them, she knew; he would never trust them. And he could never like anyone whom he could not trust. He did not eat any of the postwedding dinner; instead, he waved the waiters away impatiently.

The wise man delights in water, the good man delights in mountains. For the wise move; but the good stay still. The wise are happy; but the good, secure.

—CONFUCIUS.

He was easily the most impressive man present, in his broadcloth cutaway and striped trousers, well-folded black cravat and black pearls. She stood beside him, straight and tall, her pale face resolute. She was committed; this was the thing she wished to do. If she was frightened, she would not permit herself to acknowledge it.

Oliver and Lucy were at Ursula's house. They were to remain there with Mrs. Templeton for several days after the ceremony. Ursula and William were to go directly to the Imperial Hotel. Later, he had promised, there would be a trip to Europe.

The wedding had taken place at five o'clock. It had been a warm, rainy day. At sunset, just when dinner was over, the rain ceased. But the oppression remained. Ursula slipped through the groups of friends, found her way to a window. The windows had been shut against the rain. Now the house was warm, the air heavy with perfumes, the odors of food and wine and flowers.

Ursula felt that she must open the window, but the catch resisted her efforts. She turned, looking for assistance. It was then that she saw Doctor Banks speaking to William.

She thought she saw a change come over his face. A servant had just finished lighting the enormous chandelier. Its glaring light fell on William's face. Perhaps it was that which made him appear suddenly to lose color. Everyone else was laughing; champagne corks popped. But William had turned away. He was speaking to Mrs. Bassett.

Ursula heard the crunch of wheels on the gravel below the window. Suddenly she saw that the whole roomful of guests had turned toward her, with laughter, with glasses upheld. She looked at them and at William. She had been right about it; his face was white, his lips set. Something was certainly wrong.

THE lobby of the Imperial Hotel was paved with squares of black and white marble, ablaze with crystal chandeliers, crowded with gilt and red plush. Ursula had never seen the rooms above the street floor, but she suspected that the same decorative scheme would prevail there.

She was right, she saw, when she and William were ushered into their suite, attended by subservient employees in uniforms. The servitors disappeared; the manager, Mr. Ogden, remained for a few moments. Flowers were everywhere. Red plush curtains had been drawn across each window. Ursula had never cared for red; now, no matter where she looked this color assaulted her eyes. There was no escaping the massive gilt, either.

Her two modest trunks had been deposited in one of the bedrooms. She fled into this room, while William conversed with the manager, who seemed in no hurry to leave. Perhaps William was detaining him, thought Ursula. If so, she was grateful. She hurriedly unpacked the trunks; their contents scarcely made an impression in the enormous drawers of the walnut bureau. She saw her face in the mirror; it was pale and tight. The mirror also reflected the blue of her dress. The red of the room made this blue intense and startling. Her first impulse was to remove it. But she stopped with the initial hook; for the first time she was shy and embarrassed. She took off the yellow hat and placed it in the walnut wardrobe where she had hung her cloak.

NOW she saw William's tall chiffonier near the dresser. On it were his brushes topped with silver, and a dispatch case. She stood looking at them and all at once her eyes filled with tears. She gently opened one of the drawers, saw William's stiff shirts and cravats, his socks and handkerchiefs and underwear. She had seen her father's intimate things like this. Gently, she closed the drawer.

Ursula looked down at the wedding band upon her finger. Then she threw up her head and went into the parlor with a bright smile. She thanked Mr. Ogden for the flowers, and inconspicuously dismissed him. The door closed after him.

Ursula sat down on the red sofa, looked at her husband, and again smiled. But William continued to stand before the fireplace. He was very white, and there were lines about his lips.

He said abruptly, "There is something I must tell you."

"Yes, William." Her hands tightened together.

"Chauncey Arnold died this afternoon."

Ursula did not know what to say. But she knew she had to say something, and it must be at once. "I told you before, William, that I never liked him. I am sorry he is dead. But I did not like him. My father despised him."

"Someone said that his wife was a particular friend of yours."

"I've liked Alice; I still like her and I am sorry for her. It is too bad that Chauncey has died. Perhaps his—his loss may have hastened his death. That is something I can't tell."

He stood there stiffly and now he thrust his hands into his pockets. "I shall send Arnold's wife some money," he said.

"She will return it."

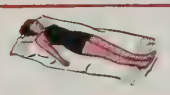
"Why? She'll need money, won't she?"

"Nevertheless," said Ursula wearily, "Alice will return the money. Why should she take it from a stranger? Have you ever met her?"

"No."

Ursula smiled without mirth. This is my wedding night, she thought. And here we are, talking of a tragedy, and my husband looks at me as if I were a disliked and suspected stranger. All at once, she felt completely exhausted. William had not kissed her, had not spoken her name. He had been carrying on a disturbing conversation when he should have been speaking to her with tenderness. She despised herself and William too.

He must have seen some of this in her face. "Why are we talking about these things?" he mumbled. "I had ordered a little dinner and champagne, at ten. It will be that soon."



Her hate subsided. She laughed. "I don't want anything to eat. And, frankly, I have never liked champagne."

He appeared relieved, moved to the bell rope and when a boy appeared canceled the order. Then he closed the door and returned to stand before the fireplace. Now he began to stare fixedly at Ursula.

FIRST AID
for Summer Emergencies

Last year more than 10½ million people were injured by accidents—an average of one every 3 seconds. There were undoubtedly many million more minor accidents which were never reported.

Many types of injuries occur most frequently in summer. Knowing First Aid, including what to do until the doctor comes, may prevent complications and save someone's life. To help you meet such emergencies, cut out this chart and place it in your First Aid kit. In case of a serious accident, however, it is always wise to call a doctor at once.

INJURY	FIRST AID TREATMENT
 Cuts, scratches, or any small wounds	Clean the wound with mild soap and water and apply antiseptic. When dry, cover with sterile dressing.
 Minor burns	To relieve pain, apply burn ointment or petroleum jelly, and cover with sterile dressing.
 Sunburn	Treat like any minor burn. If sunburn is severe, call a doctor.
 Sunstroke	Lay patient on his back in cool, shady place, apply ice bag or cold cloths to head. Do not give stimulants.
 Drowning or when breathing stops	Start artificial respiration immediately. Keep victim warm. Send for a doctor.
 Sprained joints	Keep injured joint raised and apply cold cloths or ice packs for several hours.
 Strained muscles	Rest the affected muscle. Apply mild heat if needed to relieve pain. If pain persists, call a doctor.
 Ivy, Oak, and Sumac poisoning	Wash with soap and water immediately after exposure. If redness and blisters appear, apply calomine lotion or use compresses soaked in cold baking soda or epsom salts.

If you would like to learn some of the more important First Aid techniques, ask your local Red Cross about their First Aid classes. In addition, Metropolitan has prepared a booklet which describes methods of handling many injuries. To get a copy, simply fill in and mail the coupon below.

COPYRIGHT 1949—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 Madison Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company
1 Madison Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Please send me the free booklet, 69-J "First Aid."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

TO VETERANS—IF YOU HAVE NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE—KEEP IT!

Only one soap gives your skin this exciting Bouquet

It's so easy to possess this dainty allure . . . this lingering fragrance men love!

Bathe every day with Cashmere Bouquet Soap . . . and you'll surround yourself with a romantic fragrance! Yes, a captivating fragrance men love that comes only from a wedding of rare perfumes far more costly than you would expect to find in any soap! For 80 years popular girls everywhere have known this secret. Do as they do. Use Cashmere Bouquet Soap in your daily bath . . . and for your complexion, too!

Cashmere Bouquet

Cashmere Bouquet

Adorns your skin with the fragrance men love

"My name," she said, faintly smiling, "is Ursula."

He frowned. "You tell me that so often, Ursula." He paused. "It doesn't suit you," he told her.

"Nevertheless, it is my name. I really should like you to use it, William."

She stood up and lifted her arms toward him. This man had known nothing but struggle all his life. He had never had roots; this was the impulse behind his dynamic insistence upon success at any price, and money. It also made him dangerous. Perhaps if he knew himself loved and established firmly, it might still be well with him, and with her who had married him.

"William!" she cried. She ran to him, and threw her arms about him, holding him close. For several moments he stood rigidly in the circle of her arms. She cried, "My dear, my dear, it doesn't matter! Nothing matters!"

Now his arms were about her, holding her close.

"Ursula!" he said, his lips in her hair. "Ursula, Ursula!"

When Ursula awoke the place beside her was empty, but she heard William giving orders for breakfast. She rose and put on a white wool peignoir with black velvet ribbons. Calmly, without embarrassment, she went into the parlor.

William was completely dressed. He did not look at her directly as he said, "Breakfast will be here in a few minutes."

Ursula sat down on the crimson couch. Someone had brought him the morning paper and he rustled the sheets around him.

Finally he said, in a tone of satisfaction, "There is a long article here about our marriage."

"Is that important?" Ursula could not keep the acid from her words.

He dropped the paper to stare at her. "Of course it is."

"Why?"

"If we are going to live here, it is important that our existence is noticed."

"I never particularly wanted to live here," said Ursula. She was weary of this childish battle of words. She went to the window, pushed aside the draperies and looked down at the street below. "What am I going to do while you are away most of the day?"

"I thought that you might visit your friends."

"Good heavens, they certainly would not expect it of me!" She was amused.

"I don't intend to leave you today." Obviously he was embarrassed. "I thought, if it cleared, we might go for a drive. I'm sorry we couldn't get away for a trip. But perhaps you can read, or something, while I am away a few hours during these next few days."

It sounded absurd to her and she laughed. "Don't be concerned about me. I should have enjoyed a honeymoon. But it is only delayed." She waited. "I suppose we could call around and see Oliver?"

To her surprise, he replied, "No. Not for a day or two. I suppose Mrs. Templeton told you I have asked her to be our housekeeper when our home is built?"

"No!" cried Ursula in exasperation. "You didn't tell me, and she didn't! Really, William, should I not have been consulted? Why should we have a housekeeper? I am quite competent, I assure you. I presume there will be other servants besides Lucy, but I can manage them. A housekeeper! How ridiculous!"

He sat down heavily. "Ursula, I intend to have a large establishment, the best and most formal in the city. There are a few families here who have housekeepers. There are others who come here in the summer; they are not provincials. They have fine homes, conducted in the best style. I do not intend that they shall surpass me."

Ursula considered this. She had a moment of pleasure in contemplating the fact that William was richer than she had supposed. But she was still annoyed. She said, "Let us put aside the discussion of future grandeur for a little. Let us consider Mrs. Templeton. I have nothing against her, except that she and I would get on each other's nerves."

"I find her very capable and I have noticed that she can manage servants." William's tone was obdurate.

"You mean Lucy? Why, Lucy is a far better person than Mrs. Templeton. She understands children. She is much more intelligent than Mrs. Templeton."

THERE was a knock on the door, announcing breakfast. William rose to greet the two waiters. He said as the door opened, "Nevertheless, I want Mrs. Templeton to be our housekeeper."

Ursula kept her peace while the breakfast was being arranged on the table. William retained one of the waiters to serve them. It was done, she saw, to avoid further controversy with her. This amused her. He might not be a gentleman, but he knew she was a lady. She would not be contentious before servants.

She decided, however, to be perverse. He had not kissed her this morning; he had shown her no tenderness. He had arbitrarily thrust Mrs. Templeton upon her. She would punish him.

She sat down at the table, allowed herself to be served, and repeated, "Mrs. Templeton annoys me. If we have to have a housekeeper there must be someone else."

"Why discuss it just now?" asked William, giving his napkin an irritable flip. "Is that bacon crisp enough?"

"Of course. But I want to discuss Mrs. Templeton."

He looked up at her suddenly and she was startled. His rage was all out of proportion, she thought. It was not hatred because she was embarrassing him; it was a fury that she had dared to oppose him.

"I said"—he spoke quietly—"that we shall have Mrs. Templeton."

Ursula glanced at the waiter. "That will be all," she said. The man bowed, and left.

There was silence in the room. William ate his breakfast slowly and deliberately. Then he put down his knife and fork.

"I want you to know," he said, "that when I make up my mind I do not intend to be opposed."

Fear, anger, affront tightened Ursula's heart. But she spoke resolutely: "Don't speak to me like that, William. This is our first day of marriage. You have forgotten, I think. But this must be settled now. You must not speak to me as you have just now. I won't have it."

He said, "You have always had your own way. You are my wife now. I have no time to engage in domestic arguments with you. You must learn that I intend to have my way."

Ursula's finger tips pressed the tablecloth. She could not speak. Then, while she watched him, his expression changed. She did not know that her own face had startled him with its pallor and rigidity. He was not turned from his purpose, but still he was ashamed.

"You are thinking that I have no manners," he said. "Perhaps you are right." He paused. "I haven't forgotten that this is our

(Continued on Page 70)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

For Robert, Walking

By Marjorie Lederer Lee

Robert's on his feet at last;
All about the town
He darts and reels with drunken joy—
(He's up! . . . He's down.)

Touched by winds, bewitched he is,
Ecstatic as a pup!
The world awaits his bouncing step—
(He's down! . . . He's up!)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Everywhere—lovely hands agleam with this pure, pure, pure-luxury polish!

Beautiful NAIL BRILLIANCE BY CUTEX only 25¢ *

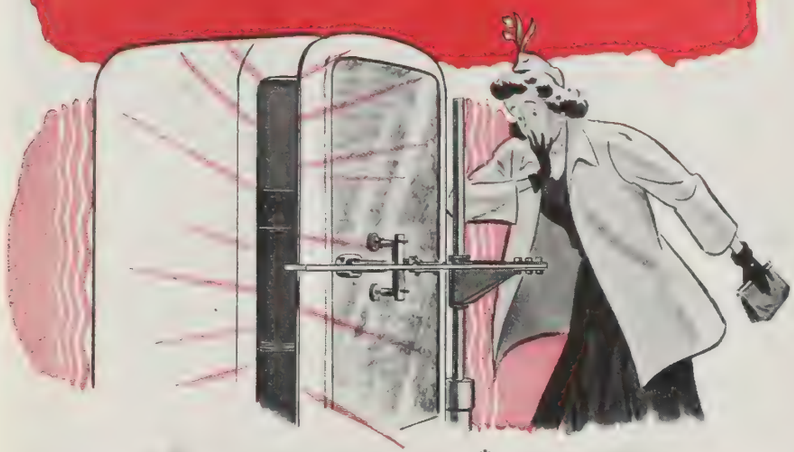
Talk about Brilliance (and smart women do), isn't this a brilliant idea?

A polish that's all luxury, from the top of its graceful "artist's" brush to the last long-wearing drop in the bottle. Yet the cost is a mere 25¢.



Never before, a polish with so many extras. Amazing wear. Beautiful "dressing table" bottle. Eleven alluring, fadeless shades, including new "Star Bright."

Never before, a polish so completely pure and harmless. Even women whose skins are allergic to other polishes tell us that they can safely use Nail Brilliance.

Now—lovelier lips, too! New Cutex Lipstick has everything you long for in a lipstick. Silk-satin texture! Clinging-vine cling! Colors to harmonize with those heavenly Nail Brilliance shades! Only 49¢* in the large size. Now—also in new "purse" size for 25¢.* *PLUS TAX but don't try it on yours...

TORTURE TEST for REFRIGERATORS

UNLESS IT HAS FIBERGLAS* INSULATION

(and, by the way, the better refrigerators have)

This is an actual demonstration that has been performed many times with standard refrigerators insulated with Fiberglas . . .

- A standard refrigerator door is faced with clear plastic so you can see the insulation . . .
- Slammed more than 150,000 times by a special door-slam machine . . .
- And the Fiberglas Insulation remains unaffected. Not the slightest sign of settling or breaking down.

To get the best buy in a refrigerator or freezer, remember this door-slamming demonstration . . . and remember Fiberglas.

Under vibration, which causes most materials to pack down, Fiberglas Insulation actually tends to fluff up and become more efficient. Age and moisture can't harm it, either. In any insulated appliance, Fiberglas Insulation gives you more for your money. That's why it is used today in the finest refrigerators, freezers, ranges and water heaters. Ask about it before you buy.

Fiberglas Insulation contributes to better food protection and lower operating cost because its extremely high insulating efficiency lasts for life.

OWENS-CORNING FIBERGLAS CORPORATION
Department 2101, Toledo 1, Ohio

OWENS-CORNING
FIBERGLAS
THERMAL INSULATION

*Fiberglas is the registered Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. of Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corporation for a variety of products made of or with glass fibers first morning together, Ursula. At least, I am remembering it now. Probably my manner to you has been unpardonable. Shall we forget it?"

(Continued from Page 68)

There was no humility in his voice, but she knew he was ashamed.

"Yes."

He smiled. "Then, won't you eat your breakfast? I'm sorry you don't like Mrs. Templeton. But I'm afraid that it's too late to make any other arrangement. I asked her the other day."

"I don't care about Mrs. Templeton," said Ursula, speaking through the pain that would not leave her throat.

He got up from his chair, came to her, and put his hand on her head. "Ursula, believe me, it won't happen again."

She reached up, touched his hand gently. A shaft of pale sunlight came into the room, lighting up the garish furnishings.

"We shall have our drive after all," said Ursula.

The rest of that week William was gone each morning until noon. Ursula felt some comfort in being lazy, even in the florid atmosphere of the hotel suite. She breakfasted alone; and late. She read and planned the furnishings of the new house. When William returned for luncheon, to spend the rest of the day with her, she greeted him with calm and tenderness. She saw he was grateful for this. In the afternoons they would drive through the country, return and have dinner served in their rooms. It was the hours after dinner that were the longest. She came to be glad that William, after the first few nights, opened his dispatch case and set to work over thick sheaves of paper. Then she could read, and watch him furtively over the top of her book, while only street noises could be heard, and the rustle of the papers.

Someone asked Thorvaldsen, the noted Danish sculptor: "Which is your greatest statue?"

He promptly replied, "The next one."

—DAVID T. ARMSTRONG.

When William showed Ursula the architect's plans for the new house she studied them with amazement and misgiving. The house would be the most imposing and enormous structure in Andersburg.

She said, "But why do you want such a huge house? A ballroom! None of our acquaintances have ballrooms. And here are two drawing rooms, each one tremendous. This reception hall is almost as large as the drawing rooms. And the dining room is too large. It would seat at least seventy-five people. Are we to have a hotel?" She took up another page of the plans, for the second floor. "Fourteen bedrooms, eight with dressing rooms. Linen closets to store enough linens for a hundred years. Then, on the third floor, six more bedrooms. How many servants are we to have?"

"About eight or ten," replied William.

Ursula gasped. "William, have you really decided upon such an enormous household? Have you counted the cost? Even if you have, why do we need it?"

His dark face tightened. "I told you that I intend to have the finest house in this part of the country. As for the cost, I assure you, I am well aware what I am doing." He studied her somberly. "Did you think I wished to build a cozy little cottage where you could potter about with a housemaid?"

Ursula had another frightful thought. "What about the furniture? When is it to be bought? Will you let me help choose it?"

He frowned, then said absently, "The furniture has already been ordered. I chose it a month ago in New York."

She cried with spirit, "But William, am I not to be consulted at all? I am to live in this house. I think this is most inconsiderate of you! I had thought of moving the best in my own house to our new one. How can I visualize it there if I have not seen the furniture you have bought?"

He folded his hands together. "I do not intend that you shall bring any of that furniture to my house," he said coldly.

"But why? You once said it was beautiful. Besides, it belonged to my parents, and they had taste!"

"It is not mine," he replied with brutality. He glanced at the clock on the mantelpiece. "It is almost eleven and I am tired. I must get up early." He rose and without glancing at her, left the room.

A few days later Lucy and Oliver returned to the hotel. Mrs. Templeton was to stay in her own home until the house on Schiller Road was completed. Ursula welcomed Lucy and Oliver with pleasure and relief. Now the days would not be so empty, the after-dinner hours so taut and filled with apprehension. William and Ursula began to be invited out to innumerable dinners and receptions. They were part of the community now. They were "settling down."

In June and July William made several business journeys, returning with an air of victory and satisfaction. She would listen to his reports with eager attention. But the lumber business remained always, for her, a complete mystery which she had no desire to penetrate or understand.

In August, the hotel suite began to oppress Ursula unbearably. The weather had become humid and hot. She longed for her garden with a passion that approached desperation. The house was up for sale. More than once Ursula went there on foot, to sit in the quiet rooms and wander in the garden. Once she found herself weeping uncontrollably in the small and charming parlor. She was shocked at her tears, and sternly reproached herself. It then occurred to her that she was pregnant.

She visited Doctor Banks, who assured her that her suspicions were correct. She returned to the hotel somberly. She felt no happiness, but, instead, a sudden upsurge of fear.

William was in Michigan. It had been Ursula's intention to tell him the news immediately after he returned. But he entered the suite looking so stern and abstracted that she decided to delay the telling for a while. She had expected to be ill during this period. But, to her surprise, she remained conspicuously well.

A day or so later when William suggested that they should drive out to see his sawmills, she consented at once. They set off, with John driving. William was in exceptionally good spirits and Ursula felt his elation and high confidence.

Four years before she had accompanied Alice Arnold on a visit to these mills, which had been the property of Alice's husband. Now, as the carriage approached and Ursula saw the mills again, she was astonished. The original buildings had become only the nucleus of a larger, much more imposing aggregation, all, apparently, having been built recently. Some were still unpainted, others in the process, still others had been finished.

Full of pride, William told John to halt the carriage a little distance away. "Well, what do you think of it all?"

Piers along the river were lined with flatboats and barges, some being filled by workmen with sawed lumber, others waiting for cargoes. Smoke was pouring from high smoke stacks and the deep throbbing of the steam-driven saws came from within the mills. The air was pungent with the smell of sap and rosin.

"Astounding!" Ursula exclaimed. "How much you have accomplished in a short time. Why, as I remember these mills, they were small and insignificant."

"We have made progress," admitted William, smiling. He looked with satisfaction at the huge sign, "The Prescott Lumber Company."

On one of the smaller buildings a workman was beginning to paint out the faded words, "The American Lumber Company." Below the painter stood a tall thin boy, leaning

(Continued on Page 72)

RICE KRISPIES...just one "star" in Kellogg's VARIETY PACKAGE!

Swing your "breakfast partner" out of Kellogg's VARIETY PACKAGE! What a choice of favorites—from 10 generous boxes, 7 different cereals. In nourishing wheat, rice, corn, soya. Crisply shredded, flaked or popped! ALL KELLOGG-FRESH! Picking your own better breakfast is packs of fun! And KELLOGG'S VARIETY is the favorite assortment, because...

More women choos

TO flatter AND thrill

Don't despair when good living runs high. Fostoria's inimitable American pattern solves everything in tableware. Each piece captures the brilliance of the fire that gave it birth . . . then moulded and finished by hand with that exquisite artistry which only skilled craftsmanship can control. And so astonishing! You get so much for so little. For gifts or for keeps, American is the most complete crystal available. Over 180 open-stock items are now available. You'll find American or many other equally lovely Fostoria patterns at the better stores everywhere.

FOSTORIA

FOSTORIA GLASS COMPANY · · · MOUNDSVILLE · WEST VIRGINIA

(Continued from Page 72)

Alice did not immediately speak. Then she said gently, "It was kind of Mr. Prescott to send me that check, Ursula. But, of course, it was not possible for me to accept it."

"William sent you money?" asked Ursula, in a stifled voice.

"Yes. You did not know?"

Ursula could only move her head in the negative.

"Please, then, do not tell him I told you."

Ursula shook her head wearily. "It will make me happy to know that you are here in this house, Alice. I hope you will let me visit you sometimes. It is my home; and no other place will ever be home to me."

She sat for a long time alone after Alice had gone.

The middle of December the Prescotts took possession of their new home. Ursula had carefully refrained from visiting the house during its construction. Everything was now complete, even to the six servants, whose hiring William had delegated to Mrs. Templeton. When William reproached Ursula for her lack of interest, she had pleaded her "condition." This was substantiated by Doctor Banks, who had recently expressed a faint concern about her.

Accordingly, she had great curiosity about the house as she accompanied William through each room. Nothing had been spared to make this a magnificent house. The vast reception hall had a floor of black and white marble, and marble paneling covered the walls. The shadowy ceiling had been painted in a muted garden scene. Yellow-glass candelabra, circled with many prisms, stood on the mantelpiece. A tremendous grandfather clock stood against one wall. As Ursula entered, the clock boomed out the stroke of two with so deep a note that mournful vibrations echoed for some moments.

"There," said John Quincy Adams, pointing to a bust of Washington, "there was a fool who made a great reputation by keeping his mouth shut." —A. G. GARDINER: The War Lords (E. P. Dutton & Co.).

Ursula and William entered the first of the drawing rooms. The walls were hung with rose satin damask. The incredibly high ceiling had been painted to resemble white marble, with black veins. Never had Ursula seen such mammoth furniture, such gigantic fireplaces.

Chairs covered with rose damask stood against the walls. Other chairs of turquoise and emerald were grouped around circular tables of mahogany. The floor had been covered with a huge rug of dull green. There was a fireplace at each end of the room, made of rosy marble surmounted by Venetian mirrors of an ornate design.

The second drawing room, by contrast, appeared delicate and restrained. But there was no escaping the rococo effect, for wine-red velvet draperies hung at the windows and rosy chairs mingled with the paler sofas. The Aubusson rug was excellent, even to Ursula's stunned eyes.

THE gold satin and antique white of the music room lifted her spirits for a moment. Yet the ivory piano managed to give a florid air to what otherwise might have passed as elegance and restraint.

By this time Ursula was completely oppressed. The inspection of the house acquired a nightmare quality. Slowly she mounted the marble staircase which rose from the reception hall to the upper regions. She visited guest rooms and dressing rooms, all furnished with a crass magnificence. William was to have his own bedroom and dressing room, and so was she.

She did look at her own apartment with more interest. William, remembering her tastes, had insisted that the decorations should be subdued here. The walls had been covered with a pale yellow satin. The curtains were of Cluny lace. A white marble fireplace had been installed, and a fine Aubusson covered the floor. The canopied bed dripped with delicate Brussels lace. A beautiful Venetian mirror hung over the dresser and a chaise longue in soft blue stood near a window. William had believed she would adore this room, and she turned to him almost passionately.

"It is beautiful!" she exclaimed. She caught his hand and held it. "It is the most delightful room in the whole house!"

William had begun to smile; but as he heard her last words he said coldly, "You have no high opinion of the others?"

A tremendous weariness flowed over Ursula. But she said, "You don't understand. I love this room because I can see that you planned it so carefully and chose what you knew I would like."

He was pacified. He said, "Almost everything you see was imported from France or Italy. There is a fortune in this house."

Ursula's thoughts had begun to spin. Yes, a fortune was in this house. Was it a mortgaged fortune? She had no way of knowing, and she dared not ask. As if in a dream, she saw Mrs. Templeton in the doorway. Suddenly Mrs. Templeton loomed beside her. She heard her voice and William's from a distance. She did not remember much after that, but when she opened her eyes again she was in the bed with the Brussels-lace canopy.

DOCTOR BANKS was disturbed. He said that Ursula must remain in bed for at least ten days. She had overtired herself. The excitement of moving to her new home had been too much for her and she had almost miscarried. Thankfully, Ursula lay in her bed until Christmas, attended by Mrs. Templeton, who depressed her but who nearly won her regard by her devotion. On Christmas Eve she was allowed to go downstairs.

By the end of January Doctor Banks was forced to consider twins. William, informed of this, was delighted. February found Ursula lethargic and ill. Not even little Oliver could draw her long from an apathetic seclusion. Lucy sat beside her bed, when Oliver slept, sturdily knitting or sewing. William spent as much time with her as he could. She wanted him desperately these days. They could hold no conversation together which interested either. His world and hers lay inexorably apart. But she loved him, and never so intensely as now. It was comfort and strength to have him beside her.

There was no doubt in William's mind that the children would be boys. "I want them to have the names of Doctor Cowlesbury," he said. "Matthew and Thomas Cowlesbury Prescott."

On the twenty-ninth of March the children were born, and as William had predicted, they were boys. They were fraternal, not identical twins. The one to be christened Matthew was delicately formed, with a light fluff of hair and slender face. Thomas was sturdier and shorter, with reddish hair.

William's pride reached a peak of stern frenzy, and Ursula, from her pillows, smiled weakly at him. She had begun to love her children. She decided, however, that Matthew would probably be her favorite. He reminded her of her father.

Now began for her, for a few weeks, a time of real happiness. William approved of her enormously. The children were good, Lucy reported. They were lovely children. Admiring visitors came and went. The christening was an important event in the city. Gifts heaped the tables everywhere.

It was not until the middle of the summer that she became aware suddenly that William was not displaying his former interest in Oliver, and that he sometimes admonished the child harshly for playing too noisily in the hall outside the nursery where his sons lay. On these occasions Oliver would become completely silent, following his foster father with a long, slow glance.

The knowledge came to Ursula with the force of a blow. There was no use telling William that he was being cruel and obtuse. For William would not believe that he had changed. Nevertheless, it was true. At times he displayed an irrational irritation against

(Continued on Page 76)

Choose a Tōwle pattern and you'll love it forever

You can let your heart go and pick your pattern impulsively or you can lead with your head and reason out the decision. Either way your choice will last all your life because Towle patterns are such a rare combination of beauty, experience and utility that they weather the storms of all moods and the wind-changes of fashion. Towle Sterling will always bring prestige to your home, beauty to your table and pride to your heart.

Towle creates in solid silver only; yet, for all its beauty, Towle Sterling is not expensive, and is a fine and wise investment.

TŌWLE
STERLING

There's a Towle pattern that's perfect for you

Read these letters—

Dear Sirs:

I am using your new Swans Down Instant Cake Mix for all my cakes these days, and I want to say it is "the" finest product of its kind on the market today. It is definitely a "homemade" cake in a package.

MRS. DELBERT BOOSTROM,
Victoria, Ill.

That "homemade" quality in Swans Down Instant Cake Mix comes from using ingredients as fine as you'd use yourself, Mrs. Boostrom. Egg whites that taste farm-fresh, prepared by an exclusive process. Long-keeping, all-vegetable shortening. Delicate, home-type flavoring. And most important of all, Swans Down Cake Flour.

Dear Sirs:

I just felt I should write you a note to tell you how much I like your Swans Down Instant Cake Mix.

I had used two boxes and baked a big cake to take to a reunion. Everyone raved about my wonderful cake, and a lot of women came to me for the recipe. It sure didn't take me long, as I said to them, "Just go to the store and buy two boxes of Swans Down Instant Cake Mix."

MRS. GLENN B. BARNER, Lemoyne, Pa.

We hope, Mrs. Barner, that your friends won't all start using two boxes at a time. We have a hard time keeping stores stocked!

Dear Sirs:

I am a mother with two children and one is just a baby. So you see, it's hard to make cakes the old way, as it takes away valuable time. But now it's 1-2-3 and you have a cake, and I must say it's even better than one can make herself.

MRS. JOHN YANUZZI,
Cleveland, O.

When you say it beats your own, Mrs. Yanuzzi, you're in good company—a lot of prize-winning cakemakers say the same.

Were there ever such raves about a mix?

1 box Swans Down Instant Cake Mix
1 cup milk

For glorious white cake, add ½ cup milk to contents of box, blend, beat 1 minute. Add remaining milk, beat 2 minutes. Bake, following package directions. For other delicious variations, see recipes in box.

• The only cake mix made with Swans Down Cake Flour

Swans Down Instant Cake Mix

Product of General Foods

(Continued from Page 74)

Oliver, and called for Lucy to take him away. There were days when he did not even inquire about the boy.

Lucy had married John in October, and they occupied rooms on the third floor. There Oliver would play, and sometimes sleep. Now Mrs. Templeton began to see what was happening. She reprimanded Oliver with severity, even in Ursula's presence, and it was only when Ursula angrily expressed indignation that she became silent, or apologized.

William did not appear concerned. He approved of Mrs. Templeton's discipline and said that Oliver was sorely in need of it.

John opened the carriage door for Ursula and Oliver before the old house on Beechwood Road. "Meet me here in about an hour," said Ursula, and he nodded. It was an old formula, this monthly visit on a Sunday afternoon. Did William know of it? Ursula had become certain he did, and that, in his obscure way of thinking, it pleased him, just as he had been impelled to send money to Alice Arnold after her husband's death. Ursula had developed a strong intuition of her own; through this intuition, quite devoid of logic and reason, she could understand her husband. It was only when she attempted to analyze him that she became baffled. He was as irrational as a storm, and in his way as powerful and devastating.

The day was brilliant and cool, the last Sunday of October. Scents of burning wood, of apples, of drying grass and spicy leaves filled the cold, sharp air. Ursula's cloak blew about her; she had to bend her head against the skirling wind.

Oliver, at six, considered himself almost a man, and sworn to protection of his mother. He held her elbow firmly; he was a tall boy, reaching almost to her shoulder. Solicitously he watched every movement of her heavy body. Ursula had already informed him that within another four months he would have another brother or sister besides Thomas, Matthew and Julia. Oliver had accepted this with his customary gentle gravity. But he knew that Thomas and Matthew did not know as yet. After all, they were only four, while he was approaching seven. As for Julia, she was hardly more than a baby, still toddling about in the imperious bad temper of her twenty-four months of life. Oliver had already learned that he was of but not in the Prescott family circle, in so far as William and the servants were concerned; that only Ursula accepted him as a beloved son.

Ursula paused a moment before the house, and looked up at its green shutters and shining windows. She said, "Yes, it's my home." Tears smarted in her eyes as she mounted the steps and lifted the knocker.

ALICE ARNOLD, in her neat black bombazine, a trifle rusty at the seams, opened the door for them and said, "I have been watching for you. I have made your favorite tarts, Ursula. With plums from your own tree."

Ursula sat down and the tenseness in her tired body relaxed. Oliver sat near her on a footstool. He looked with pleasure at the shining tea things glimmering in the firelight.

"It is the nursemaid's Sunday off, and the twins were a little obstreperous," said Ursula, removing her gloves. "At least Tommy was"

Twice, in the past year, Ursula had brough her boys to this house, but the last occasio had not been a pleasant one. Matthew h sat solemnly in a corner and whimpere Thomas had raced about, behaving like t spoiled and demanding child he was.

"How are the children?" asked Alic beginning to pour the tea.

"They are very well," said Ursula. Th was not quite true. Thomas and Julia we invariably in the best of health, but Ma thew was less robust. He was thin and pal and too quiet and solitary. She adde "Matthew has been a little feverish with cold. He is better, however. And how a you and Eugene?"

"I AM always well," answered Alice, lo ing at her friend and smiling. There was c siderable gray weaving its way now throu her fine light hair, and she was more slenc than ever. "As for Eugene," she went on," he is the same. He is working at his lesso today, though I have urged him to go o for a bit into this wonderful weather. He quite relentless about his schoolwor

"He finishes in t spring, doesn't h Will he go on to university?"

Alice gave Olive glass of milk, and fered him the ta She waited until child had accep both before she s "I have talked to about a univers He says he prefers to go." Alice put her hand and so brushed her fin over Oliver's h "Would you like see the garden, de It is beautiful now."

Oliver went at o to Ursula, to help rise, and they all w through Ursula's s ing kitchen. The per and brass, the floor and the w all gleamed. Ur looked about her w nostalgia. Then t stepped into the den.

She had scarcely lieved it when A had assured her, y ago, that Eugene a devoted gardener. But she had become vinced. Never, even in her most industr days, had her garden looked so beautiful. a weed marred the smoothness of the g though it was the time of falling le hardly a leaf cluttered a hedge or the fla walk. At the end of the garden, the wall was almost entirely covered by clim vines, brilliant as red fire. A bed of zin and asters, cannas and salvias flamed ag the green grass; the apple tree near the was rich with crimson fruit. A breeze through the garden, languorous with late and the smell of burning leaves.

A door opened and closed and Eugen peared. He was almost a man now, seventeen, tall, moving quickly. He Alice's lean elegance, but it was a hard gance. And his eyes, though he smiled litely, expressed nothing at all. He was sidered handsome by many people, de his colorlessness, for his manners were cellent. He greeted Ursula with dignity

She wanted to leave; she did not talking to Eugene. She took Oliver's hand; it was warm, and had a reass strength of its own. "I hear very good re about you, Gene," she said. "Will you b ing to the university in another y

"I have not made up my mind."

"I think you should. You would d guish yourself, I'm sure."

They all walked along the path towar street.

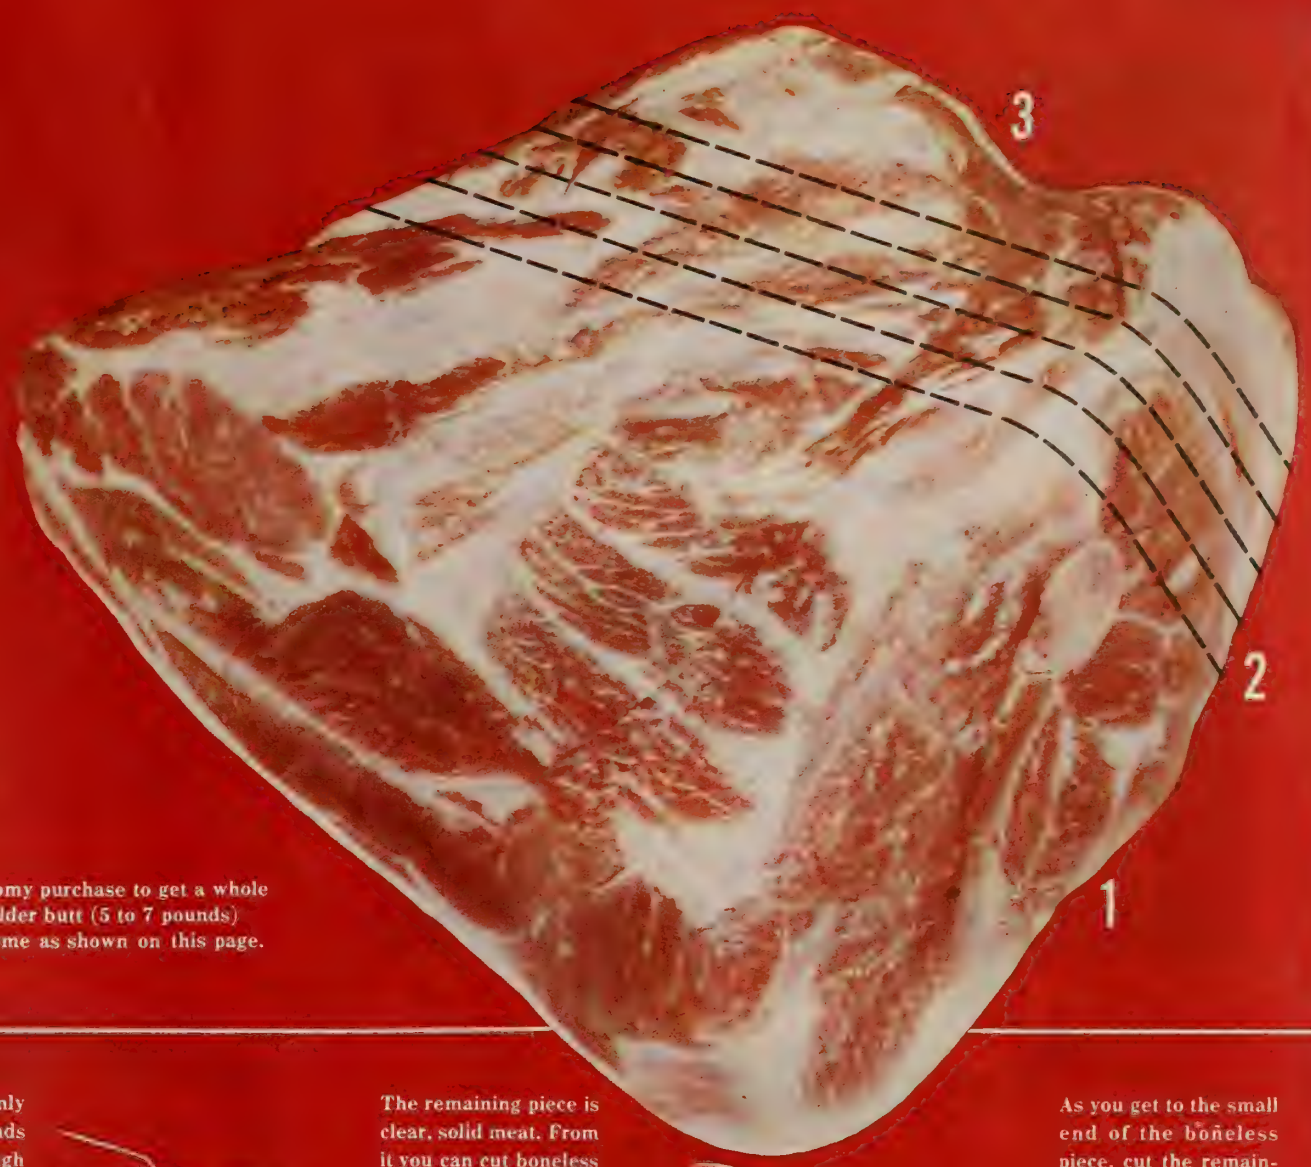
(Continued on Page 78)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Games

By Elizabeth McFarland

Love in her summer bodice comes
Between the dusk and cricket thrums,
Her firefly eyes alive with light
And her hair as rich and dark as night.



She leans at ease on the sun-warmed sill,
Calling us home to our childhood's hill,
To the barefoot lane and the bent-pin creek—
Leapfrog, King's Choice, Hide-and-Seek.

Like moths in our moon-bleached frocks we ran,
Shouting with joy when we Kicked-the-Can.
Love, after summer who wins the race?
Red Light, All Out, Prisoner's Base.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

the Meat page

how to make three fresh-cooked meals from one pork butt

It's a real economy purchase to get a whole fresh pork shoulder butt (5 to 7 pounds) and cut it at home as shown on this page.

A pork butt has only one bone. It extends only part way through the piece. Cut with a sharp knife, as shown in diagram, to divide easily into two pieces.

The piece with the bone is your smaller, one-meal roast.

The remaining piece is clear, solid meat. From it you can cut boneless steaks about one-half inch thick.

Braise your pork steaks just as you would pork chops. Make a panful of gravy with the drippings.

As you get to the small end of the boneless piece, cut the remaining meat into small half-inch cubes.

Use your diced pork for a meat-stretching dish of chop suey or, if you prefer, a casserole of corn and pork.

1 Roast Pork

2 Pork Steaks

3 Chop Suey

There is thrift in the use of meat as well as in the buying. Any cut of meat, of course, offers complete, high-quality protein—the kind children need to grow on, we all need to "go" on. But ideas like those above can help you spread nourishing meat and that good meat flavor through more meals of the week . . . appetizingly and thriftily.

P. S. Illustrated booklet, showing 52 "thrifty use" ideas like this, yours for 5c in coin sent to Dept. H-53, Chicago 77.

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

This Seal means that all nutritional statements made in this advertisement are acceptable to the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE Headquarters, Chicago • Members throughout the U. S.

(Continued from Page 76)

Ursula put out a hand to Alice. "I must really go now. It is getting quite late."

Alice Arnold took her hand. "Eugene will go with you," she said.

"Oh, no! Oliver will take care of me, won't you, love?" Ursula looked down at the child, who was holding her arm tightly.

Eugene smiled, but did not add his own urging to his mother's.

The carriage was now rolling down Schiller Road. It was amazing how this lonely and barren stretch had taken on beauty and richness during the past five years. William had been right: This section was considered the most desirable in the whole Andersburg area. William had made his profits from this land. What had been desolation, forlorn hovels and ruined barns, had taken on dignity and opulence. In the midst of it stood the Prescott mansion in a fifteen-acre park. The stone wall surrounding it permitted a view of green lawns, arbors, summerhouses, hedges and ponds. Nothing, however, could add loveliness to the huge house, despite the ivy which had been trained to climb over it, and the evergreens which surrounded it. It might be impressive, but it was hideous to Ursula.

The gates opened and the carriage approached the porte-cochere. John leaped down to assist his mistress from the carriage and she and Oliver entered the tremendous reception hall.

William, of course, was in the nursery. It was Lucy's afternoon and evening off. The lights would be low; a fire would be burning on the hearth. Julia would be seated on William's knee; Miss Andrews, the governess, and Mrs. Templeton would be lurking respectfully in the background, and a maid would be laying the nursery tea. The boys would be on the floor at William's feet, listening to his tales, which had been laboriously learned.

Three rooms had been thrown together to make the nursery. Ursula had objected to this. The Prescotts had frequent and important visitors, and she felt that they should have the most impressive rooms. When Jay Regan, of New York, had visited them, William had relinquished his own bedroom rather than disturb the children. Ah, nothing must disturb the children! Ursula frequently shuddered at the memory of formal dinners disrupted by overturned milk glasses, shriekings, roars for attention from servants, impudence, cries and weeping.

"It is good for children to learn how to behave themselves in adult company," William had said angrily when she had suggested that the place for the children was the nursery when entertainment was under way. "Mr. Regan was very much entertained by them. He told me so."

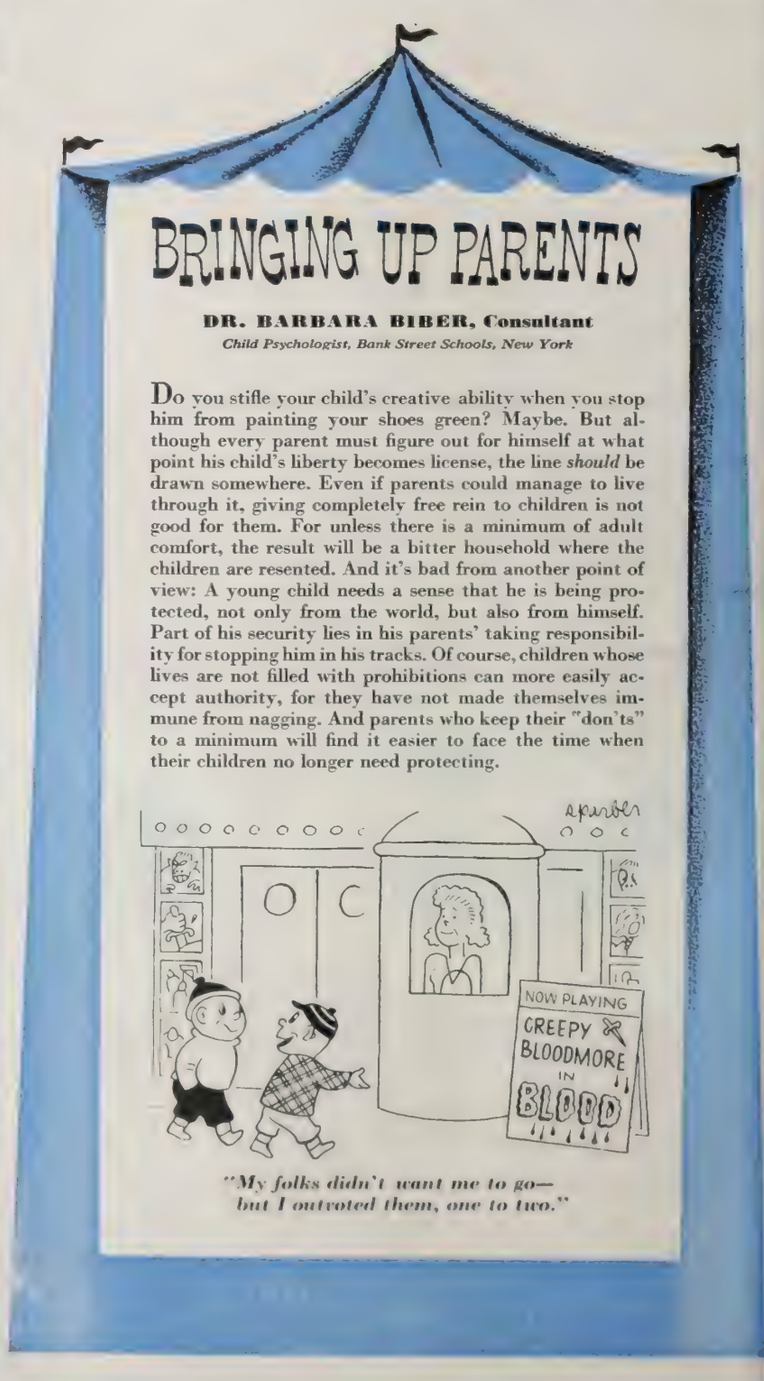
"Mr. Regan is a gentleman," said Ursula. "But it is my opinion that he considered this a madhouse."

Set No. 3462/5. Table size 34x62" extended; 34x50" closed. Colors: Table—white or canary. Chairs—seats and backs richly upholstered in canary, red or black; seat and back panels in gleaming white Arvinite

New "Miracle" Leaf... Exclusive Arvin Features

New "Miracle" Slide-Away Extension Leaf

Completely concealed, yet ready for instant use. Automatically stored just below the table top. Operates so easily that a child can raise or lower it with one hand from either side. The most convenient table-leaf ever developed. (Patent applied for).



Long-life Arvinite finish... richly upholstered chairs... superb modern styling

You'll marvel at every outstanding feature of this De Luxe Arvin Dinette Set—for it combines the very latest in smart modern styling with the utmost in practical convenience. The "Miracle" Slide-Away Leaf saves space, time and effort, and when slipped into place your table serves eight! The new long-life Arvinite finish, another Arvin "first", holds a lovely lustre and resists chipping, cracking, acids, alcohol and boiling water. The chairs are a revelation in greater comfort, with their richly upholstered seats and form-fitting backs, easily removable for different color combinations, and covered with scuff-proof Vinyl fabric. The exquisitely designed semi-oval table that provides extra knee and leg room, the beautiful colors, the brilliant lustre of chrome-plated legs and trim, together with sturdy, first quality construction throughout, will make you forever glad you chose an Arvin!

ARVIN
Metal Chrome-Plated DINETTE SETS with the Miracle Leaf

NOBLITT-SPARKS INDUSTRIES, INC.
Columbus, Indiana

Arvin Metal Chrome-Plated Dinette Sets • Metal Outdoor Furniture • All-Metal Ironing Table

She knows—her plumber proved it to her—that Sani-Flush can't harm any septic tank system. So she uses Sani-Flush to clean the toilet bowl—no messy scrubbing. Quick, easy, sanitary. Would you like to see the proof? Write for "Report of Scientific Tests."

Effective in hard or soft water. Sold everywhere. Two sizes. The Hygienic Products Company, Dep't 10, Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

CLEANS TOILET BOWLS FAST

EXTRA PAY DAY can be yours each week. Thousands of men and women earn up to $1.50 an hour by accepting subscriptions to Curtis Publications. Write for our big commission offer. CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 203 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

WONDERFUL Ideas

TO HELP YOU BUILD—REMODEL BEAUTIFULLY AT LOW COST!

How to build faster—have modern crackproof dry-built walls—full walls—without plastering! How to re-cover cracked ceilings in a few hours without dirt, muss or fuss! How to give your bathroom or kitchen an inspiring tile treatment at a big saving. A total of 79 perfectly thrilling ideas you can carry out with lovely low cost Upson Panels.

Send for fascinating booklet! 32 pages. Room interiors in full color. Arrangments by leading decorators. Sent postpaid—25c.

UPSON PANELS

THE UPSON COMPANY
334 Upson Point, Lockport, N. Y.

I enclose 25c for booklet, "New Interiors For Old." I am interested in ( ) modernizing bath or kitchen ( ) building a home ( ) re-covering cracked plaster.

Name_____

Street_____

City _____ State

William had flushed darkly at this. "You do not seem to understand that children are more important than their elders."

"Mr. Regan does not think so. Neither does anyone with any sense at all."

But these exchanges were infrequent. Ursula had learned not to quarrel with her husband. It was useless to point out to William that other parents kept very young children decently secluded in nurseries, where they could not annoy visitors. It was even more useless to inform him that his sons and his very small daughter were beginning to display toward him a certain contempt and disregard, and, to their mother, a resentment bordering on childish hatred, because of her attempts to control them in the face of their father's indulgence.

The nursemaids occupied adjoining rooms to the nursery. William paid the highest wages, but in spite of this nursemaids came and went with monotonous regularity. Ursula did not blame them. The children, who should have been the delight and happiness of the household, had made of this magnificent house a place of quarreling and unhappiness and tension.

URSULA, as a sensible woman, had attempted to salvage what she could from the fiasco of her marriage. She proposed small journeys for herself and her husband. Very rarely, he agreed. But when they were alone in some luxurious hotel in Washington, Chicago or New York, she was aware of his restlessness. They had nothing to say to each other. There were moments, however, when he looked at her and his small hard eyes softened involuntarily. These moments were few. But she cherished them. She remembered them when he informed her, usually on the second or third day, that he was lonely for the children, and wished to return home.

A less intelligent woman would have come to resent the children who had deprived her of her husband and ruined her marriage. But Ursula was too intelligent for this. If William was destroying her happiness, he was also destroying his children. She had many sleepless nights when she stared at the shadowy corners of the room and wept for her children. What was to become of them? What would be their future, so undisciplined, so bad-tempered, so greedy?

Ursula had need of all the patience and calmness she could command. When she was well, it was not too hard. When she was pregnant and weary, as she was now, it was almost more than she could bear. Sighing, and accompanied by Oliver, she entered the nursery.

Everything was exactly as she had expected. The large and beautiful playroom was dusky, full of firelight. Near the hearth sat William, Julia upon his knee, Thomas surlily tearing apart a toy at his feet. Matthew sat by the darkening window. A nursemaid was laying tea on a table. Near by sat Miss Andrews and Mrs. Templeton.

Ursula exclaimed, "Dear me, how dark it is in here! Sally, please light a lamp or two. How are you, William? Tommie, look what you are doing to your lovely jack-in-the-box, and papa only just bought it for you. Matthew, why are you sitting alone at the window?" She did not wait for a reply, but went on cheerfully, "Oliver and I have just returned from visiting Alice. A delightful day for driving."

"You are late," said William. But his tone was not accusing. "I decided to have tea about an hour ago."

Her smile remained unchanging. "I am sorry. I did not realize it was late. I can have a tray in my room."

But William was staring at Oliver. The boy went to him without hesitation. "Good evening, papa." He smiled at William, and touched his shoulder lightly.

"Good evening," replied William shortly. "I gave you a gold watch for your birthday, Oliver. Surely you could have taken note of the time. You and your mother are nearly an hour late. You ought to have reminded her."

Ursula sat down. "It was my fault, William. We went into the garden with Alice, and talked too long."

(Continued on Page 81)

Peg paid too much for window cleaners
She bought at the store

Until she found that WINDEX SPRAY
Cost 15¢—no more!

It gets her windows sparkling clean!
Her mirrors shine like new!

You spray it on—you wipe it off—
That's all you have to do!

WINDEX leaves no oily film,
It never has to dry!

It's made especially for glass!
There is no better buy!

So why pay out four times the price
(It's much too much to pay!)

When nothing could be finer than That handy WINDEX SPRAY!

Copr. 1949, by The Drackett Co.

Why pay high prices for window cleaners? Windex is only 15¢! And nothing beats it for cleaning glass because it's made especially for glass! Windex leaves no oily, waxy film, no streaks, no dust. Insist on Windex every time!

Get Brighter Windows Quicker with—

WINDEX® Spray

Costs only 15¢—even thriftier in the big 20-ounce size.

The "Fresh Up" Family Drink!

So pure.. So good..
So wholesome!

Copyright 1949 by The Seven-Up Co.

(Continued from Page 79)

At this moment, Julia kicked furiously at Oliver's knee. "Go 'way!" she screamed.

"Hush, love," said William tenderly to his little daughter, and stroked her head. "You must not talk that way to your brother."

Julia screamed again, writhing on her father's knee. She turned her small, pretty head and bit his hand.

Ursula sprang to her feet. "Julie! You dreadful child! Nancy, take her away immediately." Ursula went as quickly as her heavy body would permit to William, and caught his hand. The teeth marks were deep and reddened, and one was beginning to bleed. Apparently William was astounded.

Julia screamed louder and ran, howling, to Mrs. Templeton. The housekeeper did not know what to do. She stood helplessly while Julie tugged at her skirts. Miss Andrews had also risen. Neither woman touched the shrieking child, who turned in fury from one to the other.

Then William snatched his hand from Ursula. His face, so deeply lined though he was not yet forty, flushed an unpleasant crimson. "Why make such a fuss? Julie is only a baby. She does not understand."

But Ursula, seeing only the torn and bleeding hand, was not to be quelled. She went to Julia and slapped the child strongly on the cheek. "Nancy," she said, "take Julie away at once and put her to bed. She can have her tea alone. No, Mrs. Templeton, do not touch the child, nor you, Miss Andrews."

The maid, carefully avoiding looking at William, picked up Julia, who screamed and struggled. Her sturdy feet flung themselves out spasmodically and vindictively. Ursula caught one of them and administered another sound slap on the child's thigh. Julie subsided instantly, then burst into sobs.

"Take her away, Nancy!" Ursula's voice was firm. But Nancy was already scuttling from the room. The door closed behind her and the squalling child.

William could not speak, though his cheek twitched. He was remembering that Ursula was pregnant. After a moment he said hoarsely, "How dared you strike that child? You know it is against my orders."

"Your orders!" exclaimed Ursula. She had won a victory. She would not be able to hold it, but she had won it for a little while. She was not a woman to plead illness or incapacity in order to get her way. But she did it now. She put her hand suddenly to her side.

William saw the gesture. His rage was still high, but he was frightened. "Ursula, sit down at once. Mrs. Templeton, bring a cup of tea for Mrs. Prescott."

URSULA accepted the tea, but she could not stop the trembling of her hands. To her amazement, William awkwardly held the tea for her. She looked at him, and her eyes filled with tears. Her chest ached suddenly and fiercely. A tear slid down her cheek.

"William," she whispered, "let us go into my room."

"Drink your tea," said William sternly. But there was a kind of helplessness in the gesture with which he touched his temple.

Ursula obediently drank the tea, slowly. She was not really hysterical, nor had her sudden loss of self-control been more than a flare. Calmness returned to her. She stood up and said to her husband, "William, I am going to my room and I want to talk to you. It is important."

In her own apartment, Ursula excused herself and went into her dressing room, where she changed her dress for a light silk robe of lavender. She applied firm palms to her wings of russet hair, made herself as still as possible, then went into her bedroom. William was standing at the window, looking down at the garden below. He had not heard her enter.

"Please sit down, William," she said.

He did not accept her invitation immediately. They stood and looked at each other in silence, and the thing that always sprang up between them sprang up again, armed and watchful, dividing them. Then he sat down heavily in a finely carved chair covered with damask, and she sat opposite him, crossing her ankles neatly, folding her hands in her lap.

"WILLIAM," she said, "I think we should speak honestly to each other. I suspect there is something wrong in your affairs. I think I have the right to know."

"My 'affairs'!" he exclaimed. "What can you know of my 'affairs'? Is there something you need which I have denied you? What do you mean?"

Ursula was silent a moment. Then she said, "Perhaps I have no reason for my uneasiness. But our way of living is becoming even more opulent. I was brought up to despise waste or extravagance. I do not know whether all this," and she gestured briefly, "is 'waste' or 'extravagance.' I have never known anyone who lived as we do. But I wonder if we need so many servants. Why a nursemaid, when we have Lucy? She is capable of taking care of Julie and Tom and Matthew. Indeed, she often complains that she has so little to do."

He waited until she had finished. Then he said: "This is miserliness. I have told you, over and over, that I can afford what we have. Why do you try to undermine me at every step? It is hard enough to maintain my place in this community, but it is harder still to have a wife who has no faith in me."

Ursula sighed. "Well, then, I can only ask you to forgive me if I have offended you. After all, I cannot rid myself of the habits of a lifetime."

Whenever she apologized like this, it only excited him the more. He did not accept apologies with gratitude; to him, they were breaches through which he could carry a victorious attack. He exclaimed, "You resent our children having the best I can give them. You'd prefer them to suffer privation, no doubt, for the good of their characters!"

Goaded, in spite of herself, Ursula replied, "Something should be done for their characters!"

"Oh, I understand! If it were left to you, they'd live on bread and water and live in a garret. It never occurs to you that we owe our children everything, because they did not ask to be born."

Ursula sighed. "We shall never agree about our children. But I want you to know, William, that my children are less important to me than you are. That is why I asked you to come here tonight. I had to tell you that I can't stand by and watch Tom and Matthew speak to you so contemptuously. If they have no respect for you now, how will they regard you when they are older?"

"The children don't have contempt for me. That is only your jealousy speaking. They are cold to you because you don't understand them. You resort to discipline because you have no imagination."

She turned to him quickly. "What nonsense you are talking! Did you see Julie's face tonight when she bit you, William? I am not blaming Julie; I blame you. If she is an arrogant little animal, it is your fault. And you've made Tom quarrelsome, without the slightest consideration for anyone but himself. And by indulging Matthew in everything, you have robbed him of interest in anything. You are ruining my children."

William flushed. "You accuse the children because you don't like them. You don't understand children."

"I am not blinded by sentimentality. Children are not a special species apart from the human race. They are only people. My children's lives are chaotic. And you are the cause of it. For instance, the boys should be in Sunday school. They are going on five.

WITH THE CHILDREN

"Goody, you're humming; that means we can do extra things."

"Did you watch grandma all the time you were growing up? You did? Well, why aren't you as nice as she is all the time?"

—KATHRYN COFFEY GLENNON.

The Smartest Floors are Pabco...

You know how a beautiful new dress lifts a woman's spirits! Now see how Pabco Floors—in America's Most Desired Colors—magically and inexpensively transform ordinary rooms into beauties!

Choose either Pabco Linoleum or Printed Floor Covering—and you get the colors voted loveliest by the thousands of women who comprise Pabco's nation-wide board of style advisors!

Outstanding floor-beauty plus Pabco long wear and easy-cleaning!*

Luxurious Pabco Linoleums (Pattern No. 9520, above) are Soil-Sealed to resist dirt. Pabco Printed Floor Coverings—in rugs (No. 9831, below) and wall-to-wall styles—have the famous "Stainless Sheen" surface.

Yours! Send ten cents in coin for "Decorate with Pabco"—sixteen full-color pages of ideas—to Dept. 219L, nearest office below.

Doubly Easy With Pabco Linoleum Cleaner and Pabco Self-Polishing Floor Wax*

THE PARAFFINE COMPANIES, INC. • New York 16 • Chicago 54 • San Francisco 19

Pabco Inlaid Linoleums and Printed Floor Coverings

Styled in California .... Approved by all America!

Oh, I know your arguments—that religion is superstition! But it does have a restraining and comforting influence upon children. We have no right to deny our children this influence, which may, at some later time, give them consolation and hope."

"I am not going to have my children's minds polluted by any superstitions. They are going to be free individuals. Anything else is hypocrisy, and dangerous. You shall not make weaklings of my children, with your 'form' and your discipline."

Ursula sighed. "It is not I who am making our children weak. It is you. You are not preparing them for life. When they encounter it, it will destroy them, for they will be too weak to fight."

He said again, "You dislike our children. You care for none of them, except Oliver."

She turned to him incredulously. "How can you say that? I love them! That is why I am afraid for them. Oliver? Yes, of course I love Oliver too. William, why are you so antagonistic to Oliver? You hardly give him a word and you used to adore him. Why?"

Again he was furiously excited. "I never distinguished between him and my own sons. But I have noticed that he avoids me. Young as he is, he is ungrateful. He is not too much older than the other boys, but he scarcely notices them. He is indifferent. And you are the cause of that. You have turned him against me."

The accusation was so absurd that Ursula could not answer. She sat down and closed her eyes wearily. They had talked so much, but William had not understood a word she had said. It was no use.

She heard the bedroom door close behind her husband, but she did not open her eyes. Depression weighed her down. She was not given to crying, but now the tears ran down her cheeks. They were not tears for her children, or even for Oliver. They were for William.

(To be Continued)

MY YEAR OF DECISION

(Continued from Page 45)

and the school band, will travel to Mexico City for a Saturday-afternoon international match. Boy and girl students are allowed to hold hands while walking through the halls, sit together in the cafeteria if they wish (though no one ever does) and go through the usual high-school motions of falling in and out of love. Personal lives are left private unless a special student seems to need help, but discipline in regard to studies and conduct in school is strict.

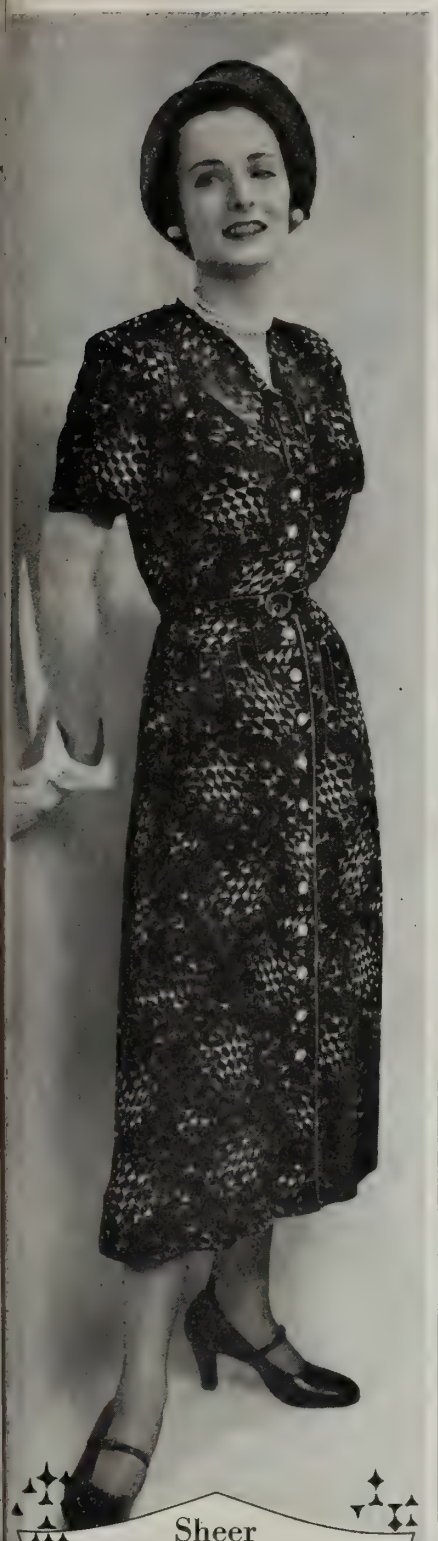
Principal G. L. Ashburn, who took over as principal in the new building 21 years ago, is a weather-beaten, gray-haired man who is almost paradoxically loved and feared. In the school Annual he is affectionately called "Pop" Ashburn (he once served as a football coach in his early teaching career), but when he is acting as disciplinarian and principal of his school, no student will take a visit to his office lightly.

With the largest percentage-enrollment R.O.T.C. unit in any high school in the country, the Woodrow Wilson boys switch to plaid shirts and blue jeans on Friday, but wear Government-provided khaki uniforms and maintain military discipline and courtesy the four other days of the school week. (The 2 or 3 per cent of the male student body who are not R.O.T.C., from preference, or because they have been dropped for poor grades, insubordination or other reasons, are dubbed "gangsters" by the other students because "they can wear flashy clothes every day of the week.") During lunch hour, R.O.T.C. officers are posted at the front doors of the school to check student permits for leaving the school during those hours (students are required to eat lunch in four shifts in the school cafeteria); a careful file of parents' signatures is kept in the dean's office to check against written absentee excuses; and minor offenses such as chronic tardiness, suspected smoking in the girls' washrooms or talking in class are punished by half-hour detention periods in the study hall after school.

More serious breakings of school rules are handled by Mr. Ashburn as he sees fit. A flash-fire epidemic of students writing "Sam Spade ♠" on the blackboards of empty classrooms was simply overlooked; once an overgrown, trouble-making sophomore was "sentenced" to report to the coach for football practice and later carried the ball for a twenty-yard winning touchdown in a game against Waco; and recently a junior boy who tried to organize a student walkout to get a juke box installed in the cafeteria spent a half hour in the principal's washroom scrubbing out the ink-written motto, "Arise, comrades, revolt!" and went back to class with a wet shirt.

At school, Cynthia Barnes has never been a teachers' problem. A brother and sister, both now married and living in Dallas, went to Woodrow Wilson before her. Teachers who knew Janette and Robert and their parents just expect good grades and good behavior from "little Cynthia." She takes her schoolwork seriously, and last year went to summer school to take a special course in automobile driving and geometry, always her weakest subject, so she would have less worry and more time for extracurricular activities in her senior year. In junior year, however, Cynthia—who has an appealing Jean Arthurish kind of voice—was almost expelled from biology class for talking. "The teacher told me that if I didn't stop talking in class she'd send me to Mr. Ashburn or else get me taken off the Annual staff," she explained. "That made me nervous or something and I just talked all the more!"

Independent, strong-willed and with a small but sudden temper (she gets particularly angry when her fourteen-year-old brother, Don, sits in the chair she usually studies in, or won't give up the Sunday funny papers until he's read them all through), Cynthia is not a disciplinary problem at home either, because, though both parents are strict, so much freedom is allowed that the small, unbreakable rules just don't seem important. Mrs. Barnes, a bright-eyed, energetic woman in her middle forties, has taken care of children since she was fifteen, when her mother died leaving her to take care of nine brothers and sisters.



"I just never worry about whether or not there are hurt feelings. When I say no to the children I tell them it doesn't make sense to let a whole life be spoiled by teen-aged foolishness."

Last year, when her mother was in the hospital for an operation, Cynthia tried to peroxide a "sun streak" in her brown hair and showed up at the hospital during visiting hours a light honey blonde.

"We just laughed about it," said her mother, "though I told Cynthia she shouldn't have taken advantage of me that way—but she really looked prettier with light hair."

Only when it comes to dating do Mr. and Mrs. Barnes lay down rules against which Cynthia might possibly want to rebel. Though she is allowed to have two or three dates a week (always over the week end) and can stay out till twelve o'clock on ordinary date evenings ("It used to be eleven-thirty but I just started making it twelve by myself and nobody said anything"), she is not allowed to do three things: drive out of town on dates, go to Louann's in the evening, and stop at Harrell's drugstore after school without special permission. Only the two last rules cause Cynthia any brief discontent.

Harrell's, the Woodrow Wilson drugstore hangout, located about six blocks from the school, is a social "must" for most of the senior class. For the past twenty-one years between 200 and 300 fellows and girls have jammed the store every school day between four and five o'clock to make over 200 daily phone calls on the free phone, drink 220 Cokes a week and discuss their love troubles or even "borrow a quick buck" from owner "Doc" Harrell to cover a last-minute date

Sheer Geometrical Print for a trimmer look

Martha Manning
Dresses

No. 7200—Martha Manning's own geometrical print in Enka rayon sheer. Flattering to the fuller figure with shoulder and skirt fullness. Black, Brown, Navy. Sizes 16½ to 24½.
about $15

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

MARTHA MANNING DRESSES...
MISSES' AND "ILLUSION" HALF-SIZES

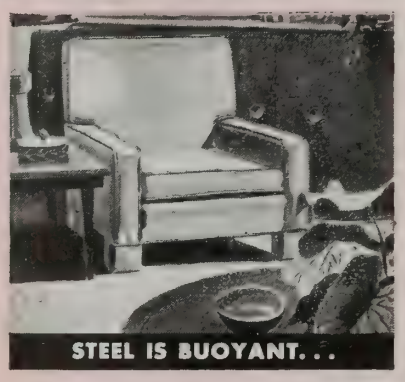
for the name of your nearest dealer, write
MARTHA MANNING • Dept. LH-6 • ST. LOUIS 3

Rowdiness and coarse language are not tolerated, and to be barred from Harrell's can be as socially disastrous as being tossed out of the Stork Club, so most of the students are well behaved. Mrs. Barnes, however, has given the veto to Harrell's. "It's just that I think Cynthia should do something—not just hang around." So from four to five each day, Cynthia works at school directing photography on athletic activities for the school Annual, planning layout or just gossiping with the rest of the staff.

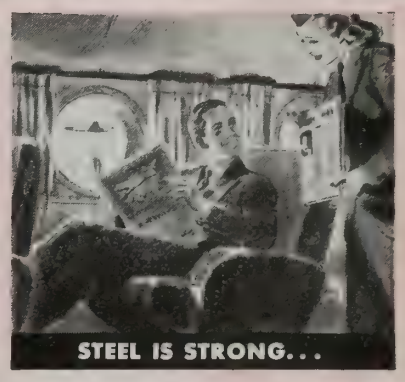
Louann's is a different problem. A sprawling, low-ceilinged "night club" type of date hangout on the edge of town, Louann's features dim lights, tables with red-checked cloths and a microphone with mistress of ceremonies to make the recorded music sound like the firsthand product. Though beer is served to those of age, and setups provided for liquor brought in in bottles by the patrons (all according to Texas state liquor laws), teen-agers are allowed admittance and are served soft drinks and potato chips on order. It has just the right crowded, low-lighted atmosphere to make it romantically exciting. But for Cynthia, Louann's is off limits. Though it may mean changing the plans for a whole carload of fellows and girls if she is double-dating, and though she would undoubtedly sometimes like to go along with the crowd, Cynthia doesn't. "Oh, mother thinks a lot of places are bad that really aren't," she commented with a kind of impatient resignation; but even without

I wonder whether patients with little to do and a lot of time in which to do it ever realize how much time they make one waste, by their efforts to keep on chattering. It's a fact that one of the most difficult things a doctor has to do is to get away from a patient without giving offence. —DR. ANTHONY WEYMOUTH: Who'd be a Doctor (Rich & Cowan, Ltd.).

Louann's and its equivalents, Cynthia's date life is full enough.



Every Tuesday night she and her friends, boys and girls, meet at one another's homes for a Young Life meeting, a nonsectarian religious youth organization that teaches young people the study of the Bible and the basic rules of Christian living. The meetings are always crowded, attended by even the most popular students at school, who discuss salvation or join in silent prayer with the same crowd with whom they dated on a previous evening. One night a week Cynthia and a group of her best girl friends are taken to a local movie by Mr. and Mrs. Barnes ("Daddy and I have always made that a habit, even with Janette and Robert. I know adolescents get so restless and one evening with us just helps to tire them out") and the week-end evenings are reserved for dating.



Cynthia, who has been dating since she was fifteen, is popular enough to turn down dates with boys she doesn't want to go out with, or refuse second dates with boys whom she disliked for some reason the first time (one was "so polite he was boring," and another embarrassed her by putting his arm around her at the evening performance of the class play in the school assembly). On one occasion, Cynthia became the awkward fourth part of a love triangle intriguing enough to flatter an international beauty. A jealous teen-ager, daughter of an out-of-town oilman, called a second girl and, pretending to be Cynthia Barnes, threatened slander and warned the girl to keep away from a certain Woodrow Wilson senior whom all three had been dating. The second girl tearfully called Cynthia to discuss terms—and the plot was off. "I think it all started just because he had an ole green Cadillac convertible," Cynthia commented shrewdly. "I know we didn't all like him that much."

On an ordinary date Cynthia, whose wardrobe is about average in size compared with other girls' in her high-school class, might wear any of her twelve skirts or fourteen

(Continued on Page 85)

ANY TIME you see a U·S·S Premier Spring Wire Tag on mattresses, bedsprings or upholstered furniture, you know, for sure, that the innersprings they contain are made of quality steel wire. In beds, chairs, sofas and gliders at home, in the seats of railroad cars, busses and airplanes and the berths in Pullman cars, well-made innersprings of Premier Wire are proving every day that the "softest thing you can sleep on... or sit on... is steel."

This label is your guide to quality steel!

The U·S·S label shown here is one of a family of U·S·S labels. Some say "Stainless Steel" or "Cyclone Fence" or "Vitrenamel"... but all have the big letters U·S·S prominently displayed. Whenever you see these letters U·S·S —the trade-mark of United States Steel —you know the steel is good.

• • •

LISTEN TO...The Theatre Guild on the Air, presented every Sunday evening by United States Steel. American Broadcasting Company, coast-to-coast network. Consult your newspaper for time and station.

Subsidiaries: AMERICAN BRIDGE COMPANY · AMERICAN STEEL & WIRE COMPANY · CARNEGIE-ILLINOIS STEEL CORPORATION · COLUMBIA STEEL COMPANY · CONSOLIDATED WESTERN STEEL CORPORATION · CYCLONE FENCE DIVISION · GERRARD STEEL STRAPPING COMPANY · NATIONAL TUBE COMPANY · OIL WELL SUPPLY COMPANY · TENNESSEE COAL, IRON & RAILROAD COMPANY · UNION SUPPLY COMPANY · VIRGINIA BRIDGE COMPANY · UNITED STATES STEEL EXPORT COMPANY · UNITED STATES STEEL PRODUCTS COMPANY · UNITED STATES STEEL SUPPLY COMPANY · UNIVERSAL ATLAS CEMENT COMPANY

USS

UNITED STATES STEEL

Mealtime Adventures

by Beatrice Cooke

FOR JUNE—AND JOYOUS OCCASIONS

Always something wonderful happening in June! Graduation parties . . . homecomings . . . showers . . . weddings! A gay month! And I'd like to contribute to the gaiety with the smoothest, most delicious party treat that ever graced a happy, grand occasion! How about this?

Meadow Gold Double Strawberry Shortcake

(Serves 8)

1 pie crust (your regular recipe)
2 pints Meadow Gold Strawberry Ice Cream (brick style)
1 cup Meadow Gold Whipping Cream
4 tbsp. granulated sugar ¼ tsp. vanilla
2 cups sliced, sweetened strawberries

1) Prepare pie crust as usual and roll out very thin.
2) Cut with pastry wheel into sixteen squares or oblongs, about ¼ inch larger than ice cream slices.
3) Prick thoroughly with tines of fork and bake in a hot oven (450° F.) about 10 minutes. Cool.
4) Beat cream until it begins to thicken. Add sugar gradually. Continue beating so cream holds shape. Add vanilla.
5) Cut ice cream into one inch slices and place each slice between two squares of pastry.
6) Top with strawberries and whipped cream.

This is such a delightful dessert that I always make it with the finest ice cream I can buy. And for me that's MEADOW GOLD—because I've always found it so smooth and mellow and naturally creamy. Try my recipe, hm? And with MEADOW GOLD ICE CREAM. You'll like it tremendously. I know! What's more, you'll find buying MEADOW GOLD very convenient. For each flavor has its own special package color. You can buy the flavor by the color. So next time you shop, do look for this wonderful ice cream!

..AN UNUSUAL CHINESE RECIPE BOOK

Like to try a Deluxe Mushroom Chow Mein . . . Lotus Blossom Salad . . . Egg Foo Yong? Then I know you'll want that book of 27 recipes called "The Art and Secrets of Chinese Cookery." Exotic! Oriental! Excitingly different! And illustrated with color photographs! It's free. Just write today to Dept. J-3, LaChoy Food Products Division, Beatrice Foods Co., Archbold, Ohio.

When you're making magic with these Oriental dishes, I know you'll want to use LaChoy ingredients. Better grocers carry them. And you'll find LaChoy Bean Sprouts, Chinese Mixed Vegetables, Chow Mein Noodles, Soy Sauce and other preparations are the most dependable you ever tried!

A gift to you from Montezuma

"Chocolatl", the Aztec emperor called it—which is why you and I still call it "Chocolate"! Today this marvelous drink the Spaniards found in the New World is a favorite the world around. And I think you'll find it in its very finest form in CHOX—the most delicious instant hot chocolate I ever tasted! CHOX is thrifty, too, because whole milk and sugar are already in it. Ask your grocer for a box today. Add only hot water. Then settle down to enjoy a cup of rich, satisfying CHOX—the chocolate that's truly fit for an emperor!

This salad's smooth as a cool June breeze!

Plenty nourishing, too . . . if you're sure to make it with mineral-rich MEADOW GOLD COTTAGE CHEESE. I suggest MEADOW GOLD because I know it's a creamed cottage cheese . . . creamy, cloud-soft without being watery. And as attractively snowy in appearance as it is firm in texture! Now, here's the salad.

Mauna Loa Rings

Spoon cottage cheese between slices of pineapple—fresh or canned. Top with an extra spoon of cottage cheese and garnish with chopped parsley and a maraschino cherry. Simple to fix—and very delicious!

This reminds me to remind you . . . If you have a pet salad that calls for a Salad Dressing, pick up some MEADOW GOLD next time you're at your food store. You'll find it exceptionally smooth and creamy. With a fine, bland flavor I know you'll enjoy.

Do you make a fine art of cooking?

If you do, I'm sure you'll agree: On food or in food, there' no substitute for the quality butter gives. And I'm convince —you can't buy better butter than delicate, fragrant

Meadow Gold Butter

This delicious, high-score butter is churned fresh daily a rushed to food stores in special insulated trucks. Also, many localities, MEADOW GOLD is specially wrapped in flave saving aluminum foil which keeps its churn-fresh goodne twice as long. Very likely that's why world-famous eati places—such as the Empire Room in Chicago's Palm House—serve you MEADOW GOLD BUTTER. Ask for a pou today at your store. Discover how extra-delicious butt can really be!

© 1949, Beatrice Foods

(Continued from Page 83)

sweaters, one of the five wool sport dresses that hang in her closet, or the dark blue silk with the bolero, or the black with pearls. Though she owns six pairs of dress shoes, she would probably choose sport shoes, if possible, because she is self-conscious about her height.

Most dates start with a movie at a near-by theater and end with a cheeseburger and a vanilla malted at a popular near-by restaurant called Sammie's. Occasionally the date is for a private dance at one of the clubhouses on White Rock Lake, rented for $40 for the evening, with music on records, and refreshments provided by the teen-aged hostesses.

Boys like Cynthia "because she's so durn pretty" and because "she can always come back with a better wisecrack." Typical wisecracking date conversation:

BOY: If you hear something rattling, it's not my head—it's the car.

CYNTHIA: Don't try to impress me—I've been out in Cadillacs.

BOY: Well, lu-ucky you. Let me touch you!

CYNTHIA: Chaaarmed, I'm sure.

Girls like her because "she's just plain nice" and "won't say anything catty about anyone." All agree that "she's easy to take because she doesn't try to get your votes," a Woodrow Wilson compliment to any student who is relaxed, natural and unaffected, without the usual "personality act" of the high-school politician.

Around school Cynthia has always had the reputation of being a girl who "just won't court," which means that she has never gone steady nor liked any one boy well enough to park along the shores of White Rock Lake for an after-date session of hugging and kissing. When she was younger, Cynthia went to "lots of silly ole parties where we played 'go walking' and 'spin the bottle'"; but now, if she even kisses a boy good night, the other students just have never heard about it.

One boy, after a date, told some friends at school that Cynthia was a "door pusher," because she sat so far over on her side of the car when they were driving that she almost pushed open the door. That made Cynthia so angry that she hung up the next time he called for a date.

At this stage in her crowded life, Cynthia is busier daydreaming about romance than she is in actually falling in love. Blithely, she expects to get married next year or the next (her mother was married at seventeen, her sister at nineteen), but has no special boy in mind. With straightforward candor, she will admit that she now has "such a crush I can't even talk to him" on one of the big Woodrow Wilson athletes, the Doak Walker of this year's football team. Last year she kept a scrapbook about him, with clippings and pictures from the local and school papers. "He's just so darling I know everybody would be surprised if we walked into Harrell's together."

Sex has never been a particular problem to Cynthia, because it is discussed with frequency and frankness in the Barnes home. The happiness of the Barnes marriage is obvious; the household is always being visited by young cousins and aunts in varying stages of pregnancy; and a frank though old (1920) book on the biology of sex has always been a part of the Barnes family library, sandwiched between Poems of Longfellow and Zane Grey. Besides, sex curiosity seems to lose its urgency for Cynthia when she hears her family talk with relaxed confidence about the not-too-distant time "when Cynthia gets married."

Just why does any seventeen-year-old girl add up to the buoyant, satisfying personality that is Cynthia Barnes? Probably because she has been given, accidentally or deliberately, all the possible props that make any girl attractive and confident.

Her home, a modest six-room white house with a year-old cocker barking behind the fence and a barbecue pit in the back yard, is a comfortable, happy place. Mr. Barnes, a superintendent for a paving company, earns $150 a week, plus a $70-a-month car allowance.

Mr. and Mrs. Barnes have friends in frequently, and no one thinks it unusual or nerve-racking if Cynthia gives a pajama party for nine girl friends that starts with a Mexican dinner of enchiladas and beans at six and dies down with a last tired giggle at four in the morning.

In education, Cynthia has had about the best that American free education can offer: grade school a few blocks away from her home, and seventh to ninth grades at Long Junior High School—just one block from Woodrow Wilson, where she is finishing her last year. School authorities, through close contact with the parents and through the usual school records, have known and watched her since first grade. When her brother Robert was held prisoner in Germany during the war, kindhearted teachers knew and sympathized with bad grades which would have flunked Cynthia in a

"With a wife and three daughters I got into the habit of shaving this way!"

Be sure it's a Toastmaster Toaster

AND BE PLEASED WITH YOURSELF FOR YEARS

Be happy with your choice for its enchanting beauty—for its jewel-like brilliance that mirrors bright breakfast faces. Know that your selection is sound as you see it pop up perfect toast every time. And enjoy all this satisfaction endlessly with the famous "Toastmaster" Toaster. For lots of folks tell us how pleased they are with "Toastmaster"* Toasters they've had for twenty years—and longer! So be proud of your choice. Make yours America's most-wanted toaster and be pleased with yourself for years. Be sure to . . .

Look for the TOASTMASTER name on your toaster . . . others will!

PERFECT TOAST ALWAYS
The famous Superflex toast timer automatically pops up perfect toast every time.

EASY TO KEEP CLEAN
Touch the button and the crumb tray opens instantly for quick, easy cleaning.

SAFE, COOL HANDLES
Lift the toaster easily and safely by the large, cool, finger-fitting handles.

TOASTMASTER Automatic Pop-Up Toaster

*"TOASTMASTER" is a registered trademark of McGraw Electric Company, makers of "Toastmaster" Toasters, "Toastmaster" Electric Water Heaters, and other "Toastmaster" Products.
Copyright 1949, TOASTMASTER PRODUCTS DIVISION, McGraw Electric Company, Elgin, Ill.

The Modern Way to be

Homemade

Strawberry Jam

that rates an extra kiss!

● Lucky the man who feasts on homemade jams and jellies put up by his little beloved herself. But smart is the wife who uses Certo. For Certo is a highly concentrated fruit pectin—the natural "jelly-ing" substance in fruits. Certo means better jellies and jams and more delicious—just 15 minutes after fruit is prepared. Over 80 recipes included with every bottle—try one today!

EASY! QUICK!

Simply boil the berries and sugar for one minute (see recipe for amounts). Remove from heat and stir in Certo. Stir and skim to cool, pour into glasses and paraffin. How's that for ease and speed?

4 EXTRA GLASSES

The short-boil Certo method averages 4 extra glasses from the same amount of fruit! Saves that luscious "fresh fruit" color and flavor, too!

You're more certain with CERTO

A Product of General Foods

strange school. Her aptitude and I.Q. tests are on file.

Just before graduation, she will have a private conference with Mr. C. L. Ford, guidance counselor, as the school's final step in preparing her for a nonschool world.

As a family, the Barneses are deeply religious people. Besides the Tuesday Young Life meetings, Cynthia goes to Sunday school and church every Sunday, says her prayers kneeling at her bedside every night, and usually reads a page from the Bible before going to sleep. Through her religion, Cynthia believes, she finds it "easier to be nice to people. I really believe God meant us to be equal—that's why it seems to me so serious the way we make Negroes live."

Though she has no set allowance, she gets money as she needs it and usually spends between 50 cents and $2.00 a week. Each summer the Barneses go on a three-week vacation, either to a nearby lake or on a car trip to the West Coast or Mexico. Cynthia and her mother often spend Saturdays clothes-shopping together, and in her closet hangs an $877 school wardrobe, all bought in the last two years because she has grown so fast. "Cynthia's always been a pretty girl," her family explains. "We like to keep her that way."

Aside from school and dating, Cynthia is kept busy at home. Every Saturday morning she bakes a batch of chocolate-chip or oatmeal cookies for her and Don's lunch bags for the week, almost every evening she makes biscuits for the family dinner (she colored them alternately pink or green for a while till her father tactfully explained that "green biscuits sort of tasted green"). Doing the dinner dishes each night, cleaning her own bedroom and doing half of her own ironing, even though Mrs. Barnes has a cleaning woman twice a week, keeps her handy and responsible around the house.

All the Barneses, from fourteen-year-old Don to Mr. Barnes, a tall, lean, outdoorish type of man who collects screw pencils as a hobby, behave and are treated as individuals. Both Don and Cynthia have their own rooms, while the older Barneses share a large upstairs bedroom, with a special corner for Mrs. Barnes' hobby of drawing floral patterns with wax crayon on taut white organdy, to be framed and hung as pictures. Cynthia's pride is a collection of sixty-three small clay jugs and vases—"the most rare came all the way from New York"—kept in a break-front cabinet in the living room. The top shelves of her bedroom closet are jammed with boxes of letters from boys, old dance programs, two dried baby orchids on a green satin ribbon, three movie scrapbooks with pictures ranging from Betty Hutton to Billie Dove and Anna Q. Nillson, clipped from her mother's adolescent collection. In the Barnes household, few ideas are laughed at, no interest is considered trivial or insignificant.

But perhaps most essential of all, in her seventeen years of existence, Cynthia's mother and father have shown her a way of life that seems to her both happy and important. During the war, when Mr. Barnes traveled through Texas paving runways at airfields, the children were left uncomplainingly at home in charge of a maiden aunt, because "we all knew mother would rather be with daddy." With a refreshing lack of concern, Cynthia can laugh away the possibilities of Texas oil or cattle enriching her future, but hopes to marry soon—"It will probably be just some ole boy I knew at school all the time, or maybe I'll meet someone next year." Her aims and her needs, probably fixed now as a life pattern, are clear and near at hand. She may never do the exotic, eternal things that color the dreams of many teen-agers, but she will probably have a ranch-type house of her own, with favorite blue on the walls and azaleas in the yard, school friends stopping in for lunch, Sunday drives to Fort Worth for Mexican suppers, and neat, pretty children setting out each morning for the red brick schools of Dallas. And for Cynthia Barnes, that is quite enough.

While editor of the Carson, Nevada, Appeal, the late Sam Davis was given a special assignment by the San Francisco Examiner. Following instructions, he met Sarah Bernhardt at Reno and traveled with her to the West Coast. A jolly, likable fellow, Davis so endeared himself to the great actress that they were reluctant to separate. But the inevitable moment came, and "The Divine Sarah" put her hands on Sam's shoulders and kissed him three times.

"Once for yourself, my friend, once for the Carson Appeal, and once for the Examiner," she explained.

Davis took a deep breath. "Madam," he blurted, "I also represent the Associated Press, which serves 400 papers west of the Mississippi River."

—WEBB B. GARRISON.

SEX FREEDOM AND MORALS IN THE U. S.

(Continued from Page 49)

radio music and you know what" or "making love just as fast and as far as you can!"

For a more objective explanation, courting or necking might be explained simply as the current and totally prevalent teen-age custom of talking, hand-holding, kissing and occasional petting made possible on almost every date through the convenience of the parked car. In considering whether or not "courting" is good or bad, it must be realized it is an accepted part of teen-age dating all over the country, and every girl asked for an evening date realizes that sooner or later she will be "tried," whether she and the boy fall in love or not. Students insist it is not a thing that "some girls do, but nice girls don't"—almost everybody does it.

Everything, of course, starts with a first date, a first kiss and the conclusions about whether or not a fellow and girl "like each other." The question of a good-night kiss on a first date is usually predecided: it is generally conceded that the boy will try and the girl will say no. Though a girl may kiss a boy a dozen times on a third or fourth date, one kiss on a first date may damage her reputation as a "really nice girl." Usually she will wait for several dates to feel assured of the boy's genuine interest and "to be sure we like each other." As a rule, courting might start anywhere from the second to the tenth date, with the fourth or fifth date considered about average. Girls who don't court may be popular, but usually will date many boys for a comparatively short time each, for as one boy said, "If I take a girl out five or six times and she doesn't want to court with me, she just doesn't want me—or else there's something definitely lacking in her personality."

Some popular girls who are now high-school seniors said they have courted with four to fifty boys so far, with about ten the average number; some popular boys have courted with five to over fifty girls, with about fifteen the average number. Of course, some of the students have fallen in love, but most of the girls, except those now going steady and thus "faithful," say they expect to court several more boys before they finally marry, and certain boys optimistically look forward to courting as many as twenty-six to thirty girls before selecting one to marry. In some localities the students expect to get married at comparatively early ages: 20 to 21 for the girls, around 22 for the boys.

Just how is there time and place for such active courting? Although many of the students questioned come from families well up the economic scale, with attractive homes, they explained that they hold few parties at home. Most of these parties are "hens" or "stags," and almost all boy-girl parties are

(Continued on Page 88)

Miracle Meals!...

with Amazing Dual-Purpose

GUARDIAN SERVICE

Foods prepared the "waterless" GUARDIAN SERVICE way are rich in nature's gifts. More of the natural vitamins, minerals, garden-and-orchard-fresh colors and flavors are retained to give you more appetizing, more taste-thrilling meals . . . more economically. Roasting, baking, broiling and frying are all done top-of-stove. Meat shrinkage is held to a minimum. With GUARDIAN SERVICE, foods are served piping hot direct-from-stove-to-table. No need for special serving dishes. Saves time and extra dishwashing. There is a GUARDIAN SERVICE unit for every purpose and a purpose for every unit.

GUARDIAN SERVICE

The World's Finest Combination
COOKING and TABLE SERVICE EQUIPMENT
The Easier Way To Cook . . .
the Beautiful Way To Serve

See how GUARDIAN SERVICE is constructed for lasting durability and safety. Patented, extra thick, extra wide, bottoms trap the heat, eliminate "hot spots." No sharp corners, no rivets, no rolled edges. Easy to clean. Ever-cool detachable handles and serving lifters eliminate need for hot pads. Food is prepared over a tiny flame. You save fuel. Kitchens are cooler. Cooking odors are minimized. And, you see what you're cooking through clear glass covers.

GUARDIAN SERVICE is not sold in retail stores. Available only through authorized dealers in principal cities. Consult your classified telephone directory.

FREE! Send for free booklet, "Better Family Health Through Better Food Preparation." Write: Century Metalcraft Corporation, Dept. J5-, 333 North Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Ill.

"DEXTER TWIN GETS MY CLOTHES REALLY CLEAN AGAIN!"

Mrs. Paul Sommerkamp
225 West Fourth Street
Covington, Kentucky

. . . I can zip out my washing in only half the time it takes with others!"

Yes, Dexter Twin washes, rinses, wrings all at the same time—it actually cuts your washing time in two. The reason is Dexter Twin is the only washer with two washing tubs. Double Sudsing turns out a tubful of super clean clothes—ready for the line—every four minutes. It eliminates soaking, hand rubbing, and pre-treating. Saves soap, hot water, electricity. It's Today's Biggest Washer Value—gives you a lifetime of trouble free, efficient service.

Before you buy—
Try THE ONLY WASHER WITH TWO WASHING TUBS
DEXTER TWIN TUB
DOES YOUR WEEKLY WASHING IN ONE HOUR OR LESS

FREE—MAIL TODAY

Get this interesting 16-page booklet. Illustrates 4 simple steps to a quicker cleaner wash. Shows how to have lifetime, carefree washer satisfaction.

THE DEXTER COMPANY
Dept. L69, Fairfield, Iowa
Please send free booklet

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____

AMERICA'S FINEST TWIN AND SINGLE TUB WASHERS SINCE 1894

(Continued from Page 86)

closely chaperoned, with the time spent in dancing or listening to records. Occasionally there is a party at home when the parents are out; then the crowd comes in for dancing, courting—and sometimes a little drinking.

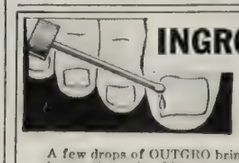
One boy told about a beer party staged recently at a summer home just outside town and closed for the season. The evening was arranged as an ordinary date by each couple but they went to the party instead, got home about the usual time—and no questions were asked.

A few months ago, however, in an Eastern university town, such a party resulted in hospitalization of a high-school girl and charges of criminal rape against five youths. A small Middle Western town has reported a similar incident. In another city a high-school boy whose home is in a wealthy residential section had a party for his girl and another couple. His parents were out of town. Late in the evening a youth came to the front door looking for a friend; the host knew the boy and let him in. A few moments later, six other boys followed the first into the house, bringing a keg of beer, which they set up in the kitchen. According to the host, he repeatedly told the group to leave, but they ignored him and romped all over the house. The other couple were in another part of the house when the group arrived. It was said that the uninvited guests located the couple and forced the escort to leave the room while four of them attacked the girl. The girl's escort ran downstairs and out of the house to call the police. By the time the case reached the grand jury the total charges stood thus: six youths, ranging from 18 to 20, held for rape, one 19-year-old held for false pretext and swindling in obtaining two kegs of beer. All seven posted bonds, and the 15-year-old girl in the case returned to her high-school classes.

This party was a real shocker to both the parents and students in the community. At high school the general attitude was reflected in such comments as: "My mother is just too sharp for such things to happen round our house" or "I never had a party like that—it's asking for trouble."

Wiener roasts or "blanket parties" are popular, however, everywhere. Almost every town has a river, a lake or some wooded spot that is popular for picnicking. Sometimes the same crowd will have two blanket parties on one week end. Supper is a wiener roast around a big fire just as the sun goes down; someone brings a portable radio and sometimes somebody manages a case of beer. In most states, beer cannot be served or sold to anyone under 21, but a "doctored-up driver's license or an older brother can do it," and everybody brings a blanket. As a rule the parties break up by 11:30 or 12, with the couples arriving home at the prescribed zero hour.

Part of the unwritten code of dating is that if a boy and girl "really like each other" they will not court with anyone else; but if both are dating other people, they admit each is allowed the privileges of experimental courting, sometimes with three or four people on successive dating evenings. As one boy explained, "A fellow has to do a lot of courting to get a cross section of what he likes best in girls." The girls who will court "just anybody," however, are set off in a separate class by themselves; nevertheless, if one of these girls happens to be also "a nice girl, generally well behaved, from a nice family," she is not considered "cheap" but just "a very affectionate or passionate girl."



One student in a Southern state defined a "big court" simply as "a case of roaming hands." The students vary widely in their estimate that 10 to 70 per cent of both the fellows and the girls go in for "a big court" at some time, with about 20 per cent "big-courting" generally conceded as a fairly accurate average. Only two general rules hold here: "It's not too terribly wrong if you're in love"; and "A decent fellow won't tell on a girl if she does." Held in disrepute, however, is the teaser, a girl who "courts up a big storm" (kisses a boy until he is passionately aroused). Except with a very small and very fast crowd of girls at school ("Boys always know who will and who won't"),

AMAZING!! NEW!!
"DEW"
SPRAY DEODORANT
IN THE MAGICAL "SELF-ATOMIZING" BOTTLE

STOPS PERSPIRATION AND ODOR TROUBLES! Keeps you daintily pure, socially secure.
DAINTIER THAN CREAMS! "Dew" never touches hands. Not messy. Squeeze flexible bottle, spray on gentle mist.
ONLY DEODORANT CONTAINING "RETSELANE" to stop perspiration trouble, avoid perspiration stains on clothes. Removes odor.
WON'T ROT CLOTHES! Can't irritate normal skin.
SAVES MONEY! Full year's supply only 98¢ Plus tax. Less than 2¢ a week
SQUEEZE FLEXIBLE BOTTLE! "DEW"® SPRAYS ITSELF ON!
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

To Tampon Users...
Fibs* is the Tampon with Rounded Ends
the only Tampon "Quilted" for Comfort
"Quilted" for Safety
Next time try Fibs (internal sanitary protection)
*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

INGROWN NAIL Hurting You?
Immediate Relief!
A few drops of OUTGRO bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allowing the nail to be cut and thus preventing further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

VACATION MONEY!
There is time to earn vacation money by representing the Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Holiday, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill and other popular publications. Generous commissions. Write to
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
205 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania

IMPROVED
K-M Magik Mist
KILLS BUGS Fast!
$2.95
FINGER ACTION BOMB
K-M Magik Mist kills flies, roaches, mosquitoes, silver-fish faster and keeps killing longer than any old-fashioned ways.
KNAPP-MONARCH CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

NEW! Magik Mist SPRAYLET
Handy Refillable Dispenser
K-M Magik Mist super-Killing formula. Dispenser and 6 handy bulbs $2.95. Refills — 6 bulbs $1.19. Economical. Ideal for vacations.
SOLD EVERYWHERE
FOR OUTDOOR USE GET K-M REPEL-A-MIST—"CHASES BUGS AWAY"

Why go to a Doctor?
When you're ill, you go to a Doctor because he is a specialist in medicine. When you're troubled with superfluous hair, use a product made by an Expert. We have specialized in the manufacture of ZiP hair removers for over thirty years, and operate a Salon on Fifth Avenue, New York, solely for superfluous hair removal. As a result these exceptional preparations are available at good stores everywhere.
ZIP Cream Hair Remover—
NOW ODORLESS
Removes every trace of hair instantly. Keeps legs and arms smoother, cleaner, lovelier . . . . . 25c, 49c.
SPECIAL: Large 89c size of ZiP Cream Hair Remover sold in combination with a 50c container of AB-SCENT Cream Deodorant . . . both for 89c.
ZiP Epilator—IT'S OFF because IT'S OUT. ODORLESS. Gently lifts out the entire hair. Leaves no after-stubble or dark shadow. Ideal for eliminating hair on face as well as arms and legs . . . . . $1.10, $1.79.
No Federal Tax
Use a proven hair remover, not an ordinary cosmetic. Insist on ZiP.
In each package is enclosed a gift coupon offering you your Birthday Perfume and Your Horoscope.
ZiP
IT'S OFF!
NOW ODORLESS!

FALSE TEETH
KLUTCH holds them tighter
KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental plates so much firmer and snugger that one can eat and talk with greater comfort and security; in many cases almost as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lessens the constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 25c and 50c at druggists. . . . If your druggist hasn't it, don't waste money on substitutes, but send us 10c and we will mail you a generous trial box. © I. P. Inc.
KLUTCH CO., Box 4921-F, ELMIRA, N. Y.

MATERNITY DRESSES
WRITE FOR FREE CATALOG
Smart, youthful styles for Morning, Street, Afternoon, Sports, or Formal wear. Charming fashions for the mother-to-be at low budget prices. Also Maternity Corsets and Lingerie.
SUMMER STYLES
CRAWFORD'S
DEPT. A, 729 BALT. AVE.
Kansas City 6, Mo.

a certain amount of honest affection is supposed to precede any big-court session. As one boy explained, "Sometimes a girl acts like she's interested just to keep a boy—but after a few dates it gets tiresome just pretending."

In almost all cases, the boys feel it is up to the girl "to keep things under control." She should know how and when to say stop, for "after all, it's just natural for a fellow." But it is the girl who should pick the right moment to say, "I think it's time for me to go home"; "Let's just listen to the radio awhile"; or perhaps, in a lighter mood, use the standard, popular joke: "If you don't stop, I'll call a member of my family." Then as the boy kisses her again: "Oh, bro—other!"

But the whole thing must be handled with tact, no one made to feel guilty or to blame. If, by mutual understanding, the evening has been predecided for only casual courting, a simple remark can bring it to an end since, as one boy explained, "I know nothing's going to happen." But if the feeling is deep, a boy and girl may talk over their aroused emotions and admit them as a mutual problem. One girl explained, "I was only tempted to go too far once. But we stopped in time, spent about two hours talking it over. He wanted to be a doctor and we both knew we just didn't want to spoil our futures. So we've been dating each other, without trouble, ever since." Though many of the students are faithful churchgoers, attending Sunday-morning service and Sunday school, few said they had any guilt feelings about petting itself, for "after all, you wouldn't very well think about religion at a time like that." But with many boys and girls the major problem, one usually worried over in silence but often discussed among friends with surprising frankness at bull sessions or pajama parties, is not whether or not to pet, but whether or not "to go all the way."

The majority of students say that they personally prefer to reserve sexual intercourse for after marriage, either because it's "what the Bible says we should do"; "I think that's the way boys really want it"; or "I know both my girl and I would be happier that way." These tend to be the more emotionally tranquil or more reserved, from home training or from personal reasoning. Boys estimate that about half the 18- and 19-year-old boys have had sex experience. They say, too, that a certain number of the couples who have been going steady for a long time either have intercourse regularly or have had at some time. Talk about intercourse brings a variety of reactions: "Some boys just do it once or twice for the novelty of it"; "I wouldn't believe it myself except some

(Continued on Page 91)

PERFECT MOMENT

Of all the duties fatherhood has brought me, the task of taking my three-year-old son to the bathroom each night at eleven has somehow become the most important. I catch him under the armpits and heave him to my shoulder with a smooth, practiced swing. He whimpers like a puppy, grabs my neck with his little old arms and snuggles his head in the curve of my shoulder. Then he sighs and I can feel him go limp in a sort of trustful relaxation, as if he might be having that "feeling of security" they mention in the child-rearing manuals. I stand there a long moment in a kind of beatific stupor, patting his rear end with my free hand. Then I sigh, too, and march off to the bathroom.

I can't say that my morals undergo any repairs during the moment. Nor am I fired with any lofty ambitions. I can't say that I think at all. It's just that however worried I may be by finances or my job or the state of the world, I've got one minute every day when everything seems to be pretty darned all right.

—G. B. LOGAN.

"Ironing is 3 times easier with Satina in my starch!"

WRITES MRS. DONALD BUTLER, WAYNE, ILLINOIS

"SATINA WORKS LIKE MAGIC!" writes Mrs. Butler. "Satina in my starch makes ironing 3 times easier and gives the clothes a lovely fragrance. I like it very much for dresses."

Satina is a wonderful ironing aid that you use with boiled or unboiled starch. It dissolves easily in boiling water or the boiling starch solution.

It not only makes ironing lots easier, it makes clothes smell fresher, look newer, and stay clean longer, too!

FREE FULL-SIZE PACKAGE

WE'RE SO SURE you'll love Satina, if we can just get you to try it once, that we're offering you a free full-size package. Enough for 4 big starchings! Just you try it and judge Satina for yourself!

A PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

SATINA, Dept. 101, Battle Creek, Michigan
Dear Sirs: Satina sounds good to me. Now I'd like a free full-size package to see how much easier it makes my starched ironing.
NAME_____
STREET_____
CITY_____STATE_____

Satina users say: Put SATINA in your starch!
It makes starched ironing 3 times easier!"

Use plenty of genuine* ICE

It adds so much to living...at so little cost!

Housewives do!

Clever women give their tables that festive touch by serving appetizers, sea foods and salads with lots of genuine crushed ice . . . and in over eleven million homes an ice refrigerator keeps foods fresh, delicious and fully nutritious.

Hosts do!

The fore-handed host never risks being called an "ice miser". He makes sure that there is plenty of genuine crystal-clear, hard-frozen ice on hand for beverages—no chance of an embarrassing ice shortage when he entertains.

Grocers do!

Up-to-date stores keep vegetables garden-fresh and vitamin-rich on beds of crushed ice. Their customers always get full money's worth in flavor and nutrition. No wilted, dried-out, vitamin-starved vegetables for them.

Free! Mail a post card today for your free copy of "Money-saving Tips on Marketing"—a 24-page, purse-size marketing guide.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ICE INDUSTRIES
Dept. BJ, 1706 L Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

"Genuine Ice" is the pure, crystal-clear, taste-free, hard-frozen kind supplied exclusively by your local Ice Company* of the girls tell about it"; "If I know a girl has done it, I feel so funny about her, I just couldn't date her again"; or "It's all right if you're in love."

(Continued from Page 89)

Whatever the situation as to sex relationships, few pregnancies are reported to school authorities. Occasionally a girl suspected of pregnancy by her classmates just "takes a trip" and returns to classes. Among the 1948 seniors in a Western city, one girl was married just after graduation, had her baby and was divorced by late fall. In another high school last fall the story went round that one of the girls had been found in the bathroom by her parents, with both wrists slashed. No one ever "knew for sure." Preventive responsibility is considered the boys' problem, and though many cities have ordinances prohibiting sale of contraceptives except by doctors and pharmacists, they may be bought in almost any drugstore by anyone presumably of age.

Even among the boys and girls who show at least a verbal tolerance for petting and sexual intercourse for unmarried fellows and girls "in love," pregnancy itself is still considered a social disgrace and a personal horror. That fear alone (as it probably has done through all generations) is often enough to keep many couples within conventional bounds. One senior boy, for instance, has been going steady for two years, expects to get married in another three. His comment was, "I just love her so much I couldn't think of doing anything to get her in trouble." Others are more fearful of the disapproval they would arouse at home: "It would disgrace me with everyone—and father thinks I'm just about perfect right now"; "I'd be so frightened I wouldn't want to live—they'd never want me at home again"; and "I'd never get back into the house if I got a girl in trouble. I know my mother!"

Though according to latest statistics, there are in the United States about 39 illegitimate births out of every 1000 each year, society as a group has little sympathy for the unwed mother. For instance, in one city of 300,000 there is no licensed maternity home for unmarried mothers, though 553 illegitimate births were reported there last year, with the largest number falling in the 16-to-25-year age group. A teen-ager whose pregnancy plight comes to the attention of school officials may be referred to a welfare association, which, in turn, will help the child to break the news to her parents, check marriage possibilities with the boy involved and, if marriage is not feasible, suggest living arrangements until the child is born.

Girls from wealthier families rarely seek aid outside the home, according to school nurses. These girls usually "go away for a long vacation or spend a few months with an aunt in another part of the country—no one really hears about it." But for those girls who do need help, financially or personally, the future is less simple. These girls may be placed in a charitable institution, to be trained in sewing or a trade while waiting out the birth of the child. Most commonly, however, a girl is placed in a local foster home where she must draw what companionship and consolation she can from strange surroundings until the baby is born. Then the young mother may choose to keep the child or turn it over to be given out for adoption while she attempts to retrace and reconstruct the pattern of her life.

Among the high-schoolers of the country to whom sex decisions have admittedly become a definite and immediate problem, the opinion is that help must come chiefly from home. A few feel that their parents do understand what they are going through. One girl said, "It always makes me kind of proud that my mother told me everything. It makes it easier for me to talk to her now"; and a boy, one of the most popular in his senior class, explained, "Maybe it's easier for me because I'm an only child, but I don't have to wait for a baseball game or something, to get to talk to my father. I see him every day; he's frank with me—he tells me it's hard to live a good life."

Others feel they have been left alone, forced to keep up a front for the family, while trying to puzzle out sex problems by themselves.

Factual explanations of sex, given at school to separate classes of boys and girls by doctors as part of school health-educational programs, have proved not enough. These courses included studies of the anatomy and function of male and female sex organs, presented objectively as biological studies and health courses only. Most of the students felt that these courses were of some help, since, as one boy put it, "I knew it all before, but the doctor showed me that I was kind of mixed up on the details." But the more general evaluation of the sex instructions is reflected in the comments of a senior girl: "I read all about that in a book when I was eleven. But nobody ever told me I was going to get so emotional about it."

What the students feel they need most is constant, sympathetic attention and acceptance of the fact that things have changed since their parents were at the same teen age. They need the freedom to talk with someone, preferably someone at home, "if it's not too late to get my parents to understand."

As one boy said, "I'm tired of being considered a child. Why do they have to think I'm always the 'good boy'? Why should I be different from everybody else? You'd think families would be able to catch on to what kids are like and what really goes on." THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Class Picture

BY MAE WINKLER GOODMAN

Here they are, in row on awkward row
Precisely placed, the tall ones at the rear,
Standing stiffly, with their wide-toothed grins,
Tricked by the camera in that magic year.

I see them all: the pigtails and the curls,
The crew-neck sweaters and the lumberjacks,
Posed self-consciously, their wind-brushed hair
Across their eyes, the school behind their backs,

The teacher smiling her indulgent smile,
The twins placed neatly in the center row;
Nothing can change it now, that day, that hour,
That priceless morning from the long ago.

Where are they now? Each gone his separate way,
Yet for a moment time forgets to pass,
And once again, within this faded print
I join my playmates in the third-grade class.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

When prices are up
And the budget is down
You don't need to shop
With a horrible frown...

Buy Kraft Dinner!

AND MAKE DELICIOUS, THRIFTY MACARONI-AND-CHEESE

Imagine, a hearty main dish that costs only pennies a serving. But that's Kraft Dinner for you! It's tasty too (just watch Junior fall to!), and so speedy. For Kraft's very special macaroni cooks tender and fluffy in just 7 minutes. And good Kraft Grated is added in seconds.

Yes, smart shoppers must be right when they call Kraft Dinner their pantry prize!

Cooks in just 7 minutes!

Easy Recipe

Peach Icebox Pie

Three favorites in one! Cookies! Jell-O! Luscious canned cling peaches!

1 cup fine vanilla wafer crumbs
¼ cup melted butter or margarine
12 to 15 whole vanilla wafers
1 package lemon Jell-O*
2 cups hot water
6 canned cling peach halves
6 maraschino cherries
Whipped cream

Blend crumbs and butter together. Pat firmly into bottom of 8-inch round dish or layer cake pan. Stand whole wafers around edge of dish pressing firmly into crumbs. Chill. Dissolve the Jell-O in hot water and cool until slightly thickened. Arrange well-drained peaches and cherries in crumb shell; cover with Jell-O and chill until firm. Cut into wedges and serve with whipped cream. Serves 6.

Picnic Supper Dessert (below): Cool, colorful sliced cling peaches spooned right from the can. Serve them plain, or make peach sundaes. Your grocery money cannot buy bigger, better, prettier peaches than California clings! Leisurely tree-ripened until they're deep golden yellow and bursting with luscious juicy peach flavor. These are the tender beauties you want for salads, desserts, and baked goods. A smart buy, priced right, easy to get. Wonderful work-saver in the summertime. Keep several cans handy!

*Jell-O is a registered trademark of General Foods Corporation

Copyright 1949, Cling Peach Advisory Board

Check the label—Make sure they're full-flavored "clings"

Canned Cling Peaches from California

Canned Halves • Canned Slices • Canned Fruit Cocktail • in tin or glass

Quick & Easys For Two

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

LUCK is in your pocket if you're a 1949 bride just learning to cook. There are quick-to-fix products by the hundreds for you to pick and choose from. Few men turn down a good cake, and until such time as you have the leisure to practice cake-making, there are many superb mixes. It's the crust that makes the pie! That you know and you know, too, that you can buy the makings in a package and devote your time to learning to roll out the crust—crimp the edges—the final flourishes. You'll learn to make a good French dressing for simple bowl salads—the only salad worth eating, as far as men are concerned. Very likely you've already learned that good coffee helps start the day right and finish a good dinner. There's a basic you'll really want to perfect! Don't try to absorb too much of this cooking business all at once. Take it easy. A simple meal on the table is worth more in the business of living than being able to make perfect crêpes Suzette.

When You are Three

Ham with Apples
Green Beans with Celery
Asparagus Salad
Honey Custards

Some recipes work out better for threes than twos. Custards, for instance, and you never did believe in dividing eggs. A thick slice of ham serves three. You don't always want to choose between having a skimpy-looking slice and having leftovers. So plan your meal for three. Good night to ask a lonesome office friend for three-handed bridge.

HONEY CUSTARDS

Grease 3 custard cups. Divide ¼ cup honey between the 3 cups, putting it in bottom. Beat 2 eggs slightly. Add 1 tablespoon sugar, ¼ teaspoon mace or nutmeg, ½ teaspoon vanilla, a pinch of salt and 1 cup scalded milk. Mix well. Pour it over the honey, pouring it slowly against a spoon so it won't mix with honey. Set cups in pan of hot water. Bake in moderate oven—350° F.—30 minutes or until firm. Test with a knife. If knife inserted in center of custard comes out clean, custard is done.

Chill in refrigerator. Lay a towel under cups so they will not crack. They'll be cool enough to serve when the rest of dinner is ready.

HAM WITH APPLES

Have a slice of ham cut about 1 inch thi Slash the fat around the edge. Brown both sides in a hot skillet. Drain off f
Sprinkle lightly with cloves and cinnam Open a jar of pie apples. These are cooked and in nice pieces—meant for ma ing pie but fine with the ham. Heap th on top of ham slice. Sprinkle with bro sugar. Put lid on skillet and simmer 20– minutes.

Low Point in the Budget

Frankfurters and Rice
Vegetable Salad
Stewed Cherries—Cookies

Dinner can be the same high point in t day it always is, even if there isn't mu food money left in the week's kitty. Fra furters and rice costs little to make but has lots of flavor. Cherries are ripe. F and stew them with sugar and lemon a a little water. Serve hot or cold. Dre up your table the night you dress dow the menu.

FRANKFURTERS AND RICE

Slice 3 frankfurters into ½-inch circl
Brown with ⅛ cup raw rice, 2 tablespoo finely chopped onion, 1 tablespoon gre pepper in 2 tablespoons bacon fat. Stir co stantly to prevent sticking. Then add 1 c condensed tomato soup and ½ can wat Season with a dash of garlic salt and a da of cayenne pepper. Cover and simmer until rice is cooked and has absorbed most of the liquid. Reseason to taste and add a little more water toward end of cooking if it seems to need it.

One-Dish Dinner

Tongue-and-Spinach Brûlée
Green Salad
Spongecake—Raspberries

You're making a collection of one-dish casseroles (meat and vegetables all in one) that you can serve with a salad and light dessert on busy nights. Double the quantities for this little meal and you'll have the type of dinner easy to serve two guests—with little effort on your part. The tongue is canned, the spinach frozen. You'll buy the spongecake, and everyone knows how little there is to fixing fresh raspberries. Just wash, sugar and chill. Add ice cream or sherbet to the menu, if you like.

TONGUE-AND-SPINACH BRÛLÉE

Open 1 jar canned smoked beef tongue. Cut 4–6 slices—whatever you think you'll eat. Cook 1 package frozen spinach, according to package directions. Make 1½ cups cream sauce, using 3 tablespoons butter or margarine and 3 tablespoons flour and 1½ cups rich milk. Season well with salt and pepper. Drain spinach. Season. Arrange in bottom of shallow casserole. I use an ovenproof glass pie plate for this dish for two. Lay the tongue on the spinach. Pour the sauce over the tongue. Sprinkle generously with grated cheese. Place under low broiler heat about 10 minutes, so the tongue will heat through and the top will become bubbly and brown.

Quick Pickup

Clam-and-Mushroom Chowder
Stuffed-Tomato Salad
Vegetable Relishes

It's warm tonight. You don't want to do much cooking—but you don't want to resort to the delicatessen either. An interesting, quick-to-put-together soup and a hearty salad requires little actual cooking and is a refreshing choice for a summer evening. The portions on the soup are ample for second helpings. It's your main dish.

CLAM-AND-MUSHROOM CHOWDER

Open 1 can minced clams and 1 can cream of mushroom soup. Cut 1 slice bacon into small pieces and fry with 1 small onion, chopped. Drain off fat. Add the minced clams and juice and the canned mushroom soup. Dilute with milk to the consistency you like best. Season with salt and pepper. Serve in deep soup bowls with water crackers.

STUFFED-TOMATO SALAD

Skin 2 large tomatoes. Best way to do this: Spear tomato with a fork—twirl it over direct heat until the skin blisters and cracks. You don't want it to cook. Skin will peel off easily. Cut slice off top. Scoop out the centers and chill while you make the filling. Combine ½ cup cold cottage cheese with ½ cup cold, drained, crushed pineapple. Add a pinch of salt and 1 teaspoon lemon juice. Fill tomatoes with the cheese and pineapple. Serve on lettuce leaves with a sprinkling of chopped chives over the top.

Lead Up to Shortcake

Supper Eggs
Green Salad
Strawberry Shortcake

Soon the strawberry season will be over for another year. Though frozen strawberries will be around all year through, you want one more shortcake made with local fresh berries—the hot-biscuit kind, buttered and dripping with strawberries that have been mashed and sugared so they are really juicy. You never really enjoy your shortcake following a regular dinner. It's too much. It should be the star performer in the meal and served in deep plates with plenty of cream. To make way for this treat in both kitchen time and gastronomical capacity, have a rather simple dish, such as supper eggs and a green salad, to precede it.

SUPPER EGGS

Warm a bowl over a boiling tea kettle or in the warmer, if your range has one. Chop enough scallions to make ⅓ cup and put in bowl with ⅛ pound butter or margarine. Hard-cook 4 eggs. Peel while hot and put in bowl. Cut up eggs in bowl with knife and fork. Season with salt, pepper and paprika. Mix up well and serve warm with a tossed green salad.

Saturday in the Sun

Broiled Lamb Chops
With Snappy Sauce
New Potatoes and Peas
Fruit Towers

Saturday is usually your big cooking day. It's the only day you have time to play around the kitchen—prepare a dish that takes two hours to cook—bake a pie or cake—a batch of rolls, using part of dough for coffee cake—whatever suits your day-at-home mood. But now that the weather lures you out-of-doors and to other kinds of fun than cooking, you settle for the kind of dinner that requires no advance preparation—one that you can whip together in less than an hour before dinner.

SNAPPY SAUCE FOR LAMB CHOPS

Heat ⅛ pound butter or margarine in small pan. Add 1 tablespoon dry mustard, blended with 2 tablespoons water, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce, a dash of Tabasco sauce, salt and pepper. Heat when ready to serve. Add ¼ cup chopped parsley or water cress and pour over chops.

FRUIT TOWERS

Arrange canned cling-peach halves on slices of canned pineapple—one for each person. Fill peaches with vanilla ice cream. Top with a spoonful of apricot jam and a sprinkling of chopped nuts.

Hot Rolls AND COLD CUTS

Easy, quick...No experience needed with the new

Pillsbury HOT ROLL MIX

(WITH YEAST)

EASY-TO-USE YEAST INCLUDED

Make summer meals a joy to fix—and eat. Serve cold cuts and your own homemade dinner rolls. Lighter, more tender rolls are so easy with Pillsbury Hot Roll Mix. Rich flavor of fine Pillsbury ingredients. Directions on the package. (Yeast is included.) Just add water to yeast, then add mix. Get a package today!

You and Ann Pillsbury can make a great team

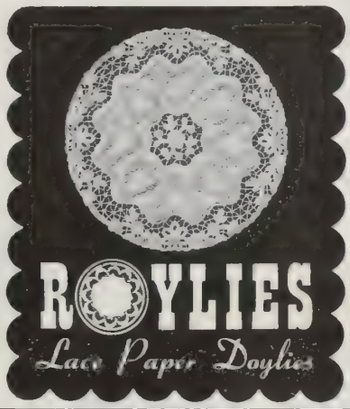
Pillsbury BEST XXXX Mixes

Ann Pillsbury has developed a new hot roll mix in her kitchen to save you time in your kitchen, and give you perfect results every time.

SAVE PILLSBURY EXTRA-VALUE COUPONS

Get valuable articles at real savings on Pillsbury coupon plan. Extra-value coupon with each Pillsbury package. Write for free Premium Booklet to PILLSBURY, Box 150, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

© P.M.I.



Tips on Table Settings

1. Save at every meal by using crisp, white, lace paper Roylie place mats. Cost less than laundering of linens. Precious linens last longer! And Roylies are beautiful as real linen.

2. Make each meal "sparkle" with eye-appeal by using matching lace paper Roylies under water glasses, bread, desserts, etc. Copies of priceless imported linens and laces! Get variety of sizes, shapes, patterns at 5-and-10's, naborhood, hardware, dept. stores.

Trade Mark "Roylies" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.
Royal Lace Paper Works, (Inc.), Brooklyn 1, N. Y.

DON'T DREAD SUMMER—
LET Smart-form KEEP YOU COOL
See ad on page 172

AMAZING OFFER—$40 IS YOURS
For Selling Only 50 Boxes Christmas Cards
Also 50 and 25 for $1.00 with or without name. Free samples. Other boxes on approval. Entirely new, different de luxe assortment with feature television card. Cute gadgets assortments. Write today. It costs nothing to try.
FREE SAMPLES
CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. G-22, White Plains, N. Y.

CUT ME OUT!
If You Want to Make Money!
We need live-wire women as Subscription Representatives! A part-time job that pays Big Commissions! Write CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 206 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

In selecting fine china, there is no safer guide than a hallmark of quality

Theodore Haviland New York
MADE IN AMERICA

YOU MAY OBTAIN BOOKLET OF PATTERNS, TABLE SETTINGS AND ROMANTIC HISTORY OF HAVILAND CHINA, BY SENDING 20c.

Theodore Haviland & Co.
INCORPORATED
26 WEST 23RD ST., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL GIRL IN CALIFORNIA

(Continued from Page 36)

I proposed to her again the next Monday and was turned down again. She was leaving the following day. The next morning it tore the heart out of me when I saw her packing her car. I came back from the office at noon and she was getting ready to leave. She came over and rang my front doorbell. I went out to the car with her.

"You've been awfully nice," she said. "I'll never forget it and I'll never forget you. Forgive me for being mean about California. I'm sure it's a wonderful place, but it just isn't for me."

She put her hands on my cheeks and kissed me on the mouth. Then she turned and ran over and got in her car and the gears clashed and she was on her way.

I stood there and the golden sunshine of California shone on me, but it didn't warm me up. The mountains were majestic in the distance, but they didn't give me any uplift. As far as I was concerned I might as well have been back in Glutenberg, Iowa.

I drove to the office and made up my mind. I went in to see my boss, Mr. Fifer, who was putting a poppy in his lapel.

"Mr. Fifer," I said, "may I have some time off to try and get married?"

"What do you mean, try and get married?" Mr. Fifer—he came from Massachusetts—said. "Do you have to tree this girl like a possum?"

"Well, sort of," I said. "She doesn't like California and she's on her way back to New Jersey. I want to try and persuade her."

Mr. Fifer dropped the poppy. "Impossible," he said. "Everybody likes California. California has everything. You forget this weird character, Joseph, and stay right here and marry some nice wholesome California girl. California raises the most beautiful, the healthiest and shapeliest girls in the world."

"Yes, sir," I said. "All very true, Mr. Fifer. May I have some time off, please?"

He didn't like it, but he saw I was determined. And I was the best real-estate salesman he had. Mr. Fifer always said that I had a contagious enthusiasm that communicated itself to the clients. After a couple hours out with me, Mr. Fifer said, the client would be happy in a converted chicken coop.

He let me go, but I was worried about my car. My new one hadn't come through, and Betty had an hour's head start. I gave it the gun and headed out for Pomona and Riverside. I picked up Route 99 at Beaumont and kept the gas pedal down on the floor, busting through the heat of the desert and keeping that lead foot there until I hit Blythe.

I had an idea she might have holed up there, not wanting to drive after dark, and sure enough I saw her car in front of a motel. I managed to get the next cabin. I got a hamburger and went over and sat on my cabin steps, and a little later Betty's door opened and out she came. She saw me and yelped.

"Why, Joe Tindall," she said, "you scared me half to death. What are you doing here?"

"Well," I said, "you heard of Lochinvar coming out of the west. I got a beat-up tin Lizzie instead of a white horse, but I do the best I can."

"Joe," she said, "you shouldn't have done it."

I went over and sat beside her on the porch steps. We sat there and watched the cars coming in, and the people getting out, dusty and tired.

"Look at them," I said, "people from all over the land coming to California to find peace and happiness. We could find that happiness. I know a new development. Little ranch houses with picture windows. We could ——"

"You mustn't talk that way," she said, and put her hand over my mouth. We sat there and I slid my arm around her waist. She leaned against me for a minute and then she said, "This is wrong, Joe. You go over and sit on your porch steps and I will sit on mine and we will talk across. It's much safer."

She went in to bed a little later. I watched her lights go out and thought of her lying there probably thinking of that fellow from New Jersey.

I woke up at seven the next morning. I shaved and dressed and went outside and her car was gone. The proprietor was in the driveway. I asked him when she pulled out.

He looked mean. "None of your business. Listen, bud," he said in a tough voice, "out here in the West we respect women. You leave that kid alone."

"I only want to marry her," I said. "She's going back to New Jersey to marry some guy there. I'm trying to persuade her to marry me and stay west."

"She's going back and marry a guy in Jersey and stay there?" he said. "Holy Pete. I know just what'll happen. She'll lie awake nights kicking herself for being such a sap. I know just how she'll feel; I come from Connecticut myself. She figured on throwing you off the trail today if you followed her; she's going up to the Canyon."

"Thanks, pal," I said. "I bet she won't take that short cut from Aguila over to Congress Junction. That'll help."

I gave the old buggy the business. It was tearing the guts out of that car and I had to stop a lot for oil, but I poured it on. I made Williams finally and swung off Highway 66 for the road up to the south rim.

No one agrees with other people's opinions; they merely agree with their own opinions expressed by somebody else.

SYDNEY TREMAYNE: Tatlings.
(John Lane: The Bodley Head Limited)

I found her car parked beside one of the Bright Angel cabins. I got another cabin near by and started looking for her. She was standing near the rim, feeding graham crackers to a deer.

"That double-crosser in Blythe," she said. "And he seemed so nice. It was for your own good, Joe."

We looked out at the Canyon. The sun was sinking and the colors changing.

"It's breath-taking," she said with a catch in her voice.

"Nothing like this in New Jersey," I said.

That broke the spell. "We have wonderful cranberry bogs," she said, and went up to the lodge for dinner. Afterward we walked along the rim until dark and then once again I watched the lights go out in her cabin. No progress.

We started off the next morning in tandem formation, Betty leading. I rode along behind her, admiring her left arm whenever she put it out the window for a signal. Only I had to keep stopping for oil. I would drop behind and then catch up with her again.

She stopped late in the afternoon in Albuquerque. I got the next cabin. We had dinner at a café next door and then came back. She started to get her luggage and I took it and carried it into her cabin. I had just put it down when the phone rang. Automatically I picked it up.

"Hello," I answered, and a man's voice said:

"I want Miss Elizabeth Drayton's cabin."

"This is it," I said. "Hold the phone."

"I beg your pardon," he said. "Who are you?"

"My name ——" I began, but Betty snatched the phone out of my hand.

"George, dear," she caroled. "Oh, him." I didn't like the way she said it. "Why, George," Betty said gaily, but she was looking daggers at me, "he just carried my bags in here." She laughed again and gave me the business with her blue eyes.

I faded out of there and a few minutes later Betty came outside on the steps.

"George worries about me," she said. "I'd wired him that I was planning to stay here tonight. He's so sweet and thoughtful to call up."

(Continued on Page 96)

sun-bright for summer!

Picnic at home with this summer-bright Daystrom furniture that's made for modern living. You'll love the new settee! In three units, its personality changes to suit your whim. Fit it flat against a wall, curve it around a corner, or make three chairs of it! New, too, is the cordial club chair that's welcome in bedroom, living room or den. All richly upholstered in gay-hued Duran, so handsome and long wearing. Washable, too! Settee, $134.50*. Club chair, $27.50*. Stool, $8.95*.

Make mealtimes merry with this lighthearted dinette set. The graceful table is tidily topped with satin-smooth plastic, made for hard wear and easy care. Swishes clean in a jiffy with a damp cloth. Yes, that's Duran on the comfort-curved, spring-seated chairs —colorful and washable, too! All Daystrom furniture is designed in superb gleaming chrome electroplated on sturdy steel. At department and furniture stores everywhere. Ask for it by name. Daystrom dinette sets can be purchased from $49.95* to $144.50*.

Slightly higher in West and South. Subject to change without notice.*

Furniture for casual living—featured by stores from coast to coast

DAYSTROM CORPORATION, Olean, N.Y. Daystrom Pacific Corporation, Pasadena, Calif.

-it's DAYSTROM furniture !

AN ATF ASSOCIATE

Don't worry! All Daystromite table tops are laminated plastic —resist heat, scratches, stains! They're even cigarette-proof!

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

true beauty and quality

In the genuine Betsy Ross Spinet, you get the perfect combination of musical excellence, exquisite styling and the finest in piano construction.

This beautiful instrument will give your home new character . . . will give your family a permanent source of inspiration, relaxation and entertainment.

Children and adults find new pleasure in playing the Betsy Ross Spinet because of its glorious tone, responsive touch and full volume.

See and play the latest models at your dealer . . . who will gladly arrange terms to suit you.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company Inc., builders of world renowned Lester Grand Pianos.

ONE name quality price sold by America's foremost piano dealers

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

LESTER PIANO MANUFACTURING CO. INC., LESTER 13, PA.

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home (Enclose 10c for postage)

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone No _____ State_____ J 4A

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 27 William Street, New York 5, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 94)

"I guess he was upset about me," I said, "answering the phone that way."

"Oh, no," Betty said. "George never loses his temper. He's very calm. Nothing excites him. George says you never gain anything by losing your temper."

"Very interesting," I said, and we parted on that note.

I was getting worried. If I had been George on the long-distance phone I'd have blown my top. But George was too smart for that, and I began to get a picture of him I didn't like. For the first time I began to get scared that this wouldn't turn out right after all, that she was really going east to marry George.

We took off about eight the next morning. I plugged along behind her through New Mexico into Texas. Then suddenly the car began going arrah-arrah and then clunk-clunk, and I rolled into a gas station sounding like a boiler factory on wheels. I sat there in my beat-up old jalopy watching Betty disappear down the road.

A MECHANIC came out and gave me the bad news. "You burned out a bearing," he said. "You can rest easy for a spell and enjoy the great state of Texas."

"You put this car in shape," I told him. "I'm going to hit the road. I have to catch up with a girl I'm trying to take back to California."

"Luck to you, boy," he said. "Only why go to California? Stay in Texas. Texas has everything. The biggest ——"

"Yeah, I know," I said. Texans are nice people, but the way they brag about their state, it's a crime.

I went out to the highway and started flagging cars. I waited quite a spell before anyone took pity on me, then finally a car stopped and I got in. The fellow who picked me up drove like mad. I didn't know where Betty would be stopping, and every little town we hit I almost snapped my head off swiveling it from one motel to another, looking for her car. It got dark finally and I gave up and leaned my head back against the cushion.

The next thing I knew the sun was shining. The driver said, "A fine guy you are. I pick you up so I'll have someone to talk to while I drive all night and you calk off as soon as it gets dark."

I rubbed the sleep out of my eyes. There was a lake on my right. "Where are we?" I said.

"Oklahoma," he said. "That's Lake Overholser."

We rode on and at the outskirts of Oklahoma City we came to an alternate route around the town.

"Let me out here," I said.

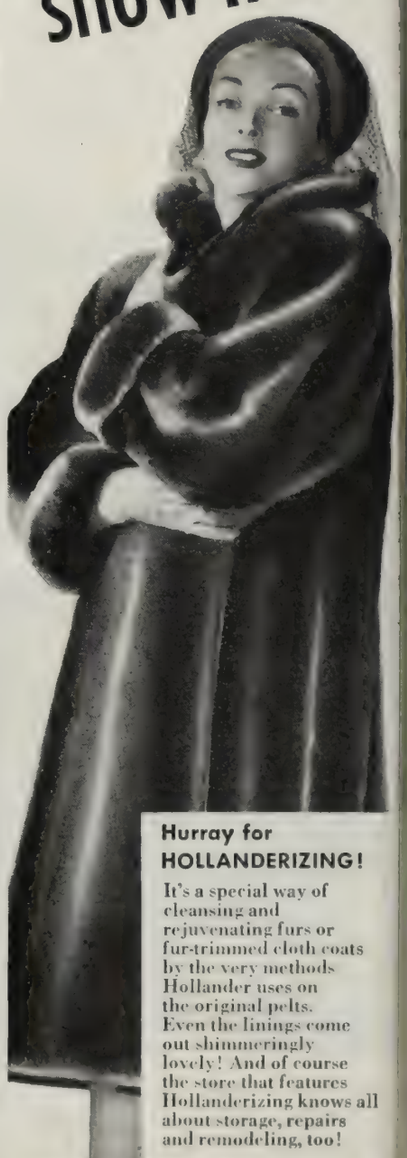
Betty was somewhere west of me, I knew that much. She had to come along 66. She might go straight through the city or she might take the alternate road around through Britton. All I cared about was that she had to go past the road where I was standing.

I put my suitcase down on the ground and sat on it. I didn't dare get something to eat, because I might miss her. I sat there and starved and every car that came by dropped a layer of dust over me. I sat there and the cars went z-z-zoom by me and I almost began to think I should have stayed home and married a wholesome, shapely California girl.

I finally got groggy looking for New Jersey license plates. I was seeing double and my eyelids had lead weights hanging on them. My head was bobbing up and down and then suddenly the car backed up and there was Betty staring down at me, her mouth a big round O, and she was more beautiful than ever.

"For heaven's sakes alive," she said.

I stood up and threw my suitcase in the car and climbed in. I sat down and the dust flew off me the way it does from an old sofa. "If you'd married me in California," I said through the dust, "we could have avoided this."



"Joe," she said, "you're getting to be quite a problem."

She drove on and I sat back and watched her hands on the wheel. Small, square, capa-

I WANTED TO hide IN MY OLD FUR COAT

NOW I WANT TO show it off!

Hurray for HOLLANDERIZING!

It's a special way of cleansing and rejuvenating furs or fur-trimmed cloth coats by the very methods Hollander uses on the original pelts. Even the linings come out shimmeringly lovely! And of course the store that features Hollanderizing knows all about storage, repairs and remodeling, too!

Ordinary cleaning is not enough . . . Your furs need Hollanderizing

LOOK IN YOUR POCKET! Every Hollanderized fur coat is tagged and has these lipstick tissues in the pocket . . . giving valuable tips on fur care.

ble-looking hands. But I'd have preferred watching them picking oranges in California.

We stopped at a motel finally and the manager was very cordial. Then he noticed that Betty didn't have a wedding ring and he got excited and said he ran a respectable motel.

I slapped some dust off my pants. "You never catered to a more respectable couple," I said. "I have chased her across the desert and over the mountains and haven't even kissed her. Give the lady a cabin and give me one."

He was confused, but he rented us the cabins. A shower washed the Oklahoma terrain off me. We went out and had dinner and Betty was very pensive when we came back.

She sat on her porch steps studying road maps. She was planning to stay in a small-town hotel in Illinois the next night. She had wired George to that effect.

"He worries about me," she said. "He was scared of my making the trip alone."

"Well, call the guy up," I said. "Tell him I'm with you and he won't be scared any longer."

Betty looked thoughtfully at me. "I'd rather have him scared," she said.

We pulled out the next morning, left Missouri in the afternoon, crossing the river into Illinois, and finally reached the hotel Betty had wired for reservations. It was a mistake. The clerk sat back of the desk, hands hooked in his suspenders. He tossed a couple of keys on the counter and allowed as how his sciatica prevented him from showing us our rooms.

We left the luggage upstairs, had dinner in a drugstore and then went back to the flea bag.

Betty said, "Do you think there are bugs? I'll be afraid to go to sleep."

"Let me take a look," I said. I went in and turned on the lights and pulled back the bedcovers. No bugs. I took off the sheet and looked at the mattress, and removed the mattress, and scrutinized the frame. No bugs. "Nothing to worry about," I said, and the telephone rang. I picked up the receiver. "How yah doin', George?" I said. "I'll put Betty right on."

I handed her the telephone.

"George," she said. Her face turned red and then she was glaring at me. "Did it sound like the same man, George?" she said. "Well, George, dear, I'm afraid it was the same man. I know it sounds incredible, and of course I can explain everything. . . . It's sweet of you to say you trust me ——"

I went out and closed the door behind me, letting the lovers chat in privacy.

We left early the next morning and went on across Illinois and Indiana into Ohio on Route 40.

"How do you feel about me in Ohio?" I said. "Do you love me more in Ohio than you did in Oklahoma?"

She looked at me and shook her head. "What in the world am I going to do with you in Plainville, New Jersey?" she said. "What will my mother and dad think?"

"George was mad last night, wasn't he?" I said. "I bet he carried on something fierce."

"You just don't know George," Betty said. "Of course he was very curious. But he never screams or shouts. I told him all about you, and he just laughed. He thought it was very funny."

"Oh, he did?" I said, and I felt the self-confidence oozing out of me, and it wasn't just because I was a long way from California. This George was turning out to be a bear cat.

Betty was very quiet. Maybe I was preying on her mind. She kept studying me sideways and sighing to herself, and I was thinking of George with those nerves of steel and feeling lower by the minute.

After a long time Betty said, "Well, I guess we're getting into Pittsburgh," and some time after that I said, "Well, now we have Pittsburgh behind us."

That was the way the dialogue went. Not what you would describe as the clarion call of hot-blooded youth.

It kept up that way until about three o'clock in the afternoon a day and a half later when Betty began getting excited as all get out. Her eyes lit up and then suddenly she squealed and shouted, "We're in New Jersey. Isn't it beautiful?"

"Lovely," I said, and reached forward and turned on the windshield wipers. "It might be pretty," I said, "if I could only see it."

"Just a shower. It won't last long."

It lasted for about two hours and then the sun came out and we passed a sign which read "Welcome to Plainville."

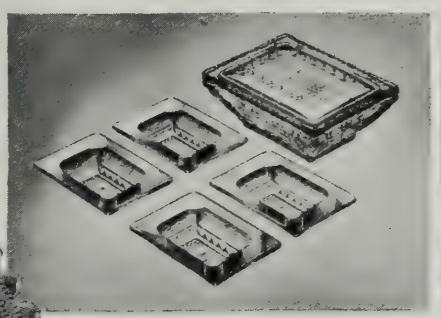
"What in the world am I going to do with you?" Betty said.

It seemed like a problem and I didn't really have any suggestions. I couldn't think of a darn thing.

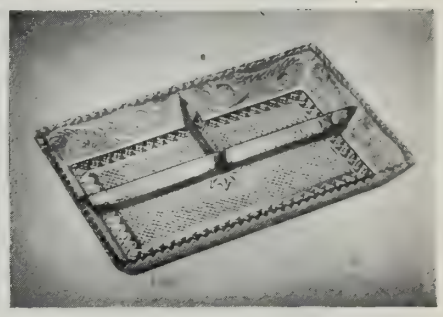
"Your folks have a spare room?" I said.

She shook her head and sighed. "I've been trying to think how to explain you to mom and dad since Joplin, Missouri," she said, "and I haven't got anywhere."

She turned a corner and pulled into a driveway before a small Colonial house. The front



"I've got bad news for you—school holidays begin a week earlier this year."



DUNCAN'S Sandwich

Lace Glass

in Golden Gift Boxes

6-piece Cigarette Set. For coffee or cocktail table. $3.00

10½-inch 3-compartment Celery and Relish. Also used for cheese, crackers or candy and nuts. $3.00

3-piece Mayonnaise Set. For whipped cream and sauces, too. $2.25

12-inch Deviled Egg Plate. A hard-to-get item. $3.75

14-piece Party Set. Two sets give you enough crystal for two tables of bridge. $9.90

5-piece Condiment Set. Oil-and-vinegar and salt-and-pepper on partitioned handled tray. $4.25

12-piece Starter Set. Lace Glass fits perfectly in Early American, Victorian and Modern interiors, with Colonial homes, and maple furniture, yet is appropriate in any setting.

Goblets, sherbets and plates. $9.60

*Prices higher in West and Southwest

Duncan

"The Loveliest Glassware in America"

The Duncan & Miller Glass Company
Washington, Pennsylvania

☐ Send me the folder on Sandwich Lace Glass
☐ Tell me nearest dealer handling Lace Glass

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

true beauty and quality

In the genuine Betsy Ross Spinet, you get the perfect combination of musical excellence, exquisite styling and the finest in piano construction.

This beautiful instrument will give your home new character . . . will give your family a permanent source of inspiration, relaxation and entertainment.

Children and adults find new pleasure in playing the Betsy Ross Spinet because of its glorious tone, responsive touch and full volume.

See and play the latest models at your dealer . . . who will gladly arrange terms to suit you.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company Inc., builders of world renowned Lester Grand Pianos.

ONE name quality price sold by America's foremost piano dealers

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

LESTER PIANO MANUFACTURING CO. INC., LESTER 13, PA.

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone No._____ State_____ J 4A

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 27 William Street, New York 5, N. Y.

or opened and a buxom, motherly-looking oman came flying down the front steps, fol- "awed by a stooped old man with a pipe in his outh.

hi Betty landed in her mother's arms, and hi len her father's. All three of them were chat- lo ring like magpies, then suddenly the con- ersation died and they were all staring at me.

or Betty swallowed a couple of times. "This is Ir. Tindall," she said finally.

or "How do you do?" I said. I shook hands mith both of them. They didn't say anything. ar hey just stared at me.

lil Then Betty's father recovered his powers tlf speech. "George will be over in about three thinutes," he said.

G "Heavens, I look a fright," Betty said, and an into the house.

I Her mother took another look at me and Mhen ran after Betty. Her father just kept btaring at me.

ar "Well," I said, trying to make conversa- bion, "we had quite a trip."

bi "Oh, you did, hey?" said Betty's father. dHis eyes got a little red.

He didn't seem to want to talk about the Arip, so I changed the subject. "Don't you nhink Betty looks wonderful?" I said. "Cali- "ornia was certainly good for her."

gi "Well," he said, "mother and I were thinking of going out now that our little girl is go- "ng to be married. In fact, I had it all ar- wanged, but now mother says she won't go. foShe says she can't bear to be three thousand miles away from her gittle girl."

ev "You'd love it out here," I said. "And pe have just the place stor you. A lovely two- edroom house in a flaine neighborhood anvith a view of the stnountains. They're masking sixteen, but I Bhink I can get it tcor you for twelve svhousand."

in Betty came out uthen with her mother, cand just then a car pulled up and a man Tumped out of the car.

ySomehow I had pictured George as a dman who would be bad for Betty. But gthis fellow made me feel like a junior in high school. He was tall and lean and it was wtrue he was older than Betty, but he was just sold enough to look dignified. He looked past me as though I were a tree growing on the hlawn and then went over to Betty. He put his arms around her and she kissed him.

h Well, I thought, this was it. I had chased a agirl three thousand miles to watch her kiss somebody else. I went over and shook hands with Betty's father. I shook hands with her tlmother.

m "I guess I'd better be getting back home," mI said. "Can anyone tell me which way is BCalifornia?"

g GEORGE gave me an amused look. "Are you sathe young man who kept answering the bophone?" he said. "Do you mean to say you stnade the trip all the way across just to turn around? Why?"

ca "To try and persuade her to marry me," I toaid.

ri I still thought Betty and I were right for each other, but you can't kidnap a girl—not lichese times. I had done everything I could.

ey "Well, Betty," I said, "so long. And good Muck with George. I guess he's all right; anysuway, you think he is. That's what counts."

Be Maybe he was engaged to her, maybe he rouas going to marry her—I didn't care. I eveidn't care that he was standing right beside 's. I gave Betty a kiss that she'd remember Intil I got west at least as far as Ohio.

anc I pulled away from her, and even though off George did have nerves of steel, he wasn't youking it so well. George had pushed his jaw thrut at me.

this "Relax, George," I said.

"I wanted to make one of those fast-getaway a pmarks, I wanted to leave them laughing.

Sut I couldn't get any words past the lump her my throat. I stood there like a dummy and took a last look at Betty before heading for the setting sun. Betty's eyes were like saucers.

George laughed again; he had recovered his good humor. "I guess that's the typical Hollywood touch, Betty," he said. "Chasing you all the way across the country for a final kiss. Pretty corny, if you ask me."

"It was not corny," Betty said. She was excited. "It was the most beautiful thing that ever happened to me. I could cry, it was so beautiful."

GEORGE still smiled, but he looked a little annoyed. "Now, Betty," he said. "I know you. You're very impressionable. Don't build this up into life's great romance. After all, the whole idea of your going back there to live is preposterous."

"Why is it?" Betty said. "Why shouldn't I live there if I want to? You've never even been there, George Willoughby, so what right do you have to stand here and say nasty things about California?"

George was beginning to look a little harried. "I didn't say anything nasty. You hate the place, you know you hate it. Every letter you wrote you said you hated it."

Betty's father and mother hadn't said a word. They just stood there looking confused.

"Well, George," I began, trying to be helpful, "you see by now Betty has a different perspective ——"

"You keep out of this," George snapped. "I'm just saying that Betty hates California I'm just ——"

"I heard you the first time, George,' Betty said. "You don't have to keep standing there and repeating like a parrot that I hate California. I'm not going to argue with you about it, George. It's just too silly for words. There's no reason for you to fly off the handle."

George was breathing hard. "I'm not flying off the handle," he said. "I was only saying you hate ——"

"There you go again," Betty said. "You keep repeating yourself, George, and there's no sense ——"

"Will you kindly allow me to finish what I'm saying?" George said.

Everyone was quiet. George got very calm again.

"I know you, Betty," he said. "You have a very sympathetic nature. You've been engulfed in this romantic haze, and the only reason you're defending California now is because you're sorry for this young man." George was very impressive. He sounded like a district attorney summing up a case for a not-too-bright jury.

Betty had listened intently. Then she put a hand on his arm. "You've almost got it right, George," she said. "It isn't California I'm defending; you're right about that. It's Joe. But I'm not sorry for him." She came down the walk toward me. "I'm going with you, Joe," she said. "Where thou goest, I will go. Even to California, Joe."

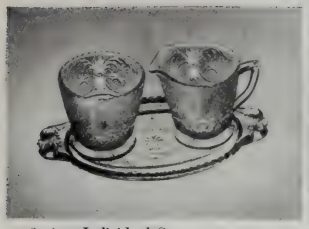
"Betty," George said, "you ——" Then he stopped, because he saw it was no use, and went over to his car shaking his head.

I felt a little sorry for him. He was a nice guy, but set in his ways, as an older man will get. He was probably insisting to himself as he drove off that Betty hated California. A fellow like that, he'd be a little tough to live with for a vivacious girl like Betty.

Betty's parents were still mixed up, but they got over it. They were over it completely two weeks later when the four of us landed in California. They fell in love with the Sunny Southland as soon as they saw it, and said so.

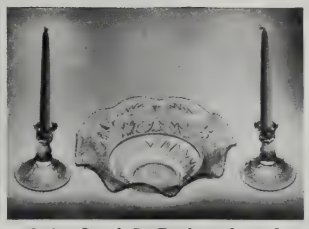
"We'll be very happy here," Betty's father said.

Betty looked up at me. She smiled and started to say something and then instead she sneezed. She was still the most beautiful girl in the great state of California.



THE END

Bargain in a Garden



By Julie Sloane

If I, O Lord, divide the roots
And add, O Lord, the seeds,
Wilt multiply, O Lord, the shoots . . .
If I subtract the weeds?

DUNCAN'S Sandwich Lace Glass in Golden Gift Boxes

3-piece Individual Sugar and Cream Set. Nice for bridge prizes. $1.75

3-piece Console Set. Bowl may be used for flowers or fruit. Only $4.00

This 16-inch hand-made Hostess or Torte Plate is one of the loveliest pieces of crystal made in America. Early Americans used it as a decoration, as well as for utility . . . hanging it in windows, placing it in corner cupboards. It is used for cake, sandwiches, hors d'oeuvres, etc. In a gift box, only $5.00

6-piece Cigarette Set. For coffee or cocktail table. $3.00

10½-inch 3-compartment Celery and Relish. Also used for cheese, crackers or candy and nuts. $3.00

3-piece Mayonnaise Set. For whipped cream and sauces, too. $2.25

12-inch Deviled Egg Plate. A hard-to-get item. $3.75

14-piece Party Set. Two sets give you enough crystal for two tables of bridge. $9.90

5-piece Condiment Set. Oil-and-vinegar and salt-and-pepper on partitioned handled tray. $4.25

12-piece Starter Set. Lace Glass fits perfectly in Early American, Victorian and Modern interiors, with Colonial homes, and maple furniture, yet is appropriate in any setting. Goblets, sherbets and plates. $9.60

Prices higher in West and Southwest*

A breath of old New England—

You can find old Duncan glass in antique shows. You can see it on museum shelves. You come upon it again and again in collectors' books on old American glass. One old Duncan pattern has been among the top 10 collectors' items. Duncan Glass has a unique place in the affections of millions of American women.

The Duncan hand-made Lace Glass is a faithful reproduction of one of the best of the old Sandwich patterns from Cape Cod. Our forefathers called it "star and scroll"—early writers said this design "sparkled like the dew-moistened leaves in early morning."

We have taken the most popular items in this famous Duncan pattern and have grouped them into gift sets. Each set is gift-packed in a golden box. When you give one of these, you give a gift with a history. Ask for them in your department, jewelry or gift stores, or send us the coupon.

THE DUNCAN & MILLER GLASS COMPANY, Washington, Penna.

Duncan

"The Loveliest Glassware in America"

The Duncan & Miller Glass Company
Washington, Pennsylvania

☐ Send me the folder on Sandwich Lace Glass
☐ Tell me nearest dealer handling Lace Glass

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

PHOTOS BY STUART

Chicken Supreme—alternate layers of chicken, ham, water chestnuts and peas.

Date-and-nut lemon soufflé—a sure success.

Conversation Piece

Serving the first course outdoors gives variety of setting, is easy on the hostess.

By RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

A BIG workout, followed by a keen appetite, followed by the satisfaction of a delicious meal—that's a good formula for a June party. In fact, it's a good formula for a party any month, weather permitting. Good, that is, for everybody but a hostess who has to run out on the games early in order to do her kitchen work; but if she can play as long as anybody, and then whisk up a meal that has everyone goggle-eyed, she can enjoy the formula as much as her guests do. The trick is to plan a meal so that if you are the hostess you can stay on the tennis court or wherever until the last minute, and need no more time for your own (Continued on Page 102)

ONCE upon a time Goldilocks was out buying her silverplate and she came to a store that showed her three spoons. One spoon was an ordinary spoon with no form of wear protection at all.

THE next spoon she saw was one of the extra-plated kinds.

BUT the third spoon was something special. It had these...

It was a Holmes & Edwards Spoon... and like all the most used spoons and forks in this really finer silverplate—it was inlaid with two blocks of Sterling Silver at the backs of bowls and handles to stay lovelier longer.

When she heard this Goldilocks ran all the way home... with her chest of Holmes & Edwards, of course!

Goldilocks and the Three Spoons

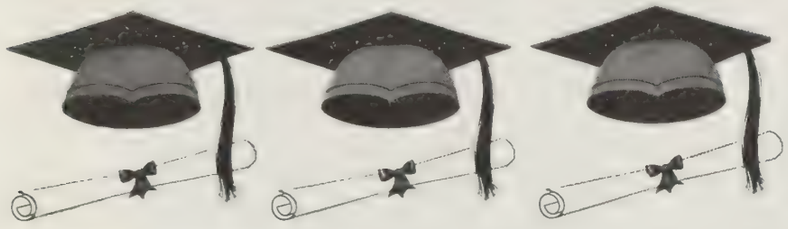
HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID° SILVERPLATE

HERE AND HERE
It's Sterling Inlaid

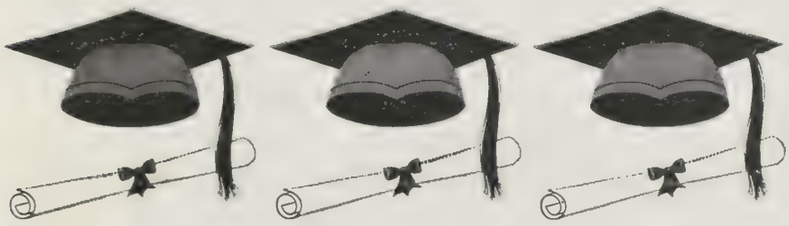
MADE BY THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO.



Youth Danish Princess ★ New Spring Garden Lovely Lady
52 piece set for 8, $68.50. All patterns made in U. S. A.

★
SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER! 4 FIVE O'CLOCK TEASPOONS FOR ONLY $1.89. These lovely spoons in the new Spring Garden Design are ideal for desserts, ice cream and sherbet. At all jewelry and department stores for a limited time only.

Copyright 1949, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Div., Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd. °Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.



Top Honors!

Tops for automatic cooking
New Gas ranges cook complete oven dinners by clock control. Gas turns on and off by itself!

Tops for selective speed
Dozens of "just right" heats instantly without waiting — automatically without matches!

Tops for foolproof baking
Automatic thermostats on air-circulated Gas ovens give you the same exact heat all over!

Tops for sizzling steaks
Smokeless flame broiling! Any kind you want from rare to well-done with no pre-heating!

Tops for streamlined design
Cleaner thanks to new non-clog burners. Cooler because of new extra-heavy insulation!

Tops for all-round economy
Feature for feature, new Gas ranges cost far less to buy, to maintain, and to operate!

Gas has got it!

Smart cooks all over the country know that the surest way to win success is with a new automatic Gas range. Share their know-how by choosing this TAPPAN "CP" Gas range or any other of the fine "makes" built to "CP" standards — now at your Gas company or appliance store. Then for the next wise move in your "New Freedom Gas Kitchen," get a Servel Gas refrigerator. It stays silent, lasts longer!

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

(Continued from Page 100)

special part of the program than the others need for cooling off, changing, nose powdering or what not. Well, the menu I'm going to give you will turn the trick neatly.

We'll start, California style, with a salad, a big mix-your-own affair. There will be a lovely bouquet of salad greens flanked by bowls of strawberries, melon balls, grapefruit and orange slices and squares of frozen-cheese-and-pineapple salad. And we'll have both French dressing and a spicy boiled dressing so that everyone can please his own taste. Everything on the salad tray will be icy-cold, of course, and what a refreshing start this is to a meal on a warm summer day.

After the salad we'll need only one main dish, chicken supreme. It combines chicken, ham, water chestnuts and peas, all built up in layers, and it can be baked either in one large casserole or in individual casseroles. I use individual casseroles often, especially for buffet parties, because they keep the food piping hot and make the service quick and easy. With the chicken supreme there will be a hot eggplant relish—hot in temperature, I mean, although it's fairly highly seasoned too—and thick chunks of herb-buttered bread.

Now the dessert—and this is one of my stand-bys: date-and-nut lemon soufflé. Maybe someday I'll find a customer who doesn't like this dessert, but that hasn't happened yet, and "like" is a decided understatement. Delicious and spectacular as they are, most soufflés must be mixed just before they go into the oven and eaten the minute they come out of it, which makes them completely impractical for our prepreparation pattern. But this soufflé can be served cold or hot, whichever you prefer—in this case we'd better prefer cold—and it won't give you a single anxious moment, because it's a sure-fire success every time.

If you like, you can turn this into a half-indoor, half-outdoor service deal; and I'll talk more about that later. The recipes are planned for six or eight people.

SALAD

Get as wide an assortment of salad greens as you find available in the grocery store or your garden. Boston lettuce, escarole, water cress and chicory are all good, and if you happen to have spinach or mustard greens growing in your garden, a few very young and tender leaves of these should be included. Their tangy flavor does a lot to pep up a salad. Be sure that all the greens are washed and chilled in advance.

FROZEN-CHEESE-AND-PINEAPPLE SQUARES

Let 9 ounces cream cheese stand at room temperature to soften. Drain juice from 1 No. 2 can crushed pineapple. Soak 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in 3 tablespoons water, add 3 tablespoons pineapple juice and set this over steam or in a pan of boiling water until gelatin is dissolved. Mix this with remainder of pineapple juice, add cream cheese, stir with a fork until fairly well mixed, then beat with rotary beater until smooth. Add ¾ cup mayonnaise, the crushed pineapple, ¼ cup finely chopped green pepper, 3 tablespoons lemon juice and 1 teaspoon salt. Whip ¾ cup heavy cream and fold this into cheese mixture until thoroughly blended. Pour into ice-cube trays to the depth of 1½ inches, and freeze about 4 hours in freezing compartment of refrigerator or in a freezer unit. I always use the freezer for frozen desserts or salads, to avoid changing the temperature control of the refrigerator.

STRAWBERRIES, MELON BALLS, GRAPEFRUIT AND ORANGE SLICES

Get fine big strawberries, wash and stem them as nearly the last minute as possible. Put them in dishes in which they are to be served, and store in refrigerator.

Using a ball cutter, cut balls of honeydew melon. Put them in dish in which they will be served and store in refrigerator. (Making melon balls is a wasteful business unless you use what is left in the melon after the balls are cut, which is quite a lot of melon, as you know. I always scrape every bit of it out,

BEST NEW FOOD IDEA IN YEARS!

Delicious brown beef gravy in cans—all ready to serve! It's rich with old-fashioned roasting pan flavor!

Wonderful poured over meat, potatoes, hot biscuits—all sorts of things. Makes them taste better and look better.

No mixing, no stirring. Just open, heat, pour. Keep a few cans always handy. Costs pennies to serve . . . helps save dollars on your monthly food bill.

Franco-American BEEF GRAVY

- Adds taste and glamor to economy foods
- Livens up leftovers
- Enriches slim meals
- Grand on bread for children's snacks

DELICIOUS BEEF GRAVY ALL READY TO SERVE

"Ballerina"

thrills you with its beauty

A new design of captivating grace and charm, "Ballerina" colored glaze dinnerware brings to your table the vibrant beauty of the ballet! It is a shape of subtle contours wholly in the modern manner, accented by smart, tasteful color styling. In Jonquil Yellow, Periwinkle Blue, Jade Green and Dove Gray. Guaranteed ovenproof! An appropriate, practical dinnerware for you and for gifts! Inexpensively priced at good stores. See it now.

UNIVERSAL POTTERIES, INC.
Cambridge, Ohio

mash it and combine it with strawberries, raspberries or blueberries for dessert or first course of another meal.)

For the orange and grapefruit slices, use 1 large or 2 medium grapefruits and 3 big navel oranges. Cut the rind from the fruit—don't peel it off—and cut out the sections with a very sharp knife. Put the grapefruit slices in the center of the dish in which they will be served and surround them with orange slices—or vice versa, whichever you think looks prettier—and store in refrigerator.

SPICY BOILED DRESSING

Boil 1 clove garlic chopped and 1 tablespoon pickling spices in 1 cup water for 5 minutes after boiling point is reached, and strain. In the top of a double boiler melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, add 1 tablespoon salad oil and blend in 3 tablespoons flour. Slowly stir in the hot spiced water and add ¼ cup vinegar, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 1 teaspoon salt, 3 tablespoons sugar, 1 teaspoon paprika, ⅛ teaspoon red pepper, and 1 scant teaspoon dry mustard blended with a little water. Set over boiling water and cook, stirring often, until smooth and thick. Chill and stir in ¾ cup sour cream.

FRENCH DRESSING

Use jar French dressing, which can be made as far in advance as you like.

To assemble salad, cut frozen pineapple-and-cheese salad into squares, put them in serving dishes and garnish with water cress. Stand greens in a fairly deep bowl so that they will look more or less like a bouquet, and put the bowl in the center of your salad tray. If you are using a small round table instead of a tray, put bowl in the center of that. Surround it with the dishes of fruit and frozen-cheese salad and you'll have a very pretty picture, good enough to eat, fortunately. The salad dressings can be served in separate bowls; or if you have a two-way bowl, use that. If possible, have your salad plates in the refrigerator a long time so that they will be cold also.

CHICKEN SUPREME

You can use either a stewing or a roasting chicken for this dish, and it should weigh about 4½ pounds after it is cleaned. Put it whole, breast down, in a pot, cover with boiling water and cook over high heat until boiling point is reached. Lower heat to simmer, cover pot, and after 1 hour add 1½ teaspoons salt. Continue cooking until chicken is tender. Stewing chickens require more cooking than roasting chickens, and young birds, whatever the kind, cook quicker than old ones, so it's impossible to be exact about timing. Just poke gingerly with a fork and you can tell. When cooking time is up, remove chicken from pot and, when cold enough to handle, slice meat from bones. You'll get nice, neat slices from breast and second joints, and snippets from the other departments, but get as many neat pieces as you can. Return bones to pot and boil at least 45 minutes longer. If it looks as if you would have more than a quart of broth when finished, remove the lid so that evaporation can reduce the quantity. Strain broth, and when cold, skim off fat from top.

Cut 1 pound precooked ham into cubes about ½ inch square. You can buy cold boiled ham for this, or you can boil the ham yourself. Cut 20 to 25 water chestnuts into thin slices. If you can't get water chestnuts, blanch 1 cup almonds, cut into slivers the long way, and cook in butter or margarine until delicately browned.

Now for the sauce, which is very important to this dish. Delicately brown 2 minced cloves garlic in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, add 3 cups chicken broth, 2 cups top milk, 2 tablespoons catchup, ¼ teaspoon saffron, 1 teaspoon mono sodium glutamate (I'm going to stop calling that "gourmet powder," or any other fancy name), ⅛ teaspoon sugar and ⅛ teaspoon cayenne or Nepaul pepper. (Saffron imparts a delicate but delightful taste and a lovely yellow color to the sauce, but it really isn't essential, so don't worry if you can't get it. Try, however, because it's a good thing to have on your shelf.) Bring mixture to a boil. Skin 4 tomatoes, remove seeds and watery pulp and cut them into small pieces. Add tomatoes and stir in 10 tablespoons cornstarch mixed with ½ cup milk. If you like, mix cornstarch with ½ cup sherry instead of milk. Stir constantly until mixture boils. It will be quite thick. Taste sauce for seasoning. It may need a little more salt and a pinch more of sugar.

In a large casserole or individual baking dishes, put a layer of chicken slices, a layer of ham cubes, a layer of water chestnuts or toasted almonds and a layer of sauce. Repeat these layers until casserole or baking dishes are full, finishing with the sauce. I always put the scrappy pieces of chicken in the bottom and save the best-looking ones for the top. All this can be done the day before the party. The job is finished except for a border of cooked peas and a good heating in the oven before serving.

The peas should be cooked as nearly the last minute as you can manage—that is, the last minute before guests arrive. Put ½ cup chicken broth in top of double boiler over direct heat, and when it reaches the boiling point add 2 cups frozen peas—about 1 package—or 2 cups fresh peas, place top of double boiler over boiling water and cook until peas are tender—11 or 12 minutes. This, by the way, is an excellent method for cooking peas, I think. It makes them puffy and it eliminates the danger of burning, which is something of a menace when it comes to cooking this vegetable. If you have never burned a pot of peas you're a better

"Why can't you be late for dinner like other men?"

Yes, Onliwon Towels make all others seem old-fashioned

You'll say that, too . . . once you see how Onliwon Towels make short work of jobs ordinary paper towels can't do. They work in soapy water—even with scouring powder! Use them for washing dishes, scrubbing pans, tubs, sinks. They're super-strong — won't fall apart when wet. Footprints, finger-marks and spills wipe up in a flash with this big, double-size towel. Use them on windows and glassware . . . they leave no lint.

Convenient, too! With only one hand you take a towel from the beautiful Onliwon Holder — all cut and ready for use.

Try Onliwon Towels . . . and you'll never be without them.

Get Onliwon Towels and Onliwon Holders at Your Grocer's

If your grocer cannot supply you right away, use the coupon below. The big package of folded Onliwon Household Towels equals two rolls of ordinary paper towels . . . saves you money. The gay red, green or ivory Onliwon Plastic Holders will dress up your kitchen, bath and laundry. A.P.W. Products Co., Inc., 6 Bridge Street, Albany 1, N. Y.

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER

A. P. W. Products Co., Inc.,
6 Bridge Street, Albany 1, N.Y.

ALBANY

☐ Send postpaid 1 Onliwon Holder and a package of Onliwon Towels. I enclose 60c.

☐ Send postpaid 1 Onliwon Holder. I enclose 30c.

Make my holder ( ) red ( ) green ( ) ivory

Offer good in continental U. S. only; expires Sept. 30, 1949

Name.....

Address.....

City..... State.....

Brighter Breakfasts pay big dividends!

ZESTY SWIFT'S PREMIUM—THE BACON AMERICA LIKES BEST—sparks the brighter breakfasts that help make the day's work easy. It's rich—very rich—in food energy. And it's gloriously rich in flavor. Swift's Premium, you know, is the bacon with the sweet smoke taste . . . famed for mildness yet full of zest. No other bacon has that special flavor, and no other even approaches Swift's Premium in popularity.

COOKING IT RIGHT IS MIGHTY EASY: Place slices of Swift's Premium Bacon in cold frying pan. Do not overcrowd. Cook slowly, turning to cook evenly. Drain on absorbent paper. For crisp bacon, pour off fat as it accumulates..

Swift's Premium

The Bacon with the sweet smoke taste!

man than I am. When peas are tender, stir in 1 teaspoon cornstarch mixed with a little water, bring to a boil, and spoon the peas in a border around the rim of the casserole or individual baking dishes.

Now you can forget the whole deal until you come into the kitchen to arrange your salad. At that time put the chicken supreme in a moderate oven—350° F.—and by the time you've finished eating the salad, it will be ready to serve. If you're using individual baking dishes they'll need a shorter heating period than a large casserole, naturally, so if you find the salad course becoming too merry and lengthy you may want to turn off the heat a little sooner. The oven will retain enough heat to keep them piping hot.

EGGPLANT RELISH

Put 3 tablespoons salad oil in a skillet, add 2 cloves minced garlic, 1 cup finely chopped onion, and cook to a golden brown. Add 2 cups eggplant cut into tiny cubes, 5 whole pimientos cut into small chunks, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 2 tablespoons catchup, 2 teaspoons salt, ½ teaspoon freshly ground pepper, ½ teaspoon paprika, ½ teaspoon dried tarragon or 2 teaspoons chopped fresh tarragon, 1 teaspoon prepared horse-radish and 1 teaspoon sugar.

Cook, stirring often, until eggplant is tender but not mushy. Make the relish a day or even two days in advance and reheat before serving—and do try it sometime with boiled beef.

HERB-BUTTERED BREAD

This is a perfect meal for a loaf of herb-buttered bread, and we'll cut the loaf so that it can be torn apart in sticklike chunks, which will be handy for mopping up the delicious sauce of the chicken supreme. That thing of not wasting a drop of sauce is a French habit which I strongly endorse.

In making herb butter, there should always be some fresh herbs, even if they have to be supplemented with dried ones, so I'm going to suggest parsley, chives and sweet basil in this recipe. All of us can get parsley with no trouble at all; most of us can get chives, and if not, we can substitute the delicate green tops of small scallions; and if fresh sweet basil isn't available, the dried will do very well in this company.

To ⅓ pound sweet butter—you can use salt butter, but it really should be sweet—add 1 tablespoon finely chopped parsley, 1 heaping tablespoon finely chopped chives or onion tops, 1 scant tablespoon finely chopped fresh sweet basil or ½ teaspoon dried sweet basil, and a few drops of lemon juice. Cream until soft and thoroughly blended.

Remove crusts from a loaf of bread and cut bread into thick slices, almost but not quite through the bottom. Spread each slice generously with the herb butter on both sides, press back into loaf form, and cut again through the middle the long way, being careful not to cut through the bottom. Wrap the loaf well in two thicknesses of brown paper and tie it with twine so that it will be airtight. If you do this the day before, keep it in the refrigerator so that the butter will remain fresh. As you know, sweet butter turns very quickly.

When you are ready to serve the salad, stick the bread in the oven with the chicken supreme. It will be hot when you unwrap it, and if there's any left when the meal is over, I'll be surprised.

LEMON SOUFFLÉ

This recipe will fill a 2-quart baking dish, which can be glass, earthenware, copper or what have you. Sift together 2¼ cups sugar, 5 tablespoons flour and ¼ teaspoon salt. Add 5 tablespoons softened butter or margarine, and cream until blended. Beat 6 egg yolks until light, add 2 cups milk, mix with sugar and flour and blend in ¾ cup lemon juice and grated rind of 3 lemons. Beat 6 egg whites until stiff, fold them into mixture and add 1 cup chopped dates and ¾ cup broken nut meats. Pour into lightly buttered baking dish, set in pan of hot water and bake in preheated moderately slow oven—325° F.—50 minutes.

The soufflé will rise some during baking, but don't expect it to rise high above the rim of the dish as some soufflés will do. When done, the top half will have a fluffy cakelike consistency and the bottom will be a gooey lemon sauce with the dates and nuts swimming around in it. Let it cool and put it in the refrigerator an hour or so before serving time. And do try it hot sometime when your convenience needn't be so carefully considered.

Service. This meal is so perfect for buffet service that I'm not going to waste words on how it could be served at the table, although it most certainly can be served that way if you like. What I do want to suggest is that you try serving half of it outdoors and half indoors. That program will provide variety of setting and it's so easy on the hostess, I think. If the salad is eaten on the terrace or the lawn, you won't be missed while you slip away to get the hot food set out on a table in the dining room or living room. And the remains of the first course can be removed by you, or your helper, if you're lucky enough to have one, behind the scenes. The fewer obvious mechanics involved in serving a meal, the better—and this one deserves a blue ribbon.

Whether or not you use individual baking dishes for the chicken supreme, the main course needs only one plate. The eggplant relish can be served in butter chips or any quite small dishes, or it can be put directly on the plate beside the chicken, and there will be plenty of room left for the bread. If you bake the lemon soufflé in a glass dish, you can make it look very pretty by wrapping a brightly colored napkin around the dish. Fold the napkin on the bias into a band a little wider than the baking dish is high, pull it around tightly, letting it extend slightly above the rim of the dish, and pin it in place. Probably you've been doing this for years, but anyhow it's a good stunt and the napkin does double duty as decoration and insulator. Enough said—I'm off.

NOBODY'S THAT SPECIAL

(Continued from Page 34)

didn't know what a real treasure was, that she had powers of discrimination beyond others'. Of course she didn't say that, but that was what went on in her young mind. It was the beginning of her real aloofness, for up to that time she had been part of the family, even if she couldn't see a joke.

If Peter ate his bread into a shape like a giraffe, and called the family to see, she sat eating neatly and thought he was silly. And when her mother said, "Good heavens! Don't let him get that red apple in the top of our tree!" she gazed at them both as if they were too young to notice.

Peter was a charmer from babyhood. "Mummy, you're pretty. You're pretty as Babar!" he would say. Babar was his toy elephant that he always took to bed.

"Ah, and you have eyes as blue as Gammy's! You little philanderer!" his mother would say, swooping him up with laughter and swinging him to where he could look into the blue eyes of Gammy, the pig that was his penny bank. And they would both giggle.

It wasn't that Eliza didn't think her mother pretty, but she could not make pretty speeches, and she didn't see why her mother was pleased at being told she looked like an elephant. She thought her mother was like a buttercup, but she never said so. She was hurt by not being able to say it and at the same time proud that she knew more what prettiness was than Peter did.

It was that pride that was both her defense and her undoing, for it grew on her in a secret way and became bigger than her love. She wanted to be loved, but there was no compromise in her. Cajolery, flattery were not for her. She knew early that she was dif-erent, and she hugged her difference and ncreased it in a thousand small ways. But vhen Peter flew to his mother's arms or limbed on his father's shoulders or gave his breathless accounts of his daily adventures, he knew what envy was. Yet when her nother said, "And what have you been doing all day, darling?" she would say, "Oh, nothing."

Her mother certainly tried. She had parties for Eliza, she tried to play games with ier, she used her very considerable charm to charm her daughter. She made her little gray pinafores to match her eyes, she praised her papers from school, she tried to tease her ovingly. But with Peter she laughed aloud nd did all sorts of nonsensical things. It was his easy, natural laughter that made Eliza eel she wasn't loved as much as Peter.

When she was eight she told her mother he didn't want a party that year.

"But what do you want to do, darling?" ier mother asked anxiously.

"I want to go to the graveyard," Eliza aid.

"The graveyard?" her mother exclaimed. 'Good heavens, Eliza—what for?"

"I want to look at the names by myself."

Her mother gave her an odd look, but she aid, "Well, it's cheaper than a party," and vhen the day came she took Eliza to the ittle old cemetery in the Episcopal churchard, sat on a bench by the gate and left her here for an hour and a half. And Eliza, as oon as she cast off the uncomfortable sense f her mother sitting there waiting, and naybe laughing at her, wandered among the tones blissfully. She vasn't morbid and didn't hink at all about the people's bones whitening nder the ground. She vas perfectly truthful vhen she said she wanted o look at the names. It vas the carving of letters nd sometimes the little lowers or lambs or angels on the stones hat entranced her.

When she joined her mother, Mrs. Beck aid, as if she could hardly keep from laughng and yet as if she loved Eliza tenderly, 'Well, have fun, darling?"

"Yes." Eliza said.

That night Eliza got up to go to the bathoom and on the way she heard her mother ay, "You'll never, never believe how I spent he afternoon!" She didn't hear any more xcept laughter. She could hear her father's hout above everybody's.

I hate you. I just hate you, Eliza said to herelf in bed. It was love she felt, really, and oneliness. But she didn't know how to show ier love and so she went into her fortress of pride in her difference and stayed there.

For all that other children admired her nd even tried to imitate her, she had few riends. She didn't speak the language of hildhood. She was at the head of her class, nd without great effort, but children bored ier and they knew this and gradually left her lone.

Once she planned a beautiful valentine for ier mother and spent hours making it. Then n Valentine's Day, Peter left a comic valenine on his mother's plate, a picture of a pinsterish schoolma'am and a priggish little oy saying "I'm teacher's pet." He had printed on the bottom "Guess Who?" and is mother kissed the top of his hair and said, 'My pet never had that clean a face!" And Eliza left the beautiful valentine with the ace paper and ribbon in her desk drawer and never put it in the mailbox as she had inended. It was too plain that her mother had oved that awful valentine of Peter's, and if o, she couldn't possibly like the one Eliza nad made. They were not of the same world. 'My pet," her mother had said, in her careess loving voice. And he was, Eliza knew, her pet.

So she had to build up her own inner pleasures, and she did. She loved words and phrases. Not the epic poem, not the great, the spectacular. No, never those, but the perfect word, the small lyric poem, any small pithy bit of wisdom. And she loved the world of nature. Not mountains, not the sea, not great rocks or giant trees, but a leaf floating on the water, a single violet come on suddenly, the face of a Johnny-jump-up, dusk falling and closing in and in till she was alone, little and yet powerful in the middle of it. She had a dress of dotted Swiss and she took a sensuous delight in wearing it and feeling those tiny little dots all over its crispness. She learned to make very small letters and she was proud of her writing. She loved the little notebooks that she filled with microscopic drawings and in which she sometimes copied poems in a space too small for imagining. She often found a perfect pebble, pure white or perhaps with streaks of pink, and these she would carry in her pocket like talismans.

Her mother and father tried, they really tried to make her happy, to include her in their fun. Often they talked about her when they were alone, worried about her.

"I know, John—I know," her mother would say. "I keep telling myself that I mustn't try to make her personality over. But she breaks my heart—really she does, John. She doesn't have any fun. But I can't make her friendships for her—I can't make anyone like her. She has to do part of it. It isn't that we don't make youngsters welcome—you know we do. Heavens, the place is always a bedlam with Peter's gang here—but no one comes to see Eliza, no one at all."

"She'll have to work it out for herself," John Beck said. "It's too bad, but I don't just see what we can do. Any more than we have done. She's at the stage where she thinks she knows a lot more than we do—she'll outgrow that."

A man who boasts about his ancestors confesses that he belongs to a family better off dead than alive.

—OSCAR WILDE.

"I wouldn't be surprised if she did know a lot more than we do. Sometimes she looks as if she knew everything.... I want her smart—or I guess I do—but I want her happy more than anything."

"Maybe she's happy in her own way. I'll admit it doesn't show much, but maybe she is. Don't know how we got a kid with such an I.Q. anyway!"

He grinned at her, trying to comfort her, but he was troubled over Eliza too. He loved her, but he couldn't get close to her. He could take Peter to a ball game, joke with him about a thousand things, but there seemed to be nothing at all that you could do with Eliza that would give her pleasure. At night she always said she had to study, though she didn't, and they knew she didn't. She would go up to her room and make pictures in her notebooks, or read, living as best she could in her secret little world.

She never knew of how her mother said sadly to her father, "Somewhere I've done something wrong. She tells me nothing—absolutely nothing. I haven't the slightest idea what she's thinking."

"Probably just as well," John Beck said dryly.

"But why? Why is she like this? You'd think we didn't love her—that we'd been cruel to her or something."

"Well, we haven't," he said. "Put it down to growing pains."

"But how did she get like this? I can't stand it—I really can't, John."

"Maybe we ought to send her away to school."

"Oh, no—then she could say we were cruel. No, I couldn't do that."

But the next week she did ask Eliza if she wouldn't like to go to camp. "You don't have to, you know," she said lightly. "I just thought maybe you'd think it was fun."

"No, I don't want to go to camp," Eliza said. Her voice left no room for argument.

Nor did Eliza see her mother sitting with Miss Murdy, the guidance teacher, one day. Miss Murdy said, "I want to talk with you about Eliza, Mrs. Beck."

Mrs. Beck sighed and said, "Yes, I expected so. But it won't do any good, I'm afraid, Miss Murdy."

"Then you realize there is a problem?"

"Oh, yes. I realize it," Mrs. Beck said.

Did you realize that you can make a rich, smooth mushroom cream sauce with practically no trouble at all? Use just one can of Campbell's Cream of Mushroom Soup! Delicious in scores of ways. Try this wonderful old Southern dish:

Ham and Egg Shortcake

Biscuit dough for 12 biscuits
1 can Campbell's Cream of Mushroom Soup
½ cup milk
¾ cup diced cooked ham
½ diced pimiento (optional)
3 hard-cooked eggs

Heat oven to 450° F (hot). Roll biscuit dough; cut with 2-inch cutter. Place on baking sheet; bake about 15 minutes or until done. Put soup in saucepan; stir until smooth. Add milk slowly, stirring constantly; heat. Quarter the eggs; add ham, eggs, pimiento. Simmer a few minutes.

Split biscuits and pour about ⅔ of creamed ham and eggs over bottom layer. Replace tops and pour on remainder. Makes 6 servings.

. . . AND FOR THE FINEST TOMATO SAUCE YOU EVER TASTED, USE CAMPBELL'S TOMATO SOUP

Delicious in cooking . . .

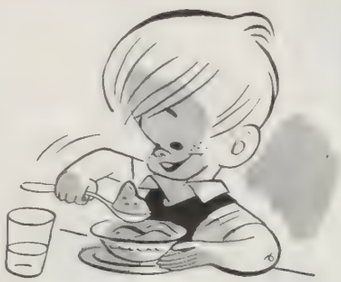
Whenever the recipe calls for tomato sauce, use Campbell's Tomato Soup, just as it comes from the can! Brings out the Better Nature in everything. Try the recipe at the right.

Delicious as a pour-on sauce . . .

It's a rare dish that doesn't gain both in color and flavor by a topping of tangy tomato sauce. Just open a can of Campbell's Tomato Soup, heat, and pour!

Grilled Cheese and Tomato Sandwiches

6 slices bread
6 slices bacon
½ pound American Cheese, sliced
¾ can of Campbell's Tomato Soup



Toast bread on one side under broiler. Cut bacon slices in two, cook until half done. On untoasted side of bread arrange slices of cheese, 2 tablespoons tomato soup (just as it comes from the can), and 2 half-slices bacon. Place under broiler, turned low, until cheese melts. Makes 6 open-faced sandwiches.

● Clip these suggestions for your recipe file

Drink a refreshing glass of Mott's Apple Juice . . .

Spoon up that fresh deliciousness of Mott's Apple Sauce . . .

Spread the bread thick with luscious Mott's Jellies . . .

Toss your salads with grand and mellow Mott's Vinegars.

You'll love all of

MOTT'S APPLE PRODUCTS

Everything grand from Appleland!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

A PARTY-DAY SET at an everyday price!

SALEM CHINA CO.

All of Salem's beautiful patterns are high in quality yet moderate in price. See them at your favorite store.

Send 10¢ to Dept. D for attractive brochure.

American Dinnerware of Distinction

THE SALEM CHINA CO.
SALEM, OHIO

Yours . . .

ELECTRIC MIXER!

ONE of the best-known makes in the country, this Mixer is complete with base, upright and motor, two beaters, two mixing bowls, revolving platform, juice extractor bowl, spout and reamer. It has fifteen speeds with full power on each.

Send sixteen 2-year Ladies' Home Journal subscriptions sold at the U. S. price of $5.00 each or eight 2-year subscriptions for The Saturday Evening Post sold at the U. S. price of $10.00 each (Subs may be new or renewal) and we will send you the mixer, all charges prepaid. Your own subscriptions or subscriptions sold at the Special Gift Prices will not count. No Mixers may be sold for cash. Mixer sent in U. S. only, and offer good until August 31, 1949. Write subscribers' names and addresses on plain paper, with your own. Then mail with check or money order in full amount to 507 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY

"That's half of it, then," Miss Murdy said. "It's not her work, of course. She learns so easily that I think she is often bored."

"I know exactly what Eliza is like, Miss Murdy. I know she's asocial—I know how hard our system is on asocial children. Normalcy in that respect seems to be put far ahead of intellectual progress. But I can't help you, because I have already tried to the utmost of my powers and failed."

"You look like a normal social being," Miss Murdy said.

"Oh, I am. Perfectly normal. And so is my husband. We love people, and fun. But Eliza doesn't—and won't. That seems all there is to it. I'm sorry."

"Why don't you send her to camp? Girls like camp in spite of themselves, once they get there."

"Camp? Do you think I haven't suggested camp, Miss Murdy? No camp—no Sunday school—no parties—no friends at all. . . . And I do assure you I make friends welcome in my house. . . . Please, Miss Murdy, let's just skip it, shall we? I'm entirely on your side, but I can't do anything about it. I've been trying for thirteen years."

"It's a pity," Miss Murdy said slowly. "She has such a fine mind. She's very talented at drawing."

"I know. I know. . . . But she's not even interested in boys. She's self-sufficient—and a girl of thirteen who's self-sufficient is a frightening creature. I'm afraid of her. . . . And Peter is so completely gregarious that it makes it all the more frightening. It's as if we loved Peter more, because we understand him—but we don't, Miss Murdy. There's nothing we wouldn't do for Eliza, if she would let us."

"I understand," Miss Murdy said. "I understand better perhaps than you imagine. When Eliza looks at me, I feel like an ignorant child—though I'm not, you know. And yet—and yet, I feel forever compelled to try to reach her, to try to be her friend. She won't let me and it's become something of an obsession with me. I like her, you see. It hurts me, personally, to have her reject me. So if I, a teacher, can feel that way, I can imagine how much more deeply a mother might feel it. . . . I'm glad you came in, anyway. Perhaps nature will take care of it, Mrs. Beck. Some boy will come along soon and she'll be a child again. It nearly always happens, whether we want it to or not."

They shook hands and parted, friends already, but without any solution for their mutual problem.

WHEN Eliza was fourteen, her mother invited her Cousin Peggy for the summer. It was not a success.

"Eliza," her mother said, "Peggy's your guest. You can't push her off on Peter all the time."

"Oh, she doesn't mind. And I didn't invite her," Eliza said.

"But you're rude to her."

"She doesn't care—she likes going with Peter. I don't."

"Well, you ought to. You'd think you were planning to be a nun, Eliza. Why, when I was fourteen ——" Then she stopped, knowing Eliza would only scorn her mother's gay, carefree life at fourteen. "Even if you want to be an artist, darling," she stumbled on, but with more tenderness, "you have to know people and life. You really do, you know. Even if you just look on—well, you must see life, at least."

Eliza looked almost interested. But she said, "I do see it."

"You can't, poring over a book or drawing all day. You can't, darling. You don't even know what Peggy is like."

"I do too. She's pretty but she's awfully stupid. She just likes to make eyes at the boys—and they're stupid enough to think it's cute. She—she doesn't know anything."

"That's where you're wrong. She knows how, as you said yourself, to make eyes at the boys. And in the long run, you'll find that's an achievement. You see, darling, the world is made up of men and women, and sooner or later you'll want to marry yourself and you'll find that if you don't so much as learn to smile at a man, no man will smile at you."

enjoy the delightfully different flavor of the original

KAUKAUNA KLUB CHEESE FOODS

SIX FLAVORS

FOR COOKING, PARTIES, LUNCHES, SNACKS

• Kaukauna Klub Appetizer has a tantalizing taste appeal imparted to mellowed American Cheddar by skillful hickory smoking and just the right touch of choice spices.

You will also discover a thrilling treat in:

• Kaukauna Klub . . . Original
• Kaukauna Klub . . . Hickory Smoked
• Kaukauna Klub . . . Port Wine
• Kaukauna Klub . . . Garlic
• Kaukauna Klub . . . Onion

At your favorite food store . . . in the familiar stone crocks or links . . . in the refrigerator.

SOUTH KAUKAUNA DAIRY CO., Kaukauna, Wis.

The Nation's Cheese Treat from America's Dairyland

PENNANT BALL-POINT PEN YOUR NAME IN 24K GOLD 50¢
Fine-writing; even flow—same as expen-sive pen. Stream-lined beauty. Money-Back Guarantee. Postpaid. No stamps.
NATION-WIDE, 442 N. Wells St., Dept. 21, Chicago 10, Illinois

INDIVIDUALLY YOURS paper napkins at every meal
CONVENIENT ECONOMICAL

Less work, more fun at picnics, too!

I CLEAN POTS 'n PANS FAST WITHOUT AN OUCH!

"I'll clean your crusty, messy pots and pans quickly, without an 'ouch'! Yes, no 'ouch', because I'm CHORE GIRL . . . the original knitted-copper pot cleaner. I don't splinter, get in your fingers, OR rust. I'm 10¢ everywhere."

CHORE GIRL
Metal Textile Corp., Roselle 12, N.J.
In Canada: Hamilton, Ont.

P.S. "GOLDEN FLEECE is back. If your dealer says 'NO' send his name and 12c for one till I see him." C. G.

THIS SEASON Use TRI-OGEN

World's Largest-Selling
3-Way ROSE "GROWers"

Here's the secret of fine Roses. Simply keep your plants PROTECTED against insects and blights—and keep them well FED! That's why professional and amateur Rose gardeners everywhere will tell you that the easy way to grow big colorful Roses is the Tri-ogen way.

Tri-ogen 3-Way SPRAY (1) protects against both chewing and sucking insects, (2) controls fungus and blights including black spot and mildew, and (3) stimulates plant growth. Famous balanced formula now also contains Fermate (product of E. I. duPont Co.). Comes in famous green and red "kits". "E" size $1.35; others $2.25 up.

Tri-ogen 3-Way DUST-balanced insecticide, fungicide and stimulant—with DDT added. For gardeners who prefer to dust. 1 lb. 85c; 5 lb. $3.50.

Dealers or direct post paid. Send for free folder "Beautiful Roses—the Easy Way." Rose Mfg. Co., 1112-69 Ogen Bldg., Beacon, N. Y. Write today. "Tri-ogen 3-Way Rose FOOD—New! 5 lbs. $1.00. Sensational! Try it!

TRI-OGEN for ROSES! ogen

Broken fingernail?

Cover broken nail with cellophane tape, trim to shape and cover with nail polish. You won't be able to tell it's broken!

Keep "SCOTCH" Cellophane Tape in every room for sealing, holding, mending jobs.

GET THE TAPE HABIT...it's thrifty!

For quality, insist on—

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

SCOTCH BRAND Cellophane Tape

SEALS WITHOUT MOISTENING
TRANSPARENT AS GLASS

ANOTHER 3M COMPANY PRODUCT

MINNESOTA MINING & MFG. CO.
ST. PAUL 6, MINN. © 1949 3M CO.

WOMEN WANTED

Women wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for the Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Holiday, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill and other popular publications. Large commissions. Write today to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
4 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania

APEX

Always Kills Moths

APEX MOTH CRYSTALS AND NUGGETS 69c—$1.33

APEX MOTH CAKES Two Sizes 23c 33c

APEX MOTH VAPORIZER for large closets 79c Refills—63c

APEX

in its convenient forms, not only kills the adult moth but also kills larvae . . . prevents eggs from hatching . . . therefore it eliminates all possibility of moth damage. 100% Paradichlorbenzene.

A CLEAN HOME PRODUCT

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

CLEAN HOME PRODUCTS, INC., CHICAGO, ILL.

"I'm not going to ever marry," Eliza said.

Mrs. Beck gave up. But she did give a stern, backward-flung, "You split an infinitive, darling."

Eliza did envy Peggy's popularity, but she would have died rather than admit it.

She was forever stumbling against laughter, being bruised by it, retreating, building up defenses. She drew, she made her little poems. She discovered the Japanese hokku and the tanka.

"Darling, did you write this?" her mother said.

> "Oh, gray mole creeping
> At the roots of the green grass,
> Safe in your long room
> That is black and warm and still:
> I would I were a gray mole."

Her mother read it out loud. "Why, it's lovely!" she said. "Sad, but it's lovely! But do you really wish you were a mole, honey?"

Eliza reached for the paper with trembling fingers. "At least moles can be private."

Her mother reached out and put a hand on her hair. "Oh, my darling little mole!" she said gently, but there was laughter in her voice and Eliza could not bear it. She locked the drawers of her desk after that.

The time came for the senior dance, the school picnic of her last year in high school.

"But, Eliza, you ought to go," her mother said. "You're special in your class with the awards and everything. You don't want them to think you're a little snob, do you?"

"I don't care what they think," Eliza said.

We see our old age coming—on the faces of our friends. —MARY LAFON.

"You ought to care. At least, you might go to the dance for a little while."

"Why?" Eliza asked.

"Why? Why? Well, I'd at least feel that all the money I spent for dancing lessons wasn't wasted. . . . And you know the yellow organdy was for the dance. You let me get it."

"You got it so I'd have to go," Eliza said truthfully. "I told you all the time I didn't want to go. Besides, no one would dance with me and you'd hate that—you know you would. I don't care, but you'd hate it."

"Yes, I suppose I would," her mother said tiredly. "I suppose I would. But there'd be plenty to dance with you if you'd let yourself be liked. You—you'll have to learn sometime, darling, that you have to give something of yourself if you want to be liked. Maybe you think it isn't important to be liked—but it is. It's terribly important."

"Oh, mother, don't be so emotional about it!" Eliza said. "We just happen to like different things. You don't know how silly they are in East High. I—I just want to be let alone, that's all." There was something young in that last cry and her mother turned away with tears in her eyes.

"Perhaps everybody will," she said. "I could wish nothing worse for you, but perhaps everybody will."

They tried again that summer, Mr. and Mrs. Beck, to make Eliza a gift toward happiness. They told her they were going to let her go to art school. Her gray eyes widened a little and for a whole minute she said nothing.

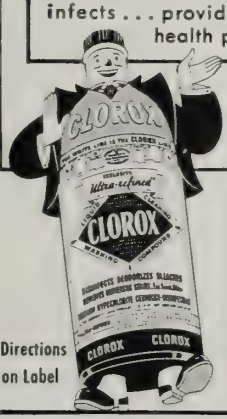
"Isn't that what you want?" her father asked then uncertainly.

"I wanted to go to college," she said.

"College? But they tell us you've got such talent for drawing—we thought you'd want to go on with it."

"I haven't got much talent," Eliza said. "It's easy to be good enough for high school, but that doesn't mean you're really good. . . . If it won't cost too much, I'd rather go to college."

They had counted so on her joy and had bent all their efforts toward her acceptance in art school, that now they had some trouble about arranging for her entrance into college, but they managed it at last.



You can't make linens cost less...but you can make them last longer!

ONE WAY to beat the high cost of linens is to make the ones you have last longer! And to generations of American women that means laundering with Clorox! For Clorox extra-gently bleaches white cottons and linens snowy-white (brightens fast colors)... it lessens rubbing... saves fabrics... lets costly linens last longer! And Clorox removes stains, even scorch and mildew... makes laundry fresh-smelling, sanitary! No wonder more women use Clorox than any other product of its kind!

Clorox helps protect family health, too!

Elbow grease and good intentions aren't enough to kill germs. For sanitary cleanliness, use Clorox in routine kitchen and bathroom cleaning. Clorox not only removes stains and deodorizes, it disinfects... provides added health protection!

You get these 2 BIG EXTRAS with CLOROX

1. GENTLER BLEACHING ACTION ...longer life for linens!

2. GREATER DISINFECTING EFFICIENCY ...added health protection!

Directions on Label

Clorox conserves costly linens and does a better job of disinfecting because it's free from caustic and other harsh substances... made by an exclusive formula protected by U.S. patent!

CLOROX... AMERICA'S FAVORITE BLEACH AND HOUSEHOLD DISINFECTANT

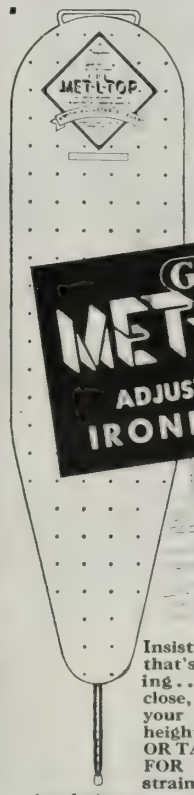
FIT to be seen in...

...this cloud white beauty under sheer blouses. Miss Swank's exclusive straight-plus-bias design molds to your figure—assures better fit, more comfort, smoother lines. Won't twist, ride or bunch. 4.00 and up.

STYLE SHOWN IN SOFT BUR-MIL RAYON CREPE. ABOUT 6.00 AT YOUR FAVORITE STORE.

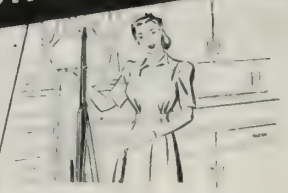
Miss Swank*

MISS SWANK INC., 112 Madison Ave., New York 16, N.Y.



PAT. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. COPYRIGHT 1949

CORNS



Removed by Mosco, also Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.

MOSCO ★CORN★ REMOVER

the features you want... in the original

G.P.&F. MET-L-TOP ADJUSTABLE HEIGHT IRONING TABLE

Insist on the ironing table that's designed for easier ironing... easy to open, easy to close, easy to adjust to just your height. Seven different height adjustments. SHORT OR TALL... RIGHT HEIGHT FOR ALL... reduces arm-strain, back-strain and ironing fatigue caused by ironing over a table that is too low or too high. And you'll find other features that MAKE YOU WANT the MET-L-TOP: Easy-operating, Finger-Tip Release for opening and closing the table; smooth-as-glass, white-enameled, ventilated top that never sags or buckles... fire-proof, warp-proof and crack-proof. All-welded and riveted construction prevents wobble, squeaks and creeping.

Ask your dealer to show you the genuine G. P. & F. MET-L-TOP... Adjustable-height model, $10.95; standard model, $8.95

Be sure to get a MET-L-TOP pad and cover set... tailored to fit and just the right thickness and texture for best results.

G.P.&F.

GEUDER, PAESCHKE & FREY CO.
Milwaukee 1, Wisconsin

A GRAPEFRUIT TREAT from a FLORIDA COOKBOOK!

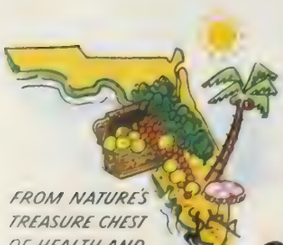
So DELICIOUS... So EASY...WITH LUSCIOUS CANNED FLORIDA GRAPEFRUIT SECTIONS

From Florida, home of golden sunshine and prize citrus fruits, come these delicious Canned Grapefruit Sections—brimming with juice, sunripe flavor, and the vitamin C you need every day!

Ready to enjoy just "as is." A tempting treat, too, served with a Florida flourish like this luscious Miami Grapefruit Mold . . . cool and shimmering on crisp salad greens. Here's all there is to it!

MIAMI GRAPEFRUIT SALAD MOLD

2 No. 2 cans Florida grapefruit sections
Canned grapefruit juice
2 envelopes unflavored gelatine
½ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
Strawberries, cream cheese, salad greens



Drain grapefruit sections; measure syrup and add enough grapefruit juice to make 3½ cups. Soften gelatine in 1 cup of the liquid. Heat remaining liquid. Add softened gelatine, sugar, and salt; stir until dissolved. Chill until slightly thickened. Fold in 2 cups grapefruit sections. Turn into 1¼-quart mold, or individual molds; chill until firm. Unmold and garnish with remaining grapefruit sections, strawberries, cream cheese balls, and salad greens. YIELD: 8 to 10 servings.

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION
LAKELAND, FLORIDA

Try Florida Canned Citrus Salad, Too!

Yes—here's another "serve-in a second" Florida treat . . . mixed Florida grapefruit and orange sections. Try them—today!

FROM NATURE'S TREASURE CHEST OF HEALTH AND FLORIDA

"You see?" Mrs. Beck said sadly to her husband. "I don't know what she's thinking at all."

"Well, maybe college is the best thing after all," he said. "Maybe it'll knock some of the nonsense out of her."

No, they didn't know what she was thinking.

The truth was that she did think she had talent and that she was determined to be an artist. But it was like all her treasures: it must be kept absolutely secret. She winced away from the thought of drawing in a classroom, of exposing her treasures to the comments of teachers or classmates. All great things, she thought, were done in absolute secrecy, on one's own. Look at Van Gogh! she was wont to think. He didn't have teachers—he worked alone and suffered awfully, but he was great. And she would be great too.

So she went to college. But college didn't seem to be the broadening experience her parents had hoped for. She had already become too ingrown, too secret in all her approaches, too proud of her own difference. It was plain from her looks that she was somebody, and the usual attempts were made to secure her for this sorority or that. But she said flatly that she didn't believe in sororities and so she was at last left alone. She didn't believe in them. She thought them childish, unworthy of minds adult enough for college. And yet she did have some small hope that somewhere in college there might be someone she could talk to. But friendships rarely grow one-sidedly, and Eliza made no effort at all toward friendship.

One night a girl came to her room and said, "Look, how about a double date? Sally's got one of those seminar things on at Prof. Debb's—she said to get you. He's Psi U and really special!"

"Oh, does being Psi U make him special?" Eliza said. "No, thanks. I've a paper to do." And she was so cool that the girl didn't urge her.

But afterward Eliza didn't write her paper. She felt restless and went out for a long walk alone in the dark around the stadium. There was a chill wind, but she liked it.

When she went home for vacations her mother tried to get her to tell about her friends, her classes.

"Oh, you know what college is like, mother," Eliza said. "It's just like more high school, really. No one seems much more grown up."

Till she was a senior she was sent off hopefully every fall, with lovely dance dresses, soft gay sweaters, a new suit. But the la fall Eliza said:

"Mother, there's no need for party dresse I just don't go to parties much. You're was ing money. . . . I—I wish you wouldn't ca I don't, and you ought not to either."

"All right," her mother said without arg ment. "No party dresses."

It was plain enough that the old ones h never been worn, except one of peach chiff that had a tear in the skirt. Eliza explain that another girl had borrowed it.

She did work at drawing. She worked qui systematically. But she joined no art class talked with no one about her drawing. S kept her work in neat portfolios and when s came home, packed them in the bottom of h trunk where no one would come on them u expectedly.

Quite a few people thought her beautifu but that was as far as it went. Once a b from a class of hers walked down the hill wi her. It was a late-fall afternoon and the leav were drifting down over the campus a the moment was full of the special poignan of autumn.

"They tell me you're an awful touch-m not, Beck!" he said cheerfully. "But wi that Botticelli look, or whatever it is, y ought to be open to a Coke at the Corn Store, seems as if. How about it?"

"No, thanks—not today," Eliza said.

"Why, this is the very day!" he conti dicted her. He had come to the front of t dormitory now and he put a hand on her a as if to draw her with him toward a no booth in the Corner Store.

She pulled her arm away. "Don't be silly

He grinned at her, but not so cheerful "Beck," he said, "a Coke is a very harmle form of propositioning. It's my most han less. I wasn't going to lay a finger on you. . What do you do in your spare time?"

She turned angrily and went into the do mitory without answering him. He went whistling, but it was a long time before t red died down in her cheeks. An echo of t laughter of Adams Street reached her ev here.

The boy always grinned at her after th when he met her, and once in class he wink at her. She disliked him intensely, but s remembered the "Botticelli look" all t same. He never "propositioned" her agai even by so much as a Coke.

Then in her senior year she fell in love wi a professor. He taught English poetry a he read very well and had a lean, disti

(Continued on Page 110)

★ ★

Beauty Alone

By Elizabeth-Ellen Long

In time of trouble when I walk alone,
Nobody caring where I go, or why,
No crust of love to keep me, no gnawed bone
Of faith to stay my hunger lest I die,
I still have left to me one source where I
Can turn for help, however deep in debt
I am already with both ear and eye:
Beauty alone has never failed me yet!

Frail lichen lace on pointed breasts of stone,
A wayside pond's wind-polished lazuli,
A field with yellow sunflowers overgrown,
The old carved cameo of cloudy sky,
A hilltop's crown of forest worn awry,
Stars captured in a leafless tree's black net,
A full-rigged moon in silence sailing by:
Beauty alone has never failed me yet!

The night's dark tapestry of quiet sown
With narrow threads of cricket lullaby,
Fringed with the purple of frog baritone,
The silver of a tree toad's thin reply;
And with the day's returning, from some high
And sun-gilt weed, a moment's minaret,
The faithful meadow lark's ecstatic c
Beauty alone has never failed me y

In time of need I have one stanch all
Who will uphold me when most sore beset,
The only one on whom I dare rely:
Beauty alone has never failed me yet!

"Conversation Pieces" from the KRAFT kitchen

There'll be a hum of conversation when you bring on this lovely salad . . . conversation of a most complimentary kind. And there'll be compliments, too, for the mayonnaise. Delicately piquant (Kraft adds a touch of pure lemon juice!), it accents the fruit flavors to perfection.

Leaf lettuce
Large prunes stuffed with Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese Strawberries
Orange sections
Grapefruit sections
Peeled avocado wedges, dipped in lemon juice
Kraft Mayonnaise

Arrange the lettuce on an attractive tray or chop plate. A leaf-shaped wooden one like this is especially nice. Choose and group fruits for color contrast—brilliance of strawberries setting off the dark-and-white of stuffed prunes; oranges and strawberries accenting the pastels of grapefruit and avocado. Serve with true mayonnaise at its finest—Kraft Mayonnaise.

Fiesta fruit tray

Sweetest of all music to the ears of a hostess are those flattering questions . . . "Tell me how you made it?" . . . "What kind did you use?"

You'll hear those questions often when you serve Kraft Mayonnaise. For Kraft's is true mayonnaise at its finest . . . rich with fine salad oil and eggs, superbly seasoned with fragrant vinegar, spices, and pure lemon juice.

You'll love the delicate piquancy the lemon juice gives. You'll love the satin smoothness, from Kraft's own special beater. So try it soon. Kraft Mayonnaise. Kitchen Fresh at your grocer's.

True mayonnaise at its finest—made with really choice ingredients, including pure lemon juice

Cascade

by cambridge Pamper this fascinating new crystal for its beauty, but use it every day! For Cascade is sturdy, modern . . . meant to be an "all occasion" design, meant to be practical, and is! How your friends will compliment you on its flawless clarity, its rich brilliance! A superb gift for the bride! Moderately priced at good stores . . . and open stock! The Cambridge Glass Company, Cambridge, Ohio

(ILLUSTRATED) CANDY BOX, CUP AND SAUCER, GOBLET, CREAMER AND SUGAR, CANDLESTICKS

GENUINE HAND MADE Cambridge MADE IN U.S.A.

(Continued from Page 108)

guished, academic look. Well, she thought it was love. She waited for the class and she thought of him constantly and was always imagining meeting him and talking with him. It was plain that he liked her. She always turned in perfect papers and her opinions on poetry were discriminating and well expressed. He often read something that she had written before the class, and if she came in early he always had a special greeting for her.

Then one day he asked her if she wouldn't like to help him with some of the papers for a freshman class. He said he liked to give students the chance to earn a little money when possible.

"I'd like to," she said more warmly than she usually spoke.

"Then come to my office on the fourth floor Saturday, if you will," he said.

So she looked over papers for him. She found them boring, but she did them and joyed in doing them, because sometimes he came in and sat on the desk and talked about poetry with her. She looked beautiful in those days, young, as she was supposed to look, warmer, her eyes brighter, her mouth softer.

Once he said to her, "You must come from a family of scholars, Miss Beck."

"Oh, no!" she denied quickly. "My people never look at a book."

Which wasn't quite true, but the book of the month didn't count, she thought, and certainly they never read poetry.

"Really?" he said. "You don't often find such a knowledge of poetry unless there's been a background for it."

Then one day, one awful day, she was in his office and he came in and began to talk about a poem they had discussed in class. The snow was falling outside and they seemed very much alone up there on the top floor of Liberal Arts.

When everything seems to be going wrong it pays to look for the one little thing that's wrong.

—RUSSELL PETTIS ASKUE.

"It discourages me," he said. "I do it every year and it discourages me. I want them to know it's trash and every time I see their faces lighting up as if they'd discovered a new Dante or a new Shakespeare. I don't know why I bother with teaching—if they can't see at this stage that that is false emotionalism, that no one ever felt about a friend like that —— Even you looked a little dewy-eyed, Miss Beck. I'm ashamed of you."

And Eliza, who worshiped truth, even though she was so stingy with her own small truths, said, "But I don't think it was false, Professor Carter. It's the way I feel about you."

What she expected from the professor, it would be hard to say. Perhaps she thought sitting on the corner of her desk and chatting about poetry indicated a grand passion. She was painfully innocent for a girl of twenty, though she thought she was terribly wise. But she was not prepared for the flush that went up the professor's face, the quick removal of the professor from her desk.

"Good heavens!" the professor said protestingly. He started out as if he were running away, but at the door he turned and came back. "Look here, Beck, whatever made you say such an idiotic thing? I'm a married man and I love my wife and I've certainly never gone around making passes at you or any of the students. I thought you had a little sense. You've embarrassed the living daylights out of me. You're what—twenty? I'm thirty-six years old and I've never had a yen for children to play with. Now you skedaddle back home and I'll finish those papers. . . . Good heavens!"

She put on her coat, but her hands fumbled at the buttons. "I thought ——" she began, but he looked up from the papers and his eyes were sharp with annoyance.

"Pardon me—you didn't think at all," he said. "Oh, I'm sorry. Don't, for goodness' sake, cry."

"I'm not crying," she said stiffly, and walked out of the office, never to enter it again.

She went out into the snow and the professor watched her, a small girl in a leopard coat, crossing the campus. He had been terribly embarrassed and hadn't quite known how to handle the situation. That he had admired her and thought her beautiful added to his embarrassment, and he tried to remember all he had ever said to her, trying to be fair, but finding himself not guilty in the least.

So between Christmas and the spring holiday that year Eliza had her odd little love affair that was no affair at all, suffered greatly in her pride and, she thought, in her heart. When she went home in the spring her mother said, "You're thin, darling!" She was a little proud of suffering to the point of thinness.

But she didn't tell her mother about the professor. She told no one about him, and bit by bit she bolstered up her pride in her own courage during that awful, humiliating scene, reminded herself that all great people have tragedies in their love affairs, and used her own little tragedy as proof of inner greatness. She never looked over papers for the professor again and he never read any of her papers in class. She carried her head a little higher, withdrew still farther into herself, felt herself set apart for great sorrows, great joys, great accomplishments.

Meanwhile her brother Peter's life was going on, quite separate from hers. He was also in college, but not her college. He was only a year behind her and he was tall, merry-eyed, full of a vast gusto for life and love. He often brought someone home with him for holidays and there were great goings on at such times. He made one or two tentative offers to include Eliza in the parties and dates that were the order of his days.

"I'm afraid I wouldn't have anything to say to a football player," Eliza said once, turning down an invitation.

"Oh, don't be such a drip, Liz!" he said carelessly. "He's a wiz at science and doesn't talk about football at all. He's doing you a favor if you only weren't so high and mighty not to know it. He's a good egg and has had lots more amiable girls than you. Relax, kid—relax!"

"College hasn't done a thing for her, not a thing," Mrs. Beck said to her husband.

"Maybe we can't see what it's done," he tried to comfort her.

"No, it hasn't done anything. She—she's set, like a spinster."

"Well, Peter more than makes up. I've never seen such a Lothario!"

She laughed, but her heart was still heavy for her daughter, whom she loved so deeply but never helped or came close to.

Her folks came for commencement, though she had tried to convey to them that it wasn't at all necessary. But they came, were proud of her cum laude and her award for work in English literature. She went home with them.

"And now what?" her father asked.

"Oh, I'll get a job," she said.

"What sort of job do you want? I imagine you could get into the library if you wanted to. They don't pay much, but you might like it."

"No, no library," she said. "Don't give it a thought—I'll get something."

She did get a job, with no help from anyone. It was in, of all places, a real-estate office.

"But that seems so . . . dull," her mother protested.

"It's all right," Eliza said. "A job's a job."

Eliza didn't find it particularly dull. There were plenty of days when Mr. Hendrick was out with people to look at houses, and in those hours she had a chance to do her own work. The office work was simple enough—a couple of hours a day would see her through it. She kept books with great neatness and efficiency and she made, so Mr. Hendrick thought, a nice front for clients.

Then one day Mr. Hendrick said, "Can you drive?"

(Continued on Page 112)

The happiest brides have Community

Your favorite bride rates the bride's favorite silverplate—Community, of course. Distinguished patterns, discerningly priced, solid silver "Overlay" for long, long wear. And your jeweler's wise counsel...

If it's Community*...it's correct!

(No Federal Tax)

COMMUNITY . . . THE FINEST SILVERPLATE . . . ONEIDA LTD., ONEIDA, NEW YORK

*TRADE MARKS OF ONEIDA LTD. COPYRIGHT 1960 ONEIDA LTD.

fashion accents crisp!

AGREES DESIGNER ceil chapman

The new "Crisp Look" interpreted by Ceil Chapman in an exquisite evening gown in washable-starchable Everfast pique . . . featured now by America's leading stores.

The "crisp look" of starched cottons is the 1949 look . . . designers who set America's fashions recommend starching with LINIT* to restore the original starched finish, to keep cottons lovely, crisply cool between washings . . . LINIT is the starch that penetrates the fabric . . . gives perfect, even finish . . . completely safe for all washable fabrics . . . and easy to use. Directions on every LINIT package.

...adds the "finishing touch" to dresses, blouses, children's clothes, housecoats, men's shirts, curtains, bed and table linens. Directions on every LINIT package. All grocers sell LINIT

*LINIT is a registered trade-mark of Corn Products Refining Co., N. Y.

(Continued from Page 110)

"Yes," she told him.

"Then how about going on a scouting expedition for me? There's a place up Church Hill Road that I hear's going to be on the market. Old Miss Lindstrom's house. I've got three people from New York who'd snap at it. Needs a little fixing, but essentially it's a fine old house. I've got to stick here for that Mrs. Pilgrim, so you go up and do a little snooping, will you?"

So she took the little automobile that was Mr. Hendrick's wife's car, but sometimes served in business, and drove up into the country and found the old Lindstrom house. Old Miss Lindstrom took a fancy to her and said she could see the house.

"I wanted to die here," Miss Lindstrom said. "I was born here and I wanted to die here. But my eyes are going and my knees are too stiff for working in the garden. But I want you to get someone who'll love it as I do, someone who won't think it needs a swimming pool. You see to it personally, child. You'll know the right kind."

So Eliza had her first taste of real business and she took it seriously. Hendrick was pleased with her.

"The Unwins will take it in a minute," he said. "I'm going to wire them."

"No," Eliza said, "not the Unwins. They're the station-wagon, swimming-pool kind."

"Well, so much the better. They'll pay the price and they'll make a good thing of that place—and draw good neighbors. The whole section will pick up," he told her.

"Let me find someone," Eliza said. "But, please, not the Unwins. I don't think she'd sell to them. She wants someone . . . different."

Sympathy is what one girl offers another girl in exchange for the details.

—BRANDON SUN:
Quoted in Modern Digest.

"Well, if you've got a cash customer up your sleeve, go ahead," Hendrick said. "But I'm not going to fool around with it. Once winter comes along, there won't be a chance before spring. You know how city people are—they overlook all the difficulties of bad roads and bad furnaces when they see a lilac bush in bloom or an old maple in the fall! You have to strike in the right season."

"I'll find someone," Eliza said.

She did find someone, a professor with five children and a wife who loved gardens. And she found more than that—she found a hope of one day having one of these remote country houses for her own, of breaking away from her family for once and all, of being at last alone in her own place, where laughter could not touch her, nor what she considered duty try to push her into a life that was not her own. She had no money; she would ask for none. But she began to save.

"You ought to have a new suit," her mother said.

"Oh, this one's perfectly good yet," Eliza told her.

"Why don't you do your room over, darling? It's such a little girl's room," her mother said another time.

"It's all right," Eliza answered.

She would have a room, but not here, not now, not where laughter could strike even against her taste.

So she saved, she waited, and she one day saw her schoolhouse. It was one big room, built of brick and painted white. There was a pump at one side, and two outside privies and three old beech trees, their leaves all yellow, in the yard overgrown with tall grass and goldenrod. The windows were boarded up. That's it. That's my house, she said. It was something no one else would buy or want. It was something she could make peculiarly her own. It was on a lonely back road, with no near neighbors. She would have to have a car, but the schoolhouse surely wouldn't cost much. She was more excited than she had been since she saw the snow falling past the professor's face in that top room long since. It was, in its way, her second falling-in-love.

She went about it quietly, secretly. She looked at secondhand cars. She found out in a roundabout way that the schoolhouse would sell for six hundred dollars—less than the car. She found out how much a bathroom would cost. She found out that there was a stove in the schoolhouse and how much wood or coal would cost.

It took months. It took a sale of the hopeless old house on Shale Road and a bargaining about the commission. But she bought it, her schoolhouse. Her ivory tower, her refuge against laughter and all the bruises of life. Then she told her family she was going to move.

"A schoolhouse?" her father said. "That's the most impractical thing I ever heard of!"

"It's not impractical at all," she said. "It's exactly what I want. It's all arranged and I'll go next week."

When Eliza said anything was arranged, it was arranged. She did move the next week. The bathroom wasn't in yet, but it was begun that same week, and wood was delivered and the old school seats taken out and the blackboards down.

At the last minute her mother fluttered about, finding this and that she thought Eliza would like—the little old knobbed cream-and-sugar set, a tea strainer, a broom. She presented them anxiously.

"It sounds so . . . lonely," her mother said at last. "But if it doesn't work out, you know your room's here. I—I know you like that sort of thing, but we do hate to think of you up there on that hill, all alone, at night."

"But I like being alone," Eliza said. "I don't mind it a bit. I'm not afraid of anything." She couldn't tell her mother that it was ecstasy she felt at the thought of being alone, that what fear she felt was here in this house, with everyone intruding, trying to peep into her thoughts and her emotions.

"I'd like to give you something awfully special—for a housewarming present," her mother said. "Tell me something you want awfully, Eliza."

Eliza tried to think of something she could accept, something that would make no mark on her house. "Well, I'd like another cord of wood," she said at last. "I've got some, but it'll take a lot for the winter."

"A cord of wood?" her mother said a little blankly. Then she laughed and said, "All right. A cord of wood it shall be."

For some reason or other Eliza remembered the long-ago birthday when her mother had taken her to the graveyard. The memory made her curiously uneasy and uncomfortable, but she went briskly at the end, saying, "Be seeing you!" and driving off quickly.

"I wish she'd have let me help her settle in," Mrs. Beck said to her husband. "But she didn't want me."

"Oh, it's one of those things people in ivory towers like to do," he said. "When it's twenty below zero, I imagine we'll be seeing her back!"

"But she's all alone—she hasn't even got a telephone."

"She'll probably get one. She's hale and hearty, she'll have fun for a while."

"Fun?" Mrs. Beck said doubtfully.

He started to leave for his office, then turned and said, "We haven't seen the Dennisons for a dog's age; let's have them over tonight."

"All right," she said.

She didn't look at her husband, neither did he quite look at her. The Dennisons were the liveliest friends they had—they talked a good deal, liked an argumentative game of bridge, laughed with no inhibition, liked to begin a good sing after coffee at midnight. The Becks both knew that it was going to be nicer having the Dennisons in without Eliza up there in her room, annoyed by the noise and the frivolous conversation. But they were ashamed of their knowledge, not really happy about it, for they did love Eliza.

So Eliza took possession of her schoolhouse. She didn't have much furniture. A studio couch. A plain chair covered in red leather that she had picked up at an auction

"I'm a Teacher . . .

I can't AFFORD CORNS —can you?"

"Teaching America's future citizens is mighty important work. And I don't want sore feet to interfere with my efficiency. So I'm really happy to know that a . . .

BLUE-JAY CORN PLASTER

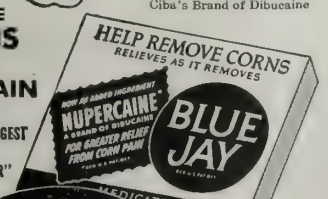
RELIEVES CORN PAIN

Naturally, at the very first sign of a pesky corn, I apply a BLUE-JAY Corn Plaster." Instantly, it relieves shoe-pressure pain. And what a wonderful thing is . . .

SOOTHING NUPERCAINE*

Exclusive with BLUE-JAY, anesthetic Nupercaine soothes biting surface pain away. Then BLUE-JAY's gentle medication . . .

LOOSENS HARD 'CORE'



whose pressure causes harsh, nagging pain—you just lift it out in a few days! And BLUE-JAY is flesh-colored, waterproofed, too. A wonderful way to relieve corn pain — with BLUE-JAY! Free Booklet! "Your Feet and Your Health." Write Dept. LH6.

STAYS ON BECAUSE IT WRAPS ON

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Ciba's Brand of Dibucaine

REMOVE CORNS RELIEVE CORN PAIN with "AMERICA'S LARGEST SELLING CORN PLASTER"

BLUE JAY
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
Corn Plasters

ON SALE AT DRUG COUNTERS EVERYWHERE

BAUER & BLACK

Division of The Kendall Company, Chicago 16

sale. A few dishes and kitchen utensils. She wasn't in any hurry about furnishings. She knew how she wanted her room, but she wanted to spend time on it. It was to be austere, not arty at all. A place in which to work and think. Oh, with certain fine small treasures, but not arty. There was an old bookcase built into one corner, crude and painted a dull blue. She left it there and put her books into it. There was still the low platform where the teacher's desk stood and she did not have the platform taken out. At one end of it the new bathroom was under way. She planned to paint it blue like the bookcase. The desk was perfect for drawing. It was old and flat-topped and had little drawers down one side. It was scarred with the bold knife marks of old pupils and had one bad inkstain. She liked it.

Indeed, she loved the whole room, and when the plumbers had departed that afternoon and she was really alone in it, she was terribly excited and happy. She lit her oil lamp, made some rather dull sandwiches, drank some milk and surveyed her domain with complete contentment. There was such a stillness as she had never known. Only an occasional cricket or a rustle of leaves, that was all the sound there was. Here she would live at last, really live, free. Oh, the work she would do here! She felt as if at last her life was really beginning.

Still, after she was in bed, the lights out, the night black as velvet beyond the windows, she did not sleep at once. She kept listening for the crickets. I'm tired, she even said to herself. Tired of the long, long struggle to keep herself to herself.

But in the morning she was not tired. It was all perfect again, with the sun on the yellow beech trees, the men driving in to work on the bathroom, and the pile of wood stacked against the wall. She made herself coffee, ate corn flakes, drove down the hill to the office, longing already for the day to be done so she could come back to her place.

It would be nice to say that Eliza hated her ivory tower once she possessed it, that her very youth refused it, that she was lonely beyond imagining; but it wouldn't be true. She loved it. She loved owning it all alone. She loved its very drawbacks. She liked building a fire. She liked coming back to it at night, even when the dark had already fallen before she reached it. She saw that she would have to have coal if she was to keep a fire going through the day, so she had a little shed built on at the back and ordered coal. She wasn't really good at cooking, but she managed meals of sorts and always had a good lunch in town. She painted the bathroom herself, and the wainscoting around the room. She took a few of her best drawings out of their hiding place and hung them between the windows and they pleased her. No one came to see her, but she liked it that way.

Her folks had, of course, wanted to come, but she had discouraged them. "Wait—wait," she said. "I want it all perfect first." She meant she didn't want them ever to see her sanctuary. To fend them off, she came every now and then to her old home, made herself as agreeable as she knew how to be.

But one Sunday in late November her people did drive up, came to her door and called out, "Oh, Eliza!"

She had to let them in, though it hurt her to do so. She saw them trying to like it, trying to see how she could possibly have left her good, warm, pretty room at home for this, trying to pick out its good points, trying not to quiz her too much.

"The views are lovely," her mother said.

"H'm," her father said. "Maybe, in the spring—a little bleak right now, I'd say."

"Did you do these, darling?" her mother said, walking up to one of the drawings. "Why, it's lovely! It's really lovely!"

She said only, "Yes," though she wanted to deny she'd done them.

"Look, John!" her mother said.

"Not bad," her father said. "Don't suppose this floor is insulated, is it?"

"It's plenty warm," she said.

They weren't comfortable and neither was Eliza. But she tried to welcome them. She

(Continued on Page 115)

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

✓ Not a soap, not a cream—cannot leave dulling film!

✓ Quickly, effectively removes dandruff from both hair and scalp!

✓ Gives fragrant, soft-water lather even in hardest water!

✓ Leaves hair lustrously soft, easy to manage—with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

✓ Halo—not a soap, not a cream—contains no sticky oils, nothing to hide your hair's natural lustre with dulling film. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo brings out glossy, shimmering highlights the very first time you use it! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly, completely in any kind of water—needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. For hair that's naturally colorful, lustrously soft, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

YOUR NEW SINGER pays for itself—

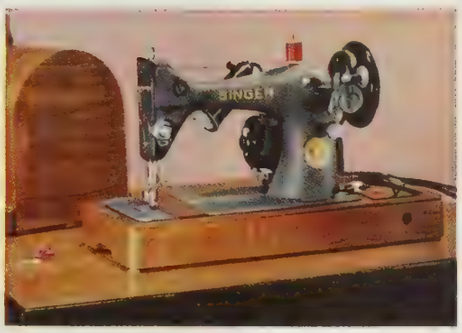
YOU SAVE SO MUCH BY SEWING !

The charming print dress above is made from Vogue Pattern #S-3225. Buttons and buttonholes by SINGER SEWING CENTER.



HOW WONDERFUL, to be able to make the latest styles for half what they cost in a store! How easy, with a smooth-stitching new SINGER* Sewing Machine!

Before long, you save so much your SINGER pays for itself. And you go on saving for years when you choose a dependable machine.

See the latest models tomorrow. Finest models in 98 years of SINGER designing!

And whenever you need notions, lessons, services, or sewing advice just call on your friendly SINGER SEWING CENTER.

Choose yours now!
The smoothest-sewing machines ever made!

● There's a sure-stitching SINGER Sewing Machine in every price range. $89.50 up. Easy terms, liberal trade-in allowance. Budget portable is sturdy, compact.

● It's built to last a lifetime if it's built by SINGER! Supplies and service always available from any SINGER SEWING CENTER. Above is handsome console model.

● So many smart styles! Desk-model SINGER has matching stool, ample space for supplies. Sews forward, backward. Has tension indicator, full range of speeds.

● You get basic attachments with every new SINGER. Many others available. Folding table holds SINGER* Featherweight Portable, world's most popular model.

● Need notions? Shop at your SINGER SEWING CENTER. They cover buttons, make buttonholes, too. Give sewing course as a gift when you buy your new machine.

FOR YOUR PROTECTION SINGER sells its Sewing Machines, Vacuum Cleaners, and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" on the window, and never through other stores.

Above is SINGER SEWING CENTER at 4715 S. Ashland St., Chicago, Ill. Hundreds from coast to coast. For address of your SINGER SEWING CENTER see classified phone directory. SINGER SEWING MACHINE CO.

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

Copyright, U.S.A., 1949, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. All rights reserved for all countries.
*A trade-mark of THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY

(Continued from Page 113)

new they were decent people, that they hought they were fond of her, but she saw hem from far off, almost as if they were trangers, not of her blood at all.

"Do you remember that old tea set of Grandma Beck's? The brown vine one?" er mother asked. "Would you like it for up ere? It would be nice with the blue cup-oards."

"Why, if you want to spare it," Eliza said.

"I don't use it," her mother said. "You night as well have it."

She knew her mother prized the tea set, hat she was trying to give her something me, but she wished no one would give her nything. She saw them go away with relief.

The next time she went home her mother aid, "I've got the tea set all packed, Eliza. Do you want to take it today?"

So she took the dishes and they did look ice in the cupboards. But she didn't use hem often, for she didn't fuss over her mea-er suppers.

She didn't leave her house for the winter, hough her father said, "Look, puss, be sen-ible and come to own for the next hree months. We lon't want you get-ing pneumonia—r even chilblains!" No, she stayed on nd her delight did ot lessen, even when she had to get shoveled out a num-er of times and when coal didn't ome once and she ad to get along with wood for three days. Physically, the life was very good for her. She had to get outdoors and she had to build fires and she had to learn how to keep house. She believed in cleanliness and she kept the school-house spotless. There were so many little things to see to that she didn't get quite as much time for drawing as she wished, but she did have long eve-ning hours and sometimes worked away there at the flat-topped desk after midnight. She had had a plan of doing drawings for a child's book of poems and she had done hundreds of suitable pictures, but when she thought of taking or sending them to some publisher, she could not bring herself to do it. She couldn't seem to bear letting anyone see her work, perhaps not see it as beautiful as she saw it. It seemed to her no one in the world could possibly know quite how perfect it was.

"My husband looked at me and said, 'I hear we have another child.'"

THESE are the words of a mother who turned her family of three kids into a family of six almost as fast as you can multiply three times two. The extra three were foster children, known to the world at large as "problems," and to the Roses themselves as Jane, Joey and Jimmy John. Other mothers asked Mrs. Rose: Isn't it hard work? How could you afford it? Weren't your own children jealous? and Wouldn't you rather take a new baby to raise than a half-grown problem child? The new mother-of-six didn't pretend to know all the answers, but she knew where to find them—with the children themselves!

JIMMY JOHN

By Anna Perrott Rose

Complete in the July Journal

PETER was out of college now and had a job in New York. At Christmas he was home for a few days and he liked kidding Eliza about her house. The day before he went back he came up to see it. He sat on the desk and smoked and chattered about a good many unimportant things. But at last he said:

"You want me to get out, don't you, Liz? Well, I will soon. Wanted to see your hang-out. I don't like it much, Liz."

"It couldn't matter less," she said sharply.

"I know. Still, I do have opinions and like to air them as well as the next one. . . . It'll make you queer, this sort of setup."

"Queer? Well, I don't mind."

"If you were a gangster and wanted a hide-out, it would be very nice. . . . Or if you were sixty, with all passion spent, I could see it. But you're almost twenty-three, Liz, and if you've ever spent any passion, I haven't noticed it. What's it all for?"

"For? It's for me," she said.

He gave her a grin, but not a friendly one—mocking, rather, and almost pitying. "For you," he said, then no more while he lit another cigarette. Then he said more briskly, "Look, Liz, why don't you take a few days off and come down and let me show you the town? I know a nice crowd . . . yes—don't lift your brows like that—they are nice. They've even got brains. You're a darn good-looking gal, you know—I'd like letting them look at you."

BUT she said no, she couldn't leave her job and besides New York wasn't any attraction to her. "I like it here," she said.

"All right. All right. . . . But remember my words, kid—you're going to get queer, sure as fate. It's what I call 'an unnatural life.'" She didn't answer and presently he went on stubbornly: "You're smarter than I am—you don't need to look down your nose at me like that, sis—I know that. But I do know something you don't know and that you're going to be very sorry to find out one of these days. And that is: Smartness isn't enough."

"It depends on whether you're smart or not," she said.

He slid off the desk and she saw that he was angry. "I'll pop along now," he said.

She tried a little to make amends. "Don't worry about me, Peter. I know I don't have fun in your way—but in my own way, I do. I don't try to change your life, do I?"

"No," he agreed shortly.

"I don't see why everyone tries to change me, then."

He was quite sober, for him. "No, I don't either," he said finally. "I don't think anyone ever will. I'm sorry." He went off through the snow to his car by the road. He looked back once, his face still sober.

She felt ashamed as well as resentful after he had gone. She resented that he should feel sorry for her, should try to make her over. But she was ashamed of having been so rude to him. He couldn't help what he was. She even thought that maybe she might go to New York for a day or two, just to show him that she hadn't meant to be mean.

But the winter went by and she didn't go to New York. She went to the office, where there was little work in the severe months, came back to her house on the back road, drew her fine, small pen-and-ink sketches, wrote an occasional poem, read. She grew used to people's asking if she wasn't lonely up there. "Not at all," she always answered.

In March she began to be anxious for April, however, for the chance to start her garden.

In March her mother had guests, an old schoolmate, her husband and son. "Darling, will you come down for dinner? I really do need someone young," her mother said.

She went and was polite enough, though the young man bored her. Then he asked if he couldn't drive her home—he'd like to see her house. "Oh, no, thanks. I have my own car," she said. She saw her mother's face grow disappointed, hurt, but she couldn't be nice to that dull young man.

It was in April that she saw the sandbank on a crossroad and thought, I am going to get a little of that sand and make me a Japanese garden. She wondered why she had never thought of it before, for it was just the kind of miniature perfection that she loved. She took a pail to the sandbank and brought the sand home, found a big, round, flat flower dish of gray and filled it with sand. She made a tiny bridge out of twigs, a very small pagoda.

(Continued on Page 117)

Are you in the know?

What about a gift for your weekend hostess?

☐ Bring it with you ☐ Send it later ☐ Either is correct

When guesting, remember your friend's mother with some wee giftie. You can bring it, or send it later. Either's correct. But you needn't flourish the present the moment your foot is in the hall! What's more, you needn't postpone your visit—just because "that" day is nigh. For the new Kotex keeps you comfortable. Gives you softness that holds its shape . . . (this napkin's made to stay soft while you wear it.) And mind, your new all-elastic Kotex Sanitary Belt fits snugly; doesn't cut!

To style-wise gals, does "Empire" suggest—

☐ World's tallest building
☐ Great Britain
☐ Good camouflage

Plan to go places? Or a stay-at-home vacation? Either way, give careful thought to your wardrobe. If you've figure faults, select styles that conceal them. For instance—the highwaisted "Empire" line does wonders for a flat-chested femme. And don't forget, on certain days, there's no telltale line with Kotex. For that, you can thank the flat pressed ends of Kotex . . . they prevent revealing outlines. Try all 3 absorbencies: Regular, Junior, Super.

After a late date, should a damsel—

☐ Invite him into the house
☐ Say goodnight at the door
☐ Thank him

When the night's no longer young, there's no call for your date to linger. Dismiss him graciously at the door. (Your family will appreciate it!) And—no "thank-you's," either. "It's been a lovely evening" will do. You can always be sure of a pleasant evening, when you're poised—free of "problem time" worries. That's why you'll want to be sure to choose Kotex. Because of that special safety center, you can count on extra protection with Kotex.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins*

3 ABSORBENCIES: REGULAR, JUNIOR, SUPER

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Are you in the know about deodorants on certain days?

Only with a deodorant sprinkled on the surface of your napkin—can you be sure of personal daintiness! Choose Quest Powder! Because instantly, on contact, safe unscented Quest Powder positively destroys odors. And Quest has no moisture-resistant base that tends to slow up absorption. Get a can of Quest today!

QUEST Deodorant Powder

It's a Kotex product

Seven from heaven

TO KEEP YOU FAIR AND COOLER!

Kleinert's little wonders keep you dainty and well-groomed—by the sea, in the mountains or home in your own backyard. Designed to make you forget the heat and enjoy yourself. Breeze into your favorite store and see Kleinert's summer-timers!

BEACH BAG. Smart, modern and so convenient. Made of vat-dyed herringbone cotton. Rubber-coated with waterproof plastic lining. Two outside pockets. Three gay colors: Green, flamingo, lime, piped with white. About $5.00.

RUBBER SWIM SHOES. One-strap, all-rubber step-in style. Neat, trim and carefully designed for good fit. Sturdy rubber sole and a low heel for extra comfort. Red, white or blue. Sizes 4-8. $1.98.

CHAFE-GUARD. Prevents chafing. Wear it under girdle or by itself as a pantie. Rayon with soft elastic waist, leg and thigh bands. Small, medium, large, extra-large. Nude or white. About $1.25.

UNAWEAR PANTIE. Stays up like a girdle. Has garter loops. Has detachable sanitary-belt tabs. Patented *Nobelt waist and leg bands. Nude, light blue, white. Small, medium, large, extra-large. About $2.00.

SPORTIME GIRDLE. Natural rubber. Wear it under bathing suits, shorts, slacks or play clothes. Pantie style with perforated crotch. Petal Pink, Powder Blue, Gardenia White. Small, medium, large. $1.50.

BOLERO SHIELD. Well-designed . . . absorbent nainsook. Shields attached. Garment completely covers and protects underarm and back. Nude only. Small, medium, large, extra large. $1.25.

*SAVA-WAVE SWIM CAP

The only cap with the patented inner rim. Water stays out—wave stays in. Protects your precious wave; guards your hair and scalp from chemicals in pools, from sand and dulling effects of the salty sea. Guaranteed watertight. Regular or Olympic style in red, yellow, aqua, blue, white. Medium and large sizes for long and short hairdos. $1.00

* Kleinert's

*®

Prices slightly higher on the West Coast.

(Continued from Page 115)

There was a path, and little mounds of hills at one side. And then she saw a wild-plum tree in bloom at the edge of the woods, went out and brought in a tiny spray and stuck it in beside the path. She looked at it with delight. It was beautiful, and the wild plum was the simple, right, finishing touch. In the morning the plum blossom had wilted and she was somehow dismayed. She went out and found a twig of cedar, but it wasn't just right. But she left it and all day kept searching for just the right thing to put in its place. On the way home she saw a shadbush in blossom and stopped her car to get a bit of it.

It was odd—or perhaps it wasn't odd—but she found an immense satisfaction in her little artificial garden. She seemed to have almost forgotten her plan for a garden of perennials by the wall. She tried all sorts of simple but delightful arrangements. She kept the garden on her desk, though it was in the way of her working. But she couldn't seem to let it go beyond her hand.

She was busier at the office now, but she did her work in a daze of impatience. She was more than ever anxious to get home.

In May her mother came one Sunday and found her fussing over the garden. She had put apple blossoms in today, but they seemed too big, too earthy somehow for the little fantasy she was creating.

"Whatever are you doing?" her mother asked, and then took in the gray bowl. "But how sweet!" she said.

Eliza turned away. "Oh, it's nothing. . . . Come out on the step. It's nice today."

So they sat on the step and her mother said, "Peter's bringing a friend up. A newspaperman. I don't suppose you'd want to grace the family board Saturday night?"

"Not much," Eliza said. Then: "Mother, why do you try so hard? You know I wouldn't like him, nor he me. You think unless I find a mate, just like all the animals, that I can't possibly be contented. But some people just don't need mates, mother. I'm one of them. Why don't you give up on me?"

"Well, I don't happen to believe there are any people like that," her mother said, trying to give her a whimsical and loving smile. "I'm not asking you to marry the boy, you know. It's just—oh, I like a family in the house, is all. I like young people there for young guests. And we miss you."

Eliza almost said, You're glad to have me gone. You know you are, but she didn't. "Peter'll drum up somebody," she said. "I'll come if it's essential, but honestly, it isn't."

Her mother didn't say it was essential, didn't urge her any more at all. She didn't stay long, but before she left she came back into the house and took a package wrapped in a napkin from her bag.

"Fresh rolls," she said. "With cinnamon in." Then she gave a little frown at the garden and said, "Forget-me-nots would be nice there. I saw some by the brook as I came up."

After her mother was gone Eliza went down to the brook and got the forget-me-nots and they were perfect, though she hated to take her mother's advice in the matter. She thought, I ought to get the earth turned over for my garden, but she didn't. She thought toward evening of a new pagoda painted in Chinese reds and blues and she told herself she would make it the next night. She did make it. It was so small, so entrancing when it was done and had its lacquer on it, that she stood and smiled at it as if it were a friend. But then, she saw, the bridge wouldn't do, and the next night she made a bridge to match. But now, she realized, the bigger, showier summer flowers were coming on, and it would be hard to find the right things for the garden. She got out her catalogues that she had neglected, began to hunt for the small, the exquisitely small blooms.

The next day she had a long trip to make with a client and as she paused at the top of a hill she saw in a farmer's badly tended garden a touch of blue.

She said, "Would you wait a minute, please? I have an errand here." And she went to the back door and asked the farmer's wife what the little blue flowers were.

"Grape hyacinth," the woman said.

"Thank you," Eliza said.

"If you'd be real careful, I guess it wouldn't hurt to transplant a few," the woman said. "Just wait, I'll dig up a basket for you. There's plenty and to spare." She came with a basket and trowel and dug deep into a patch of the flowers. "Some people never dig up a blooming flower," the woman said, "but I never take any notice of that, so long as there's plenty of dirt at the roots. Here you are, miss."

"That's kind of you, awfully kind," Eliza said. She put the basket in the back of the car, and every time she got out of the car all day she looked to see if the little blue spikes were still upright and safe.

That night she had planned to work, but she planted her flowers, stealing one small spike for her other, precious little garden. She got out her drawing materials, but then she thought that the line of the path in her garden was not just right, not in harmony with the line of the bowl. She removed the pagoda and the bridge, began to change the path with sure, skillful fingers. She heard the twitter of birds in the woods close by and the sound was like a part of the Japanese garden—she wished she could fix it, soft and eternal, in the pagoda.

Strange week! Strange last week of Eliza Beck's youth. All her secrecy, all her obsession with the miniature, the unique, flowing into this tiny, formal fantasy of beauty.

She didn't go home for dinner Saturday night. On Sunday morning she sat and wrote an order for plants. She heard a car drive up her hill, pause, and she looked out through the front windows and saw that it was her mother's little car. She sighed, laid a sheet of drawing paper over her order blank, stood up and moved toward the door.

She opened the door thinking to keep her mother outside her sanctuary, and it was not her mother at all coming up the two short, deep steps to the little porch of the schoolhouse, but a strange, tall young man. He was dressed carelessly in a corduroy jacket and brown slacks and wore no hat. His hair was reddish and thick and he had blue eyes that were skeptical and somewhat ruthless, and his face was bony and irregular and more lined than most young men's faces. He

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Child in the Grass

By Pauline Havard

Still as a cricket in the tall, gold grass
The small girl sits, preoccupied with little Happenings of wonderland where beetles pass
With jeweled backs: a snail shell is a brittle,
Patterned toy she has not seen before;
Each grassy mound a fairy's emerald dwelling;
While you, too big to enter through that door
Can only wait the tales she will be telling
Of her green meadow-town. If you are wise
You'll listen earnestly to all she says,
Before time dulls the dreams in her bright eyes.
Oh, help her store up wonder for the days
That adults know; when she has grown too tall
To enter the town where miracles befall!

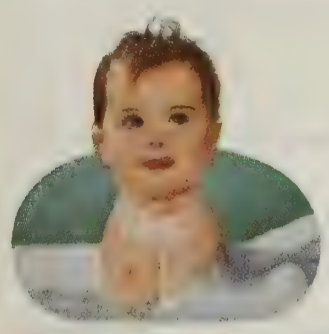
★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Beauty is my business—

AND SWEETHEART IS MY BEAUTY SOAP

say 9 out of 10 Cover Girls!

• We questioned the lovely girls who grace the covers of America's leading magazines this year. You see them on newsstands right now! "What beauty soap do you use?" we asked. And 9 out of 10 replied, "SweetHeart Soap."



"I bless SweetHeart Soap Care!"

says TERRY THOMAS, Enchanting Cover Girl

"For it keeps my skin looking radiantly young, silken-soft and smooth. That's why I earn $100 a day . . . why I can't afford to do without SweetHeart Care."

• And no matter how you spend your days, beauty is your business, too. Your precious complexion deserves the most effective care. So like 9 out of 10 cover girls, make SweetHeart your beauty soap.

Enjoy the Floating Lift of SweetHeart's soft, rich lather. It's a remarkable beauty action! And you'll see the wonderful difference SweetHeart Care can make! For just one week after you change from improper care, your skin looks softer . . . smoother . . . younger.

Beauty is my business, too!

This adorable little model, Hope Malin, 11 months old, enjoys her SweetHeart bath more than she can say! Remember, you can now also get pure, mild SweetHeart in the new, large bath size.

SWEETHEART

The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

IMAGINE—Calling Us

"Best-Dressed Family"

in Town!

Thanks to SANITONE Dry Cleaning Our Clothes Look Like New!

You too, can step out knowing you look your best anytime. Just depend on Sanitone—the better kind of dry cleaning to make even old duds look good as new. And your clothes are not only returned from your Sanitone Dry Cleaner clean and bright but loose buttons are sewed on tight . . . ripped seams re-stitched . . . and other minor repairs made FREE of charge. Yes, Sanitone Dry Cleaning Service gives you so much extra and at no extra cost.

★ More Dirt Removed!

★ Spots and Ingrained Soils Disappear!

★ Dull Colors Look Bright and Clear Again!

★ Press Lasts Longer!

★ Costs No More Than Ordinary Dry Cleaning!

Phone your Sanitone Dry Cleaner Today. He is listed in the Classified phone book. Look for the Sanitone Seal: it's your assurance of better dry cleaning service.

SANITONE DRY CLEANING

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

A division of Emery Industries, Inc., Cincinnati 2, Ohio looked as if he had been around—as, indeed, he had.

"Hello, Eliza!" he said boldly.

"How do you do?" she said coldly, no welcome in her voice at all, only a waiting for him to state his business and be gone.

"Aren't you going to ask me in?" he said. "I'm Peter's friend, Tobias Jones. Call me Toby."

She stiffened with distaste and said, "Is anything wrong at home?"

"Not a thing, so far as I know. I've just come calling. Are you going to shut the door in my face?"

"Come in if you like," she said. "But I am pretty busy." She let him in, and nothing was ever the same again.

He sat down in the leather chair and looked around curiously. "Not bad. Not bad at all if you like the hermit life."

She was still standing, not wanting him there, yet not quite rude enough to put him out. "I do like it," she said.

"Really? You are a cool piece, aren't you? Peter said you wouldn't be my cup of tea at all. . . . Your picture's on the piano at home, you know—and very intriguing it is, I may say. It flatters you, but not too much. 'She lives in a schoolhouse and she's not your cup of tea,' Pete said. So one thing led to another and I came to see for myself, never having been one to let others choose my tea for me. . . . What's the idea of the schoolhouse, if I may ask?"

"It's my home," she said.

"Or your fortress?" he asked. "Your island, perhaps? I used to have a taste for islands myself—but that was before the South Pacific era."

"Is there anything wrong in wanting a fortress?" she demanded. She knew at once that she shouldn't have said it—it only gave him the chance for further inquisitiveness.

"Oh, I suppose not. Not in wanting it. But Maginot Lines have been a dime a dozen of late. Sit down, why don't you? You make me nervous—you act as if you were waiting for me to go. And I'm not going yet."

"But I do have work to do," she said stiffly. "Sundays I do like to work."

"On the Sabbath? Why, Eliza! . . . What kind of work?" Then he gave a quick but seeing look about the room, got up and walked toward one of the pictures. "Do this?" he asked.

"Yes."

"I say! You are good, aren't you? Very nice Oriental effect. You know: 'Bird and Plum Blossoms'—that sort of thing. . . . Could be you do need an island. Sell much?"

"No. I don't sell anything."

"Oh. Just art for art's sake, eh? And after you're dead, they'll be discovered and you'll be a genius. What do you live on? Your folks?"

There was something so rude about his voice that she was moved to anger. "I have a job," she said. "I sell real estate and I earn my own living."

He turned and grinned at her. "Ah, but do you live?" he said boldly. "I think it's my mission in life to teach you that islands are a thing of the past. . . . Don't you like your family?"

"Of course."

He wandered over to the desk. "What's this gimcrack?" he said, putting a finger on the edge of the gray bowl.

She said, quickly, like an angry child, "Don't touch that!"

He turned and stared at her, then looked down at the garden with its spikes of blue grape hyacinth. "Don't touch me, eh?" he said more slowly and thoughtfully. "That's a very outdated complex, Eliza; don't you know that? A psychiatrist would have a field day with you. Pete tried to tell me about you, but I had to see you to believe him. Nobody's so special he can't be touched, you know. Nobody. Remember the Snow Queen? Well, I had no passion for Andersen when I was a boy, but I remember the Snow Queen and her heart that turned to ice. To think that I should live to see a fairy tale come true!" But he wasn't smiling. He was speaking seriously, accusingly, and as if he suddenly did not like her at all.

. . . in summer, too, YOUR BEST BUY in hormone cream!

It's your skin . . . give it the best! Give it Endocreme, first successful hormone cream . . . only cream that can show you 12 years of proven results. Want to look younger? Try Endocreme to get hormone benefits right through the summer . . .

Ice box trick! In hot weather many users keep Endocreme in the refrigerator! Try it. See how refreshing it is to smooth on a cream that's fresh, firm, ice-cream cool! Or if your "summer" skin does not readily absorb a heavier cream, here's a hint . . .

New-formula Endocreme Light. Lighter texture, quick-absorbing, pleasant to use. Developed especially for hot weather. Also for year-round use on younger skin and skin that's not over-dry. Same hormone potency. Same skin benefits as famous Endocreme "Regular". Continues your participation in free jar plan.

Endocreme is also available at leading Canadian Cosmetic counters.

Endocreme . . . specialist in hormone cosmetics

"You are being unpardonably personal and rude," she said.

"Am I? Well, you're a very beautiful girl, Eliza, and I'm glad I saw you for myself, but I'll admit that Pete was right—you're not my cup of tea at all."

"Since you've discovered that, maybe you'd let me get to work now," she said.

"Yes, I might as well. So long, Eliza."

He moved toward the door and she stood still by the desk. Suddenly he made a quick turn and came back to her. He seemed very tall, very angry, very ruthless, advancing. When he came near, he reached out a strong hand, took her hand and pulled her toward him. She stumbled on the edge of the platform. He let her stumble but not fall, pulled her toward him and kissed her, on the mouth, a long, hard, violent kiss. He took his arms away quickly at last, and she almost fell. Her eyes on him were blank with fright.

"Just so you'll know what it is to be touched," he said.

He went now, not looking back at her. The door slammed. She heard the car start.

So the fortress fell, the fortress built up over so many years, fell completely, became dust. Twenty-three years of building—the time of one kiss for falling. Not that Eliza admitted its destruction immediately. Oh, no. She began, frantically, to put on more stones, pretending that the base was still there, pretending she was not building on air. She sent in her order for little flowers. She planted those flowers. She tended the Japanese garden with passionate care. She got out her drawings again and worked till very late at night. But sometimes, unconsciously, she put up her hand to her mouth, as if to cover a bruise. And sometimes she couldn't work at all and walked up and down her long room, pretending she was thinking.

Have a grudge against yourself but not against life. —HUGH WALPOLE: The Inquisitor (Doubleday & Company).

And after she was undressed, tucked under the blanket of her studio couch at night, she kept hearing words in that bold, intruding voice. "Nobody's so special he can't be touched, you know. Nobody. . . . You're not my cup of tea at all. . . . It flatters you, but not too much. . . . Maginot Lines have been a dime a dozen of late." . . . It infuriated her to remember this man Toby Jones, to remember his voice, his words. And that last violent moment—that she refused to remember, or thought she did.

Toward the end of that week her mother came up, bringing some rhubarb-and-strawberry jam Mrs. Grimsby had just made. Mrs. Beck didn't go outdoors today. She sat on the studio couch and seemed a little more quiet than usual. Eliza had had a supper of cereal with bananas sliced on it, and the dish still stood on the desk. She knew her mother had seen the dish and that the thought of a skimpy supper would be paining her.

"Nice to have the days so long," her mother said almost idly.

"Yes. Though I like long evenings, too," Eliza answered.

"Well, I do too. I suppose I like almost everything as is," her mother said. "Maybe I'm just too contented."

Eliza smiled her agreement with that, but said nothing.

"How'd you like Toby?" her mother said then, trying to speak casually, but in spite of herself letting a faint anxiety creep into her voice.

"Toby? Oh, Peter's newspaperman. I didn't. . . . I dare say he told you I wasn't very hospitable."

Her mother didn't look at her and that made Eliza uncomfortable. "Well, no, he didn't quite say that, darling."

Without warning, Eliza felt her cheeks suddenly burning hotly. "We didn't get on," she persisted.

"Oh?"

"What's that 'Oh?' for?" she demanded, wanting to stop this conversation but unable to do so.

"Why, he just didn't tell it quite that way," her mother said. "Do you want to know what he said?"

"You're bound to tell it anyway," Eliza said, though that wasn't at all true of her mother.

A little line showed in her mother's forehead for an instant. "I'm a fool, darling, I really am. I've been worried about you," she said. "About that Toby. . . . Of course you know all the facts of life—you couldn't go through college without knowing them. But you do keep things to yourself—you know you do. For all I really know, you might still believe in the stork. . . . But Toby Jones; he saw your picture, you know, and he was entranced by it. He kept looking at it—Peter warned him off, but I could see he was determined to see you. Well, when he came back, Peter said, 'You didn't stay long. I told you she'd give you a quick brush-off.' Toby just grinned and Peter said, 'She isn't the sort you kiss on the first call.' Toby said, 'Oh, we're way past the kissing stage!' and he didn't say another word about you."

"Disgusting!" Eliza said, but she knew her face was still red.

"Disgusting? Oh, no—it wasn't that. I don't know why I worried; you certainly do know how to give a—a brush-off, as Peter calls it. Only—well, Toby Jones is a man the like of which you may not have come across before. Foot-loose, a kind of adventurer, I'd say. I like him, understand—if I were young I'd probably like him a lot—but I doubt if he has much conscience . . . about girls, I mean."

"You are silly," Eliza said, but not angrily. "As if a man like this Jones could possibly interest me!" She knew she ought to stop this talk at once, but something drove her on—she couldn't stop.

"I almost wish he could," her mother said. "I know you think I'm always trying to make a match for you, but I'm not—not really. But I wish you did like someone. . . . Maybe not Toby, for he's the kind that kisses and then vanishes. But someone."

"I'm contented," Eliza said. "Perfectly contented, without anyone, mother. And Toby Jones is the last person on earth I could ever like—so rest your mind on that score."

But after her mother had gone down to her car by the roadside and driven off, Eliza Beck stood in the doorway and had a wild wish to call her mother back and tell her just what had happened in that visit of Toby Jones'. Not since she had been a little girl had she so longed to tell her mother anything. But so set in her ways of secrecy was she that she knew she could not now break them.

This was her first admission to herself that she thought of Toby Jones at all. Now she had made the admission, she thought of him a good deal, angry at herself for doing so, but doing it nevertheless. That "Oh, we're way past the kissing stage!" came into her mind many times every day, and the thought of sharp and wicked words to answer it, but there was no one to whom to say them. And she knew the statement was, in a way, true. Not in any physical sense, but things had been said that took them far past the bounds of any ordinary first conversation. It had been the strangest talk she had ever had with anyone, even her professor. He had jumped feet first into her inmost self, seen what she was like, why she wanted her schoolhouse—well, he seemed to have seen everything there was to see of her. And he hadn't liked it. He seemed to think she had no right to her fortress, that she was an escapist. . . . "Nobody's so special he can't be touched." . . . Those words came to her unbidden over and over. She thought up a great many withering replies to them, but again there was no Toby Jones to whom they could be delivered. I am special, she told herself over and over, proudly, stubbornly.

She stubbornly tended her little garden, though it had been put in so late that the days of rain had passed and she had to carry water often to keep the plants alive. Stubbornly, too, she kept the little Japanese garden fresh and beautiful. But something had

Your loveliness is Doubly Safe

because

Veto gives you Double Protection!

So effective . . . Veto guards your loveliness night and day—safely protects your clothes and you. For Veto not only neutralizes perspiration odor, it checks perspiration, too! Yes, Veto gives you Double Protection! And Veto disappears instantly to protect you from the moment you apply it!

So gentle . . . Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use and keeps you lovely. And Veto is gentle, safe for normal skin, safe for clothes. Doubly Safe! Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. Let Veto give your loveliness double protection!

Veto lasts and lasts from bath to bath!

"They help me keep active in spite of Varicose Veins!"

Says Mrs. K. E. Deaton, Black, Texas

"I've been wearing Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings for 8½ years," says Mrs. Deaton. "They ease the pain, help reduce fatigue and improve the appearance of my legs. I'd recommend them to anyone having varicose veins!"

If you suffer from the pain and unsightliness of surface varicose veins or swollen legs, Elastic Stockings may mean new beauty and new relief for you.

Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings are genuine two-way stretch, lightweight, neutral in tint, with authentic fashioned leg and instep. They withstand repeated launderings.

Ask your doctor's advice . . . then be sure you get Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings . . . almost invisible for beauty, firmly supporting for comfortable relief.

At drug, department and surgical stores

BAUER & BLACK, Dept. U9-6
Division of The Kendall Company
2500 S. Dearborn St., Chicago 16, Ill.

Write for Free Booklet

Please send me the free booklet "New Comfort and Relief for You."

Name_____

Address _____

City_____ Zone____ State_____

Elastic STOCKINGS

A product of

BAUER & BLACK

Division of The Kendall Company, Chicago 16

LAVORIS MOUTHWASH AND GARGLE

IT TASTES GOOD
IT'S GOOD TASTE

Spicy Cinnamon - Clove Flavor

Always...

For Good Mouthcare

DETACHES AND REMOVES GERM-HARBORING FILM FROM MOUTH AND THROAT

A DISTINCTIVE AND IMPORTANT CLEANSING ACTION

MOVING

cleaner United Van Lines *SANITIZED vans keep your possessions safer and cleaner. Licensed exclusively to United for moving vans and equipment, *SANITIZED is a self-antiseptic process that protects against mildew, germs and odors in transit. safer Extra care at no extra cost!

See classified phone book for your United agent.

Moving with Care Everywhere

United Sanitized MOVING VANS

United VAN LINES, Inc.

MAIN OFFICES: ST. LOUIS 12, MISSOURI

AMAZING CREAM REMOVES UNSIGHTLY HAIR QUICKLY, SAFELY

Acts Below "Razor Line" Without Cutting or Scraping Legs

The modern way to remove ugly hair from your legs is with Neet® Cream Depilatory. It works deeper than a razor, below the surface of the skin. Safer too from razor cuts and scratches. Neet leaves tender skin soft and smooth, free from razor stubble. Just apply Neet like any cream, then rinse off and hair disappears like magic.

SEND FOR FREE SHOE BOOKLET

BUY SHOECRAFT SALON SHOES DIRECT VIA MAIL!

SEND PENNY POSTAL TODAY FOR FREE 24 PAGE PICTURE BOOKLET OF THE LATEST SHORT GALS STYLES.

SHOECRAFT Short Gal's Fifth Avenue Shoes 603 Fifth Avenue, New York 17 gone out of her fine, single purpose, something had gone from her possession of the schoolhouse, something had gone from her proud loneliness.

Two weeks later Hendrick said to her, "You look a little peaked, Eliza. In love, maybe?" He rarely said such personal things to her, for she was cold enough with him, too, and he sometimes told his wife that if she weren't so good in her job, he'd fire her—she made him uncomfortable.

"Hardly," she said briefly.

"When you want your vacation? Not now, I hope."

"No. Winter'll be all right. Maybe Christmastime," she said.

"Fine! Fine!"

She applied herself to her job harder, sold the Timkins place.

One night she tried to work at her drawing and sat staring at the page for a long time, not able to do a stroke. She made an effort at last, but her hand was unsteady. She put her pen down, stood up and walked out of the schoolhouse, got her car out and drove home. Her mother and father were playing bridge with the Dennisons.

"Why, darling!" her mother said, putting down her hand. "What's wrong?"

"Nothing. Not a thing," she said. "Don't stop playing. I'll watch you."

It was the first time in her life that she had ever sat down and watched a bridge game.

"Draw up your chair," her father said. "You are about to see me go down three!"

She sat there, unhappy, and yet glad to be there. She had a wish that she might go up and get into her old bed and sleep and sleep and sleep.

They almost seemed to forget her. They played a lively game and had a familiar patter of good-natured insults. Eliza had always despised bridge as a complete waste of time, but she seemed tonight not to mind it much. She did not know why she had come or why she was glad to be there in the red chair at her father's elbow. After a bit her mother made coffee and she drank some and just sat there till the Dennisons went home.

"Well, I'd better be on my way," she said at last.

Her mother said quickly, "Oh, why don't you stay? It's so late now. I'll even bring your breakfast up to bed!"

"That's an inducement," she said. "I forgot bread and I wouldn't have any toast for breakfast."

"Good! I'll get you a pair of my pajamas."

So she did sleep in her old bed. For the first time in weeks she fell asleep at once, sinking down with something like ecstasy into darkness and emptiness and thoughtlessness.

In her father and mother's room, her mother said quietly, "Something's wrong with Eliza."

"Wrong with her?"

"You know it is. She's acted up to now as if it were a tremendous favor to give us a minute of her time. She—she came in as if she were running away from something."

"Well, I told you she'd get tired of that setup. Maybe someone was prowling around up there and she got scared."

"She looked so strange when she came in," Mrs. Beck persisted. "She looked . . . haunted."

"Don't stew over it, honey," John Beck said. "You ought to know by now we can't do much for Eliza."

She lay quietly in the darkness and said no more, but she was troubled and could not forget her first glimpse of Eliza's face when she had come into the bright living room. She thought, too, of that day when she had talked with Eliza about Toby Jones and of the red that had come up in a tide and stayed so long on Eliza's cheeks. In the way of women and mothers, she tied them together, though she had no real reason to do so.

But in the morning Eliza seemed quite her old self and went off to the office without giving any reason for her visit, or showing that it had meant anything special to her.

It had had its effect, however, though Eliza herself scarcely knew it. But she had slept that night, and she had hardly realized how many hours she had lain sleepless in her schoolhouse of late. She had begun to wish for some other Utopia, some other sanctuary, hide the truth from herself as she would. No, the effect went even deeper than that. She was uncertain of herself for the first time in her life. She wasn't certain of her talent or of her future greatness, as she had once been. And she couldn't work.

Sometimes, to reassure herself, she took out her drawings and looked them all over critically. They were good, she told herself, truly good. But the third time she did this, they seemed curiously monotonous to her—very fine and perfect, but monotonous. She thought again of her old plan to try them out on a publisher. She began to hunt for poems that the pictures would fit, copying them all, arranging them in book form with the pictures. She even took down the names of authors and publishers, knowing there were copyrights that would have to be respected. But then she did nothing more. She did not want to admit that Toby Jones' words had influenced her to such an extent.

One day she was taking a very nice woman from Philadelphia on a little tour of the countryside, looking at old houses. And when it was lunchtime she said, "I suppose you're getting hungry. We're quite near my house—why don't you stop and have a bite with me and then we can go up to this place on Copper Hill I wanted to show you?"

"Why, that's awfully nice of you," the woman said. "It would be fun."

So she took a guest, voluntarily, to her schoolhouse. She got down the old dishes with the brown vine, made sandwiches, scrambled eggs, coffee.

A man can spit at the world if he wants, but if the world spits at him he drowns.
—ANON.

The woman was enchanted with the schoolhouse and said, "How clever of you! If I do find a place, you must help me with it. Will you help me, if I find something possible?"

"Why I'd like to—though I'm no architect," Eliza said.

"Where did you ever find these dishes? They're exquisite!"

"They were my grandmother's."

That doesn't sound like much, but it was a good deal, really. It marked the spot where Eliza Beck admitted the need of someone in her house with her, and her remark about the dishes marked her first pride in family.

In midsummer Peter appeared at Hendrick's office one Friday afternoon and said, "Mom says to bring you home for supper. She's making raspberry shortcake."

"All right," she said and came with him. "Did you walk over?"

"Yeuh. Where's your car?"

"Right at the corner."

Inside the car Peter said lazily, "Toby sent you a message."

"Toby?" she said, as if she didn't know the name.

"Toby Jones. Don't tell me he made no more impression on you than that! I must remember to tell him!"

"I remember him," she said stiffly. "He was very impertinent."

"To say the least," he agreed, laughing. "Good guy, though, Toby is. One of the best." She didn't answer and presently he went on: "He said to tell the Snow Queen—that's what he calls you—that he might drop in one of these days and clear up the unfinished business."

"There isn't any unfinished business."

"I told him he would be wasting his charm. Bad medicine for each other, you two would be."

They had come to the house and she didn't need to reply. She sent no message. But her mother eyed her from time to time troubledly.

"I wish you weren't so thin, Eliza."

"I like to be thin," she answered.

Even if he is an unsettled, wandering sort of man, I wish she would see him again, her

(Continued on Page 122)

He's so helpless—so dependent on you to keep him comfortable all the day through Treat his thinner skin tenderly

You take special care of his soft little shirts—see that they're scrupulously rinsed of every bit of soap residue. His skin is so tender—so easily irritated—everything that touches it must be soft as down. Your baby's skin really is thinner than a grownup's — skin studies show it would chafe quicker. He needs all your loving care to keep him comfortable all day long.

You gladly take the time to change him—keeping his tender skin dry means so much to his comfort. If your baby is under 6 months, try fluffing up 20 or more sheets of ScotTissue and inserting them in baby's diaper. You won't have to bother with so many complete diaper changes. Just flush away the soiled tissue. Means less laundering for you—more comfort for baby.

More mothers every day are finding the ideal combination of "tender skin" qualities in ScotTissue "Old linen" softness that won't chafe . . . instant absorbency for cleanest cleansing. Just the right strength to prevent tearing or shredding even when moist. You can always trust ScotTissue's comforting softness in caring for your baby's tender thinner skin. Trade Marks "ScotTissue," "Soft as old linen" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

SCOTTISSUE IS SOFT AS OLD LINEN

You'll never Squeeze Again!

...once you taste

Snow Crop

Frozen Orange Juice

Why squeeze . . . when SNOW CROP Orange Juice is so quick . . . so good . . . so easy? SNOW CROP brings you the juice of luscious oranges at their peak . . . tree-ripened . . . tree-fresh. Makes the grandest juice you ever tasted in just forty-five seconds. And what a big money-saver! Always ask for SNOW CROP, the original frozen orange juice concentrate.

Grandest for Flavor!
SNOW CROP'S squeezed-this-minute goodness just can't be beat.

Grandest for Health!
Natural Vitamin "C" content of the fruit is retained.

Grandest for Convenience!
No squeezer—no waste—no mess. Fresh juice in 45 seconds.

Insist on Snow Crop for controlled quality...lower prices

For the best in frozen fruits, vegetables, fish and poultry . . . at lower prices . . . always insist on SNOW CROP. You'll find every one of SNOW CROP'S forty frozen foods tops in freshness and quality at real budget-saving prices. You're sure when you ask your grocer for SNOW CROP Frozen Foods.

A SUBSIDIARY OF CLINTON INDUSTRIES, INC.

Snow Crop
FROZEN FOODS

(Continued from Page 120)

mother thought. Even if it turned out badly. He did make an impression on her, though she'd die rather than admit it. . . . She's going to get old and spinsterish and never know what it is to love anyone.

And when Peter left, she said, "Why don't you bring Toby up again? He was fun."

"I'll do that, maybe," Peter said. "To tell you the truth, he hinted that he come this time—but I didn't want to bring him."

"Why not?"

"Oh, it's just a notion I've got—about him and Liz. He was taken with her—you know that. But you know Liz. And I know Toby. I don't want either of them to get burned. Liz isn't good enough for him. Sounds nasty, but she isn't, mom. She's got looks, but that's all she has got. He's a hellion with the ladies—but he's got a heart. He wouldn't marry her in a thousand years. I don't think he'll ever marry anyone, but he certainly wouldn't marry Liz. I suppose she was rude as all get out to him and he can't take it—that kind of tactics draws 'em on, at first. Well, I just don't want to be in the middle of a mess like that might get to be."

"Still," his mother said slowly and gravely, "I wish you'd bring him."

"Be it on your own head!" Peter said lightly, but his eyes were a little puzzled at his mother's attitude.

Two weeks later Eliza went out one early morning to take in her milk and Toby Jones was sitting on the front step, smoking.

"Coffee ready?" he said, not moving.

She felt anger flow through her in a great tide. It was like the anger she had used to feel toward Peter when he snooped in her poems. Then she felt something else mingled with the anger, something strange but equally powerful, to which she gave no name.

"Mr. Jones ——" she said.

"Toby," he interrupted. "Just Toby, Eliza."

"Mr. Jones," she began again, "I might as well be quite frank. I don't want to have coffee with you. I don't want to see you or talk to you."

He still sat there, his back to the wall, lazily, quite contented. "Well, we wouldn't have to talk," he conceded. "But you might spare the coffee. After I've risen at dawn to come see you."

SHE turned, went swiftly into the schoolhouse. She poured a cup of coffee, carried it out to the steps, handed it to him silently.

"Oh, thank you. Thank you very much," he said.

She went back inside, prepared her own breakfast, sat at the desk with it. But when she lifted the spoon to sugar her cereal, she spilled the sugar across the desk. She couldn't eat. She drank her coffee, poured another cupful. She had with unsteady hand poured a third cup when the door opened and he came across the floor with his cup.

He stood by the desk, looking down at the soggy mess of her cereal. "No appetite? Tchk! Tchk!"

"If you'd go away so I could eat in peace, I might have some appetite," she said.

"Oh? So I disturb your peace?" he said. "That's interesting. That's very interesting. Let's just have a few words about that, shall we?"

"No," she said.

"How final," he said. He sat on the corner of the desk and she remembered the professor. She wanted to order him off the desk, but could not. "Do you know, Eliza, I've given some thought to your case, and I've come to the conclusion that you're something of a fraud. You really warm up, given the proper emotional stimulus. I'm not bad at being a stimulus and I've had a feeling it was my duty not to quarrel with you—just gently bring out your latent possibilities."

"YOU can take your stimulus elsewhere. I'm just not interested, Mr. Jones."

"Toby," he corrected her automatically. Then he said in a speculative tone, "Maybe it's some childhood complex. Maybe we ought to dig into your past and find out what makes you tick. Maybe you've got a father complex, though I'm sure I wouldn't see just why—your dad seems like an awfully decent, normal sort of man. But maybe it's that—or maybe you're jealous of your mother's charm. Did you ever consider that one?"

"No, I never did," she said. "And I haven't got a father complex—nor am I jealous of my mother. Why in heaven's name should I be? I'm just a human being who likes privacy. You wouldn't be able to understand that."

"No? You'd be surprised at the odd things I understand. I could even tell you why you might be jealous of your mother, enough so you'd want to make yourself over in the opposite image, if you'd care to hear. . . . She likes people and people like her. They love her, because she's got the gift of giving herself to all and sundry. She's gay and she's got a kind of sweetness, old-fashioned you might call it, that you don't see much any more. And your father's still in love with her, after twenty-five years or so of marriage. . . . Yes, I can see plenty of reasons why."

"That's absolute nonsense," she said. "I've never had the least desire to be like my mother. I—I love my mother, but we don't have much in common."

"I see," he said. He leaned over and put a finger in the sand of the garden, traced a line parallel to the path. She wanted to scream at him but she was not one to scream, and she was inhibited by the results of her last command not to touch the bowl. It seemed to her, though, that he was deliberately goading her by his act and she wanted to do or say something terrible, shocking. He made the line very carefully, then he looked up and smiled at her, and the smile admitted that he had done this to annoy her. "So you love your mother, do you?" he said.

"Naturally."

"Oh, it isn't so natural as the storybooks make it out to be," he said. "I know plenty of people who loathe their parents." He looked down at the bowl as if trying to think of something else he could do to the garden. His hand moved toward it, paused, then pro-

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Early Morning Ballad

By Nathaniel Burt

I went one morning early
Down to the railroad track.
The dew lay thick and pearly,
The railway long and black.

The birds sang all around me
As far as I could hear,
And way off down the valley
The morning train drew near.

At first I heard in warning
A whistle sad and clear;
I saw the white smoke lifting,
The engine front appear.

With an approaching thunder
The train bore down the line
And passed me in a wonder
Of noise and steam and shine.

I shouted at the engine,
I waved to all the crew,
And every man waved back at me
The way they always do.

Cinders flew up behind them,
The bushes bent and shone;
With all the birds still singing
They left me there alone.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

TIMMY HATLO

& Mrs. Hatlo live in el, California, where y Hatlo creates daily cartoons ned over by ons...

say Mr. & Mrs. Hatlo—

This California custom of the Olive Bowl is a wonderful idea!"

WE THINK YOU'LL like this easant California custom. There's easier way to say 'welcome' en friends call...and it's an equally e idea when just the family gathers. 'You simply fill up a bowl or two h your favorite brand of California e olives—and set them out where es can help themselves! Try it...and en to the compliments."

Ripe olives from California fill an ored place in the diet. Among other food ues, California ripe olives offer you rishing protein...and they're a source Vitamin A and iron. But the reason ifornia ripe olives are famed throughout world is FLAVOR!

Bite into one. Here's plump, meaty dness. Here's good eating. Have another njoy all you want! (Yes, even if you're calorie-counter." For 8 to 10 California e olives just about equal 100 calories.)

Good Eating!
How long since you've enjoyed 'em? Get some!
Ripe Olives
from CALIFORNIA

ceeded to the pagoda, picked it up and scrutinized it. "That's not absolutely authentic."

"I assure you it is. Put it down, please."

He grinned at her, put it back, a little crookedly. She couldn't help herself—she reached out and straightened it.

"Finicky," he said lazily. "Regular old-maid finicky.... Do you read Sanskrit?"

"Sanskrit?" she ejaculated. "No."

"Me, either. I take mine translated. Just wondered if you knew that one that starts every stanza with 'Even now.'"

"Mr. Jones ——" she began in helpless protest.

"It's in that green Anthology of World Poetry," he went on as if she had not spoken. "Look it up sometime. Of course the circumstances are a bit different—odd, though, how little circumstances have varied since the eleventh century or whenever it was, isn't it? The way he said 'my girl' might have been said by Pete, or anybody right now."

"What has that to do with me, Mr. Jones?"

"What?" He raised his brows. "Why, everything. I'm trying to convey to your thick head that that's the way I feel about you. I haven't gone to prison and I'm not going to die for you, but I'll go this far: you've become my haunt. And I've lost my zest for more-willing females. Somebody's got to wake you up—it might as well be me."

"I'm not asleep."

"You're absolutely dead to the world. Look at me."

She tried to bring her gaze up quickly, indifferently, but when her eyes met his blue, mocking glance, she dropped her head. He laughed and she felt her face grow hot as it had that day with her mother. She stood up, her hands on the desk, and cried out, almost incoherently, "Go away from here! Go away! I don't want you here! Put that down!" for he had picked up the pagoda again and was looking it over in that critical fashion. He dropped the pagoda, but picked up the whole bowl and dropped it with some violence on the floor, where the bowl broke into a great many parts and the bridge was squashed as flat as if made of paper.

HE had slid off the desk. He looked down at the ruined garden, then at her. "Sand and sticks," he said. "Just sand and sticks.... We do quarrel, don't we?"

She was trembling. She thought she was going to faint, but she stood there erect, scornful, and did not speak.

"I could kiss you again," he said. "But I don't think I will, even if you would like me to. Abstinence makes awfully good fuel.... One of these days you'll ask me to."

She thought she said, I'd rather die! and then realized she hadn't spoken at all.

He said, "So long, Eliza," and this time he did not come back.

Suddenly she went down on her knees by the bowl, began to gather the pieces toward her, the flattened little bridge, the pagoda that was still unharmed, the little stem of white phlox. She began to cry, holding the things against her knees, feeling the sand on her fingers. She couldn't seem to stop crying. She did not even pretend they were tears of anger, though in a way they were—anger at herself because she knew it was true that she had thought he might kiss her and that something had curled her heart up like death when he had not. She was shocked at the knowledge and for a few moments she loathed herself, then she sat down there on the floor and simply cried.

It was now that she knew the tower had fallen, now that she knew she dwelt in a lonely place, now that she knew she neither loved nor was loved, now that she knew her feeling for the professor had been nothing, nothing at all but a little fantasy of her own childish heart, no real tragedy, no real cause of suffering, now that she knew what her mother had meant when she'd said long ago, "I could wish nothing worse for you. But perhaps everybody will."

The destruction of her self-sufficiency was the greater because it had been so nearly complete, just as no one can be so devout as a convert who has long been a sinner. Eliza fell a long way that afternoon. Perhaps she really fell weeks before, but now she ac-

"You just can't beat a Wilson Canned Meat"

All Wilsonville turns out to cheer
When the Canned Meat Train pulls in
For folks love Wilson's "Quickie Meals"
Each in a handy tin.

Mary wants that meaty HASH
Her family loves the flavor
Margie wants delicious MOR
To win her husband's favor.

Millie's quest is for B-V
To make gravies rich and good
You, too, can shop in Wilsonville
It's right in your neighborhood.

E.A.F.

Buy Wilson's Canned Meats from your favorite food dealer today.

WILSON & CO.

The Wilson label protects your table knowledged the fall and she felt lost with a terrible lostness, nothing firm to her touch, no line of trees familiar, no goal in sight.

It would be better not to watch Eliza Beck through the next weeks of her life. Better not to watch her garden neglected, the dust gathering on her drawings, on her furniture. Better not to see her at the library table, staring down at the lines:

Just for a small and a forgotten time
I have had full in my eyes from off my girl
The whitest pouring of eternal light.

Better not to watch her standing in the crude little bathroom in her schoolhouse, looking at her face in the mirror, searching for any light in her gray eyes, finding it not. Better not see her, walking away from her schoolhouse into the woods, walking, walking, till she was so tired she could walk no more. Better not see her lying awake, aware of night black and sinister all about her. Better not to know of her longing to go home, be comforted by her mother's affection, fearing the affection gone after all its rebuffs.

She walked into her old home one late afternoon. It was Mrs. Grimsby's day out and her mother was in the kitchen. She went out to the kitchen and her mother looked up from her work and saw her face, eyes wide, sunk back into her face, mouth tight and strange.

Eliza sat down on the kitchen stool. "Remember how we used to have fried bread and jam Friday night always?" she said. "Couldn't we have some tonight?"

Mrs. Beck had been starting a salad, for the night was warm, but she began to clear the ingredients away. "Why, of course," she said. "That sounds perfect. We haven't had fried bread in a long time." She turned to the refrigerator for milk and eggs, got out the iron skillet. She was stirred deeply by something in Eliza's voice, but she tried not to show it. "I thought we'd eat out here," her mother said. "Want to get the yellow cloth?"

Eliza went to the sideboard, came back with the yellow cloth.

"You might call dad," her mother said.

But Eliza didn't eat much, after all. She drank two cups of coffee, answered questions but volunteered nothing. Her father had an errand and went out, and Eliza lifted her cup toward her mother for more coffee.

"You're drinking a lot of coffee, darling. Should you?" her mother said.

"Probably not," she said. "I—I'm just awfully tired, mother."

"Well, you look tired. Why don't you run up and crawl into bed?"

"I think I will, if you don't mind."

She went slowly out of the room and up the stairs while her mother stood still in the middle of the kitchen, looking after her. After Mrs. Beck had washed the dishes she went upstairs, stood a moment outside Eliza's door, then walked in.

"Feeling rested any?" she asked gently. She came and sat down beside the bed, and to her astonishment Eliza reached out a hand and took one of hers.

"I'm just so tired," she said. "Sit there a while if—if you haven't anything to do."

Mrs. Beck sat quite still, letting Eliza's hand rest in hers. She wanted to cry, but she didn't. She knew she had been right, that something had happened to Eliza, but she knew she had almost given up hoping that anything would happen that would let Eliza cling to her like this.

It was a long time later that Eliza said, "Did you ever think I was jealous of you?"

"Of me? Heavens, no! Quite the contrary!" Mrs. Beck said.

"I don't think so, either. It would be funny to find it was so, though."

"Well, I don't think you'll ever find it was so. Whatever made you think of such a fantastic notion?"

"I just wondered."

Presently Mrs. Beck saw that Eliza h fallen asleep. She looked young, oddly fenseless, but some of the tiredness linge even in sleep. The tears did spring to M Beck's eyes, but she sat there a long ti Eliza's hand still in hers. Then Eliza tur a little, drew her hand away. After a Mrs. Beck got up and walked softly out down the stairs. John Beck had come b and sat in a corner of the sofa with the ne paper. She sat down close beside him, put head against his shoulder.

"Oh, John," she said, "what do peo do—how can they bear it if they can't t to anyone? What would I do if I could talk to you?"

He dropped the paper, put his arm arou her. "Why, sweetheart—what is it? Yo crying! . . . Is it Eliza?"

"I guess so. . . . It's everybody that's locked up. . . . Yes, I guess it's Eliza."

He didn't tell her it was nonsense. He d her closer, put his cheek down against hair. "Yeuh—it's tough. It's tough."

In the morning when Eliza woke in old room she didn't know for a moment wh she was. She looked for the line of the wo and saw instead the peak of the Ainsl house next door and a branch of the elm t on the border line between the houses. had always had an amazing health, felt long legs to be like supple steel. Now she as if her whole body had turned to sawd Still, she knew that at nine o'clock she m be in Hendrick's office.

Adversity has made many a man great who, had he remained prosperous, would only have been rich.

—MAURICE SWITZER: Meditations of Marcus O'Ralius (Kelly-Springfield).

saw that she had flung suit across a chair, so thing she had never d in her orderly life shocked her. There w small blue clock on her reau and she saw the h sliding mercilessly do past eight, but she did move. The faint tick of clock made her rememb

"Maybe we ought to dig into your past find out what makes you tick—if you do tic

"I don't tick. I don't tick at all," she s Yet she knew that she had once felt ful purpose, sure of her goal, pleased with severance from her family. "I did tick— I don't now," she said.

She got out of bed. She seemed to st and walk, yet felt it strange that she She even took a shower, found an old carded but clean blouse, put it on with wrinkled suit.

Her mother said, "Oh, I hoped you'd t a day off. You were so tired last night, ling!"

"I'm all right," she said.

She went to the office, went through tasks in a kind of numbness, then drove h to her schoolhouse. She saw it looked desol For one thing, the grass was too tall. She had a farmer come and cut it for her, but weeks now it had grown unhindered. garden looked dry and forlorn, and w she opened the door, the air of the r seemed stale, dead. There was dust on ev thing. She stood looking at the desola where once all had shone with cleanlin

There's nothing to do but go on, she told self. Nothing at all to do but go on.

She took off her suit, put on slacks an old sweater, began to pump water for flowers. But when she reached the li flower bed, the blooms all looked sickly, dead. She went for a trowel and begar loosen the earth about them. She worked it was nearly dusk. Then she went in began to clean the room, dusting, wash dishes, tidying, till it had a semblance o former brightness. She made a cup of tea had some bread and jam with it. She wor stubbornly, but without heart.

As she ate she saw in the wastebasket broken bowl and the sand and she shiv a little. She knew quite well in that w moment that she would never see Toby J again. She might haunt him, but he was with her—unless she asked him to com her. And she knew she could never do t never. No one with pride could do suc thing. She remembered how she had sp

"Don't suppose it could be Toby, do you?"

"I just don't know, Peter."

"I told you I was afraid of it. Toby's dyna-ite, you know. I told you that. Maybe hat's why he won't come up. Doesn't want er claws in him."

"You're making that up," his mother said. And Eliza doesn't put her claws into any-ne."

"Think not? I'll bet she could. She's al-ays wanted her own way and moved heaven nd earth to get it. . . . Hope it isn't Toby, ecause he won't be driven. Think I'll run p tomorrow and quiz her a bit."

"And I think you won't. Just leave her one, Peter. If she's in love she has to work out herself. I don't say she is, anyway. ut leave her alone."

"Something's hit her," he persisted.

Because she agreed with him completely, he was silent. She knew something had hit liza and she thought that something might e the violent young Toby Jones. And she nought that Toby Jones was just as Peter ad described him, that he would hate pur-uit, that he wouldn't mind a stimulating ttack on Eliza's stand-offishness, but that e would not mind going off after the little dventure and never seeing Eliza again. Her eart ached for Eliza and she longed to hand er happiness on a silver platter, but knew he never had and never could. But she had n odd resurgence of hope, because Eliza was ifferent, gentler, not so sure of herself, al-ost wistful. Even if she got hurt, wouldn't be a blessing? She had always been so sure he couldn't get hurt. It was wonderful, she old herself, just to have Eliza not an enemy.

It was the next week, after the first snow ad fallen, that Eliza came in on Saturday fternoon and said, "Mother, would you go elp me pick out a suit—and maybe let me et it on your credit? I don't know if I have oney enough."

"I'd love it!" her mother said, though liza had picked out her own clothes since e was twelve. "About time you got a new uit. You could do with a new coat too."

"No, I can't manage that. Just a suit and naybe a hat."

They went downtown and Eliza was very uiet on the way. She tried on suits and there as one of green, with a topcoat, pockets dged with fur. Her mother said, "That's he one!"

Eliza stood and looked at herself in the mirror. "It's far too much," she said.

"Oh, one has to go overboard once in a while, darling. Get it."

"You—you think it's all right for New York right now?"

"Perfect. Are you going to New York?"

"Yes," Eliza said.

"Fun! When?"

"Any day now," Eliza said vaguely, still looking at herself in the glass. There was something about her gray eyes in the mirror that was searching, begging for some reassurance.

"Try that little brown fur cap with it."

So she put the fur cap on and the clerk said, "Lovely! It couldn't be better!"

Eliza gave a small sigh. "I'll take them," she said. Eliza had never asked them for a penny, resented even presents. But all she said afterward was: "That's an awful lot of money. But I had to have them."

"Oh, we'll trust you, darling!" her mother said lightly. "Of course you had to have them."

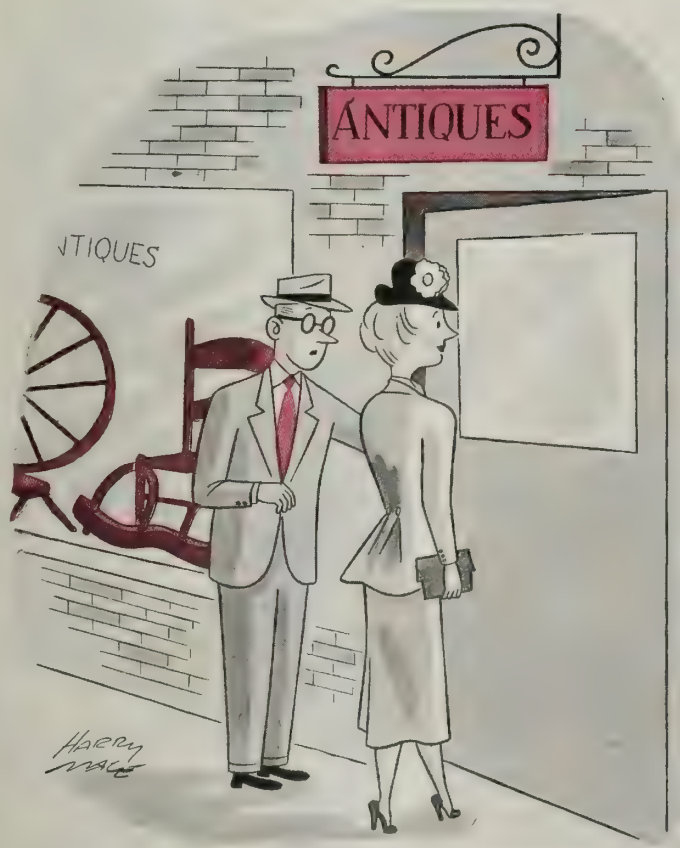
On Wednesday afternoon Eliza Beck stood on the small high front porch of an old brownstone boardinghouse on 57th Street.

"Is this where Peter Beck lives?" she asked.

"Yes," the woman said, not opening the door wide.

"I'm his sister. When does he get home?"

"Sister?" the woman said doubtfully. "There's no telling. He sometimes comes in before dinner, but mostly he's out till all hours."



"Could I come in and wait for him?"

"You can wait if you want to, but not up in his room. I don't allow that here. . . . But he might not be in till midnight. Likely won't."

"I'll wait," Eliza said.

The woman showed her reluctantly into a big but dreary parlor. "I'll leave the door open so you can watch the hall," she did offer, that was all.

Eliza did not sit down at once. She stood there in her green suit and topcoat, the little fur cap on her head, looked slowly about the room. It was a horrible room, she thought, full of dull old oil paintings and velvet-covered chairs. It was horrible and smelled of dust and mice. But its very awfulness, its very foreignness calmed her a little. Her

"Now remember—we don't buy a thing unless we really need it."

Ready for the Fire

Heat & Eat Enjoy

Van Camp's SINCE 1861 · Stokely's Finest SINCE 1898 · Honor Brand Frozen Foods SINCE 1933

MIRRO-MATIC

"America's Most-Wanted Pressure Pan"

The New MIRRO-MATIC "8"

8-Quart Pressure Pan and Canner

Offered in response to popular demand, the handsome new "8" combines all the desirable features of the original MIRRO-MATIC "4" with generous, extra capacity! It will pressure cook an 8 lb. chuck roast, ham or fowl, in minutes, to unheard-of-tenderness. For pressure canning, it holds 7 pint-jars or No. 2 cans, 4 quart-jars or No. 2½ cans. Identify it by the MIRRO-MATIC Control, the graceful domed cover, the extra side grip for easy handling. With rack and recipe book, $17.95. (West, $18.95.)

The MIRRO-MATIC "4"

4-Quart Pressure Pan

This familiar favorite will pressure cook low-cost cuts of meat, flavory vegetables, light-as-air custards, or puddings, in jig time. And, as a welcome helping hand during the home-canning season, it will hold 4 pint-jars or No. 2 cans. For cooking or canning, you'll find the MIRRO-MATIC "4" easy to use, easy to keep sparkling clean, and lovely to look at. These are the reasons why this popular pan is "most-wanted" in modern kitchens all over America. With rack and recipe book, $12.95. (West, $13.95.)

BOTH MIRRO-MATICS give you . . .

. . . Cooking Without Looking

The MIRRO-MATIC Audible Control automatically prevents pressure from going higher than your recipe requires . . . 5, 10, or 15 lbs. Indestructible! Trouble-free! Exclusive!

MIRRO THE FINEST ALUMINUM get MIRRO-MATIC at department, house-furnishing, and hardware stores, wherever dealers sell the finest aluminum.

The MIRRO-MATIC Deep-Well Pressure Cooker is now featured in ADMIRAL, COOLERATOR, ESTATE, FRIGIDAIRE, GIBSON, MARION, NORGE, AND WESTINGHOUSE RANGES

ALUMINUM GOODS MANUFACTURING COMPANY • MANITOWOC, WISCONSIN

World's Largest Manufacturer of Aluminum Cooking Utensils

hands were cold, for she had been frightened for days now. Her face was a little pinched and her eyes seemed too big for her face.

She looked again at the chairs, but didn't want to sit in them. She moved to a big mahogany table cluttered with framed photographs, leaned against it where she could watch the hall. A young man came in and ran up the stairs, but it wasn't Peter. After what seemed a long time another man came in, looked slowly through letters on the stand in the hall, went slowly, empty-handed up the stairs.

Maybe he won't help me, she thought once, but for the most part she did not think at all, just stood there, cold, weak in the knees, leaning against the table and watching the hall. Then she heard someone come up the front steps, whistling a little, but mutedly, and she thought, That's Peter. She even moved away from the table toward the door, so sure she was.

But it was not Peter. Toby Jones stood in the doorway, staring at her incredulously. She stared back at him, not saying a word. It was for this she had come, but not here, not now, not yet. She had not dreamed he lived here.

"Well—Eliza!" he said, and his voice was just as she remembered it, skeptical, rude—but his voice. "Were you looking for Pete?"

"Yes," she said.

"Think he'll be late. Did he know you were coming?"

"No."

"I'll see if I can ring his office, but I doubt if he'll be there."

"Never mind." she said. "Never mind."

She hadn't moved. He looked at her as if he didn't know what to say next, as if perhaps he wished he were somewhere else. "Got a room?" he asked.

"No."

"Maybe Mrs. Connors can fix you up. She's got an extra or two for transients. . . . What's the matter?"

"Nothing."

He kept on looking at her, with that odd embarrassment, refusing anything but politeness. Then he came in quietly, closed the door behind him.

"Something's the trouble," he said. "What is it? Spill it—I won't quarrel with you."

"I can't," she said. Her voice was almost a whisper.

"Don't tell me you're afraid of me. I didn't think you were afraid of man or devil. . . . Have you robbed a bank? I know the chief of police like my own brother. . . . Look, I know I've got off to a bad start with you—but I'm quite harmless, really. Something is wrong, anybody could see that. . . . And why are you so thin? You'll lose your looks if you don't look out."

Even the new suit—even the little fur hat did nothing. She could see that quite plainly. He didn't even know they were new. There was nothing like—like a light from her. She had walked such a little while in the path of humility and she seemed to be lost in it, stumbling over roots, hitting into strange branches.

She said it baldly, unbeautifully. "You said I would ask you to kiss me one of these days. I came to ask you," she said in a voice close to harsh.

He jerked his head up, and into his blue eyes came a blaze of delight and astonishment. "Well, why didn't you say so?" he demanded. "Is that all?"

The fur hat was brushed off to the floor, but she did not even know it was gone. She didn't even think that she was at last given over to life. She just lived.

At last he put his hands on her shoulders and grinned down at her, but gently. "How's that—my girl?" he asked.

Peter said to his mother at Christmas, "I'd never have believed it—never. It'll never work out. They'll hate each other in a month. He'll never settle down and she won't take his life. You know she won't—you ought to have forbidden the banns!"

"I wasn't asked," his mother said. "But I think you're wrong, Pete. I think it will work out."

THE END

Tied to a greasy skillet?

Don't slave over messy, crusty skillets with a limp dishrag! Use a metal-fiber Brillo pad-with-soap!

Shine 'em quick with BRILLO

A Brillo pad-with-soap whisks crust off pots and pans. Shines 'em fast. Use Brillo every day!

GREEN box—pads and cake soap
RED box—soap-filled pads

contains JEWELER'S POLISH

Shines aluminum fast!

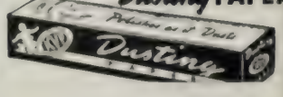
WAX-FREE PRESERVING

This year seal your preserves easily, attractively . . . WITHOUT WAX. Use Essay Seals (formerly QUIKSEALS) on any shape glass container. Ideal too for covering leftover foods. Send $1.00 for 250 Essay Seals today. Cash, check or money order. No C.O.D.'s Jobbers — Agents! Choice territories still open.

ESSAY MFG. CO. Dept. L, Quincy 69, Mass.

NO WASHING + NO DRYING + NO BREAKAGE + NO HELP OR HUBBY NEEDED FOR DISHES +

PAPER PLATES Save You Plenty



Paper Plate Association, Room 3702A, 122 E. 42nd St., New York 17, N.Y.

Goodbye DIRTY DUST RAG

Save work and time in housecleaning . . . end messy, dangerous oily rags. Use KVP Dusting Paper. Picks up dust and polishes in one clean, easy sweep. Throw away after use. Put KVP Dusting Paper on your shopping list.

KVP Dusting PAPER

PSYCHIATRY NEEDS YOU

(Continued from Page 40)

Psychiatry, the American Psychiatric Association and countless smaller, local groups. All these groups believe that if the public knows more about mental illness, what it is, how to avoid it, and about the methods and facilities for treating and curing it, something will be done to help its victims. The NMHF is one which came by its beliefs the hard way: by experience. When its members went through the change of attitude toward mental illness that personal knowledge brings, they became sure others could, too, given a chance.

In the last century, Dorothea Dix (the social crusader) had a similar faith: she put on a one-woman fight to get the insane out of almshouses and jails into country retreats supported by the state. She battled and won her campaign to have the mentally ill regarded as sick people, rather than derelicts. But with her passing went much of the fervor to progress farther along the road she opened. Today, we need not another Dorothea Dix, but rather 1,000,000 more who will work to get our outdated, outworn mental hospitals into step with modern knowledge of treatment, cure and prevention.

This is a large demand, but the problem is a large and important one. If you were asked what disease caused the greatest economic and social loss to our country, you'd probably guess cancer, polio or tuberculosis. But you'd be wrong. It's schizophrenia. One quarter of all hospital beds in the country are occupied by schizophrenics. Their average hospitalization runs to eight years, and only one out of two returns permanently, under present conditions. The annual cost of their illness to the country amounts to approximately $400,000,000 in hospital bills; and another $250,000,000 to $400,000,000 in earning power. The cost to the individual is horrendous: as well as the mental and physical suffering he undergoes, he also loses a good chunk out of his life; he faces a loss of half his earning power, some of his friends; and if the disease runs its usual lengthy course, his children may become wards of the state, and his wife's health may break under the strain. If the state mental hospitals cared only for schizophrenics, they would be worthy of better support, more modern equipment, more and better personnel, and greater public concern.

THE first need—but not the only one—in the battle to better our public facilities for mental illness is money. Support of the state mental hospitals comes out of taxes. Appropriations for mental hospitals are already high, but they will have to be increased, or special bonds issued, if we want to improve conditions. And still that will not be enough. More money will be needed for research, for public education, for clinics, for scholarships in psychiatry.

We "open our hearts" for heart disease; we add to the March of Dimes; we buy Christmas seals to fight TB. There is at present no co-ordinated drive for funds to fight mental illness, but there are at least four major national organizations which could put to constructive use contributions of any size—from a dime to as many dollars as you can give. These are the National Mental Health Foundation in Philadelphia, and the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, the World Federation for Mental Health, and the Psychiatric Foundation in New York. There are also many small units that do big jobs in this field—foundations like Stockbridge, Sheppard-Enoch Pratt, the Institute for Living and the Menninger Foundation, to name only a few. Why is money needed? Take the research problem alone—we are currently spending close to $90 per patient on research into infantile paralysis—but less than $1 per patient on research in mental illness. Yet there are ten times as many victims of mental illness as there are of polio. How can we afford not to spend more?

MORE than money is needed, however, if we are to wage a sustained and successful campaign against mental illness. Psychiatry needs a body of interested citizens behind it to do its job properly and well. The people who are mentally ill also need friends. Their humanness is being forgotten in the complexity of the problem they present. But that problem is not unsolvable. It has been said that psychiatry is now in the stage where medicine was when Pasteur isolated bacteria. It can glimpse over the horizon the possibilities of steady advancement in the curing of many of civilization's ills; it can look back on a short but remarkable history of progress. And all around it, it can see a crying need for help.

The field is so vast and complex that the average citizen may shy away from offering his services. But even the smallest efforts are needed—and wanted. There is a stir of activity, a pushing forward, but even the best intentions are still hampered by lack of public interest.

For instance, in one mental hospital I visited, one building stood out in startling contrast to the rest. It had recently been remodeled. It was an attractive place, with pale green walls, partitions for sleeping privacy, easy-to-clean bathrooms, a first-aid room, a pleasant dining room, a sitting room with comfortable chairs, and an occupational-therapy room with sewing and craft materials. The patients here looked interested and cheerful: the nurses said their morale had improved immensely in their new surroundings—and I could well believe it when I went next door into one of the older buildings. Here the plaster was crumbling; the windows were shadowed with bars; the bathrooms were old and the facilities few; the dayroom contained nothing but two hard benches and on the walls were the scribblings of many years and many hours of desperation—curse words and ravings, and "This is hell," and "Abandon hope." Several women lay on the floor; in one corner, an attendant mopped at a puddle. "We hope to remodel this building as soon as we can get the funds," the director said. "Until then . . ." His voice trailed off.

Merely knowing such conditions exist is, of course, no help unless you are willing to do something about them. We have spoken of the need for money. There is also a great need for contributions of cheer and interest. The recreational department or the director of the hospital can guide you on this. The needs are many, and there are few people in the field. Recently, a group of women told me how they had arranged to make their

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Queen Anne's Lace

By Clarence K. Streit

God must cherish
Queen Anne's lace,
For He made it
Commonplace.

Fringing meadows
With His grace,
Nature sows His
Queen Anne's lace.

Where the needle,
Who the ace,
Who can copy
Queen Anne's lace?

Patterns perfect
Did He trace
Who created
Queen Anne's lace.

In God's acre
Mark my place
With a hem of
Queen Anne's lace.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

civic contribution a weekly visit to the local mental hospital. They made their first visit at Christmastime, armed with small presents prettily wrapped. Some were pieces of discarded jewelry; there were a few boxes of candy, some old books and magazines. One patient, tears rolling down her cheeks, told them that this was the first book she'd seen in two years. "We used to be allowed to receive magazines," she said, "but when it got so crowded there were never enough to go around and we quarreled over them. They took them away then." Every Thursday for over a year, these women have visited that hospital; they are old friends now with some of the patients. "It means so much to them," one of the women told me, "but it means more to us."

At another hospital, the relatives of the patients got together to do something about conditions in the hospital—but one of the first resolutions they made was to try to get visitors and correspondents for the patients who had no visitors and no letters. "There is so much loneliness in that place," said one man, "that once you've felt it you can't stand by and do nothing."

In another hospital, the patients had been visited by a cartoonist three weeks before—but it was all they could talk about. The pictures he had made of them were wrinkled and worn with handling, but they were still more precious in the eyes of their owners than a canvas of Leonardo da Vinci's.

These hospitals are yours. You foot the bill for them. The patients within their dour walls may someday be your relatives—or you. For if you become mentally ill, the state hospital is the only place where you will be cared for—unless you are very rich indeed and can afford one of the few private hospitals in the country, or are a veteran and can get modern service at one of the Veterans Administration hospitals.

If you have more time and effort to give than the special visit or the occasional gift calls for, ask the Red Cross whether you can join, or help form, a Gray Lady unit to work with the hospital. As yet, such units work only locally, at the request of the local hospitals, but the demands for them are growing so pressing that this program is likely to become national within a year or so. The Gray Ladies help register patients, entertain, counsel friends and relatives, run library services, and work in the occupational therapy rooms. At present, they serve in many Veterans Administration hospitals and in 32 state mental hospitals. They could work in a great many more if more women would join their ranks.

One small, pretty Gray Lady told me of how fear changed to sympathy through her work and added: "My husband is a banker. He was horrified at my working in a mental hospital. Now I think he envies me the work. His civic work is fund drives—and mine is human emotions."

For those who prefer community work, there is much to be done here too. There is a vast political and social job needed to bring our legislation on care of the mentally ill up-to-date. Too often the disturbed person is viewed as a legal problem rather than a medical problem—for instance, several states still jail the mentally ill person until it is ruled that he can be committed to an institution and receive care. And although most states are not so medieval as this in their attitude, only a few have an approach to mental illness consonant with today's knowledge of what can be done in the way of prevention, education and treatment.

Many states recognize this and are struggling to get something done. Some have recently organized—or reorganized—mental-hygiene groups for action. They include Ohio, Illinois, Oklahoma, Indiana, Kansas, New Jersey, Wisconsin, Missouri and California. Oklahoma has also appointed a commissioner of mental hygiene to speed things up. Some states are taking, or preparing, legislative action—like Alabama, California, Iowa, Missouri and Nebraska. Some—like Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kansas, Louisiana and Illinois—have stepped up their appropriations. A large national meeting of top state officials concerned with the problem of mental illness recently gathered in Philadelphia. The National Institute of Mental Health of the U. S. Public Health Service is pushing forward to meet public needs as fast as the budget—and Congress—will allow. These are big movements, but their effects—and needs—are visible on the smallest levels.

There are also several organizations working in this field which you can join and work with. They include the mental-hygiene groups mentioned earlier and other general groups. For instance, the National Council for Jewish Women is conducting an educational program on mental illness; the League of Women Voters is studying legislation concerning mental hospitals; the General Federation of Women's Clubs is planning a survey of the incidence of mental illness. There are also many women's auxiliaries, guilds and mercy groups mushrooming up to aid the mental hospitals.

Another great hole to be filled is the lack of clinics. We have now 688 full-time clinics, and 200 part-time ones. Hundreds more are needed. Some of these should treat the sick before they get acutely and chronically ill; others should be available for patients during their convalescence; still others should be established to handle patients after their recovery.

The clinics which care for emotional disorders not acute enough to cause a complete breakdown may be called "headache" clinics, "problem" clinics, family-life clinics, mental-hygiene and guidance clinics, but they all serve to prevent serious illness through catching it early.

A good example of such a clinic is the Prince Georges Clinic in Prince Georges County, Maryland, set up by the National Institute of Mental Health of the U. S. Public Health Service and the Maryland health department to provide a model for other community clinics. Since it opened over a year ago, it has helped a great variety of troubled people—people whose marriages were breaking up, children with nightmares and tantrums, men and women who drank too much, elderly people who couldn't face life alone, depressed and sad people, some of whom had tried to commit suicide, people who were sexually maladjusted—the list is long, but the results have been good. The community is proud of its clinic; the civic leaders believe in its value as a weapon against juvenile delinquency, divorce and business failure. About half the patients come to the clinic on their own; the other half are referred by doctors, clergymen and teachers, who say their tasks are lightened by the clinic's help.

Twelve organizations got together to sponsor this clinic. The staff includes two psychiatrists, a clinical psychologist, two psychiatric social workers, a mental-health nurse is out to keep her husband happy with her cooking, of that you can be sure. What a help Ann Batchelder could be! And think how many other brides could find help and inspiration and entertainment in the JOURNAL.

THE BRIDE
With Flour on Her Nose

You get the idea, of course. So why not remember the bride with a gift of the JOURNAL? $3 does it ($5 for your own renewal and the gift). And an attractive card will be mailed to announce the gift in your name.

Send your remittance to Dorothy Baker, Box 847, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

PARTNERS IN BEAUTY... sheer nylon and Mojud's perfect fit... partners, indeed, for your hosiery happiness... in Fashion Harmony Colors.

STOCKINGS by MOJUD®

Of course, smart women prefer Mojud Lingerie, too!

MOJUD STOCKINGS ARE MADE OF DUPONT NYLON

KEEP Q-TIPS HANDY-

29¢, 49¢, 98¢
AT ALL STORES

Send 10¢
FOR SAMPLE PACKAGE

For sample package of Q-Tips (sent postpaid), mail 10¢ today to—

Q-TIPS, Inc.,
Dept. B, 37-11 47th Avenue
Long Island City 1, N. Y.

for BEAUTY MAKE-UP

IT'S NEW! IT'S FUN!

Pro-phy-lac-tic
WHISTLE BRUSH

What a peach of an idea! A child's tooth brush with a two-note whistle in the handle! Get one for your youngster today, at your drug counter. Made by the maker of famous Pro-phy-lac-tic Tooth Brushes.

APPROVED AND COMMENDED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE

NOW THEY'LL LOVE TO BRUSH THEIR TEETH!

OVER 30?
"YOU CAN LOOK YOUNGER!"
says
HELENA RUBINSTEIN

Estrogenic Hormone Cream

"Time writes no wrinkle" on the face that uses Estrogenic Hormone Cream! For Helena Rubinstein, with her long research in Estrogenic Hormones has locked into this most luxurious of creams this vital ingredient which restores to aging skins the substance that makes young skins glow. Her scientific experiments proved that constant use of this modern-miracle cream can retard the look of aging skin!

If you're over thirty—if you're in your 40's, 50's, 60's, this is the one cream you should never be without to help prevent and smooth out the lines you deplore!

Use ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREAM faithfully for 30 consecutive days. See how quickly your skin looks younger, firmer, fresher!

ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREAM 3.50
ESTROGENIC HORMONE OIL . 5.00 for younger looking throat
prices plus tax

helena rubinstein
655 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, N. Y.

and three secretaries. They work a five-day week, eight and a half hours a day. Treatment may take one or two visits—or months; it may mean testing and examination by the psychologist, home visits by the nurse, psychotherapy from the psychiatrists, guidance from the social workers.

This is, of course, a special clinic, because it is staffed by the Public Health Service and financed by Congress. But from it, and through the Public Health Service, any community can learn to develop its own clinic.

Assuming you have organized the demand, your first problem is money. It costs roughly $40,000 a year to run a clinic, but not all that need come out of the community's pocket. Under the National Mental Health Act, grants are made to states for community clinics at the rate of two dollars for each one dollar raised locally. The community's share is thus around $13,000 annually. Part of this can be expected to come in as fees, leaving only $10,000 to $11,000 to raise. And maybe you can cut further by getting free rent. You'll need five staff offices, a waiting room and a reception room.

THE second problem will be staff. This is a tremendous problem because of the shortage of psychiatrically trained people. If you cannot get a full-time chief psychiatrist, however, perhaps you can find a good general practitioner with an informed interest in psychiatry who would be willing to undertake further study to become a psychiatrist. The Public Health Service holds "demonstration institutes" where doctors can get psychiatric training; and a good use of National Mental Health Act funds would be to educate a community psychiatrist. And, if there is simply no one you can call on in your community, perhaps you can pool your plans with another community and start off with a traveling clinic that operates a part of each week in each town. It must always be remembered, however, that the selection of staff is of vital importance. Poorly trained psychiatrists, well-intentioned general practitioners and outright quacks cause more emotional problems than they help.

A third obstacle may be red tape. A few facts from the mental-illness records in your community should serve to cut that promptly. There is no place in the country where the supply of psychiatric treatment equals the demand. An average case of hospitalized mental illness costs the state around $7000. If your clinic saves only five or six commitments a year, it will pay its way.

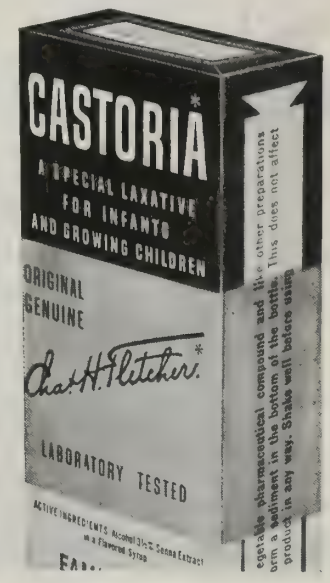
There are other types of clinics needed too. If state hospitals had outpatient clinics their overhead would go down. The Veterans Administration has proved this. While most clinics deal largely with psychoneurotics—who rarely need hospitalization—the VA discovered that mild cases of psychoses could also be treated in clinics. This has meant not only the saving in dollars from the hospitalization which is thus avoided, but also a great saving in human values. The upheaval in the life of any ill person is much less if he can pursue a near-normal life while getting treatment—and in the case of the mentally ill, the stigma of going to a mental hospital adds an extra burden of disturbance. To get back to the dollars-and-cents saving, however, the VA estimates that a mental-hygiene-clinic case costs $44 a month, while $210 is the estimated monthly cost of a hospital case—a considerable difference. This saving comes out at both ends of mental illness too—if outpatient clinics are available for treatment in the recuperating stages of illness, the patient can leave the hospital earlier.

The "aftercare" clinic, however, must have an additional function—it must also be what is termed "a vocational rehabilitation clinic." In simpler language, this is job training. Take the man whose job has been in a factory and whose illness has left him with a sensitivity to noise, and a physical inability to stand the strain of long hours on his feet. Yet he knows no other skills. What is he going to do when he leaves the hospital? Another patient was a woman who had once been a teacher, but after she was discharged as cured no school would take her. She became a maid, but whenever her employers found

When baby's sobs mean
"Childhood Constipation"

...give Fletcher's Castoria!

"It's the laxative made especially for infants and children."



WHEN your baby is tearful and fussy...when she sobs because of "Childhood Constipation"...it's wise to know what to do. Give her Fletcher's Castoria.

Thorough and effective—yet so gentle, it won't upset sensitive digestive systems.

Made especially for children—contains no harsh drugs, will not cause griping or discomfort.

So pleasant-tasting—children love it and take it gladly without any struggle.

Get Fletcher's Castoria at your drug-store today. Be sure you see the green band and the Charles H. Fletcher signature on the package—then you will know that what you are getting is the original and genuine.*

Chas. H. Fletcher
The original and genuine
CASTORIA

out the truth, they let her go. She is now on relief. The discharged patient needs new and special training, and if he does not get it, his chances of readjusting to normal living are only half as good as if he is adequately prepared. If he does not readjust, he usually returns to the hospital. Under current conditions, where small preparation is made to equip the discharged patient (or educate his family and friends) for his return home, two out of every seven patients discharged come back to the hospital.

Children's clinics are also needed. Although 1000 children become mental hospital patients each year, the number of places where children can get preventive psychiatric treatment are few. The National Committee on Mental Hygiene has made special efforts to get children's clinics. It estimates that at least 700 are needed as compared with an estimated 80 full-time clinics now operating.

Dean Briggs was once one of the speakers at a formal banquet at Radcliffe College. In preparation for the event, among other things, the chairs had been given a new coat of varnish. The evening was hot and humid and, as the speakers rose to deliver their remarks, it was with some difficulty. The dean was more than equal to the occasion. "Ladies and gentlemen," he said, with a rueful backward glance, "I had expected to bring you this evening a plain and unvarnished tale, but circumstances make it impossible to fulfill my intentions."

Other community needs are endless—classes in mental hygiene in the public schools; classes for mothers in building emotional health in children; psychiatrists in the divorce courts to help settle marital difficulties and decide child-custody struggles; courses in emotional problems for teachers, ministers and lawyers; psychiatric help for the schools who can diagnose and help the problem child—who now usually just gets expelled; "foster homes" for the convalescent mental patient; psychiatrists and/or psychiatrically trained counselors in industry who can help the worker with the social and emotional problems which cut down his efficiency; psychiatrists in the criminal courts to help determine whether sentence or treatment is needed—and what small-time criminals should be watched or treated to avoid worse crimes.

The need is so desperate that we cannot approach it in terms of dollars alone. You can't argue with a surgeon about the bill while your daughter is screaming with pain. You can't afford not to act. Seven million of us are expected to spend some time in a mental hospital sometime in our lives—it will be too late to get something done if we wait until we're already ill.

But no one is being asked to rush in blindly. It has been proved that preventive clinics can save mental-hospital commitments. It has been proved that modern methods of treatment are remarkably successful when used properly—we have been shown by a handful of miracles that even the cases considered hopeless cannot be given up. It has been proved that even the dread and once-thought-incurable disease schizophrenia can be conquered, and that the cases of manic depression, paresis and involutional melancholia can be cut by one half or more.

And we know better care, prevention and treatment of mental illness mean stronger men and women, more stable homes, happier children, more capable old people. They also mean shorter pension lists, less crime and vandalism, fewer failures in marriage and business, less alcoholism, fewer suicides and murders.

The number of mentally ill seeking help is increasing rapidly. Part of the reason for this is our growing number of old people, who, often lonely and feeble, are easy victims to mental disease. Part of the reason is the breakdown of family responsibility and the cramped conditions we live in, which make it more difficult for the mental invalid to be cared for at home. Part is due to the newfound hope that accompanies our recent strides in knowledge. But part is also due to the heartless aspects of our industrial civilization with its high regard for the machine and its careless regard for the man.

Like a watchful buzzard, mental disease is circling over our society. There are too many of us today in situations which strain our emotional strength—the children whose parents have small use, and less love, for them; the women who have just been asked (or have just asked) for a divorce; the families who have just been evicted from their homes; the men just fired—or retired?—from their jobs, the youngsters rejected by their friends, the old people without jobs, without families, without friends; the failures and the lonely.

Not long ago it was said that the scourges of our present society are now so many and varied that it is the "abnormal" person who has a "normal" background. There was more truth than humor in the quip. The question is: what are we going to do about it?

This is the fourth and last of a series of articles on mental illness.

PARTY MAN

(Continued from Page 54)

I just wish more causes were like Colonel Davisson—that thrilling organ voice and him a hero and a bachelor and everything. I feel about him the way I used to feel about one or two movie stars—which makes me realize how I've matured.

My heart was singing a hallelujah him, as I demurely said to Mrs. Roberts that of course she could count on Davy and me to serve her dinner for Colonel Davisson—if only I could get a sitter for Bruce. I wanted Bruce to be called Davy, Jr., but Davy—the brute—insisted he wanted to save his name for his fourth son. "Call Western Union if you want another boy," I protested weakly from my hospital bed, but Davy settled it by reminding me his rich Uncle Bruce mightn't live so long.

Pauly is a Young Republican like me and of course she was absolutely entranced at the idea of meeting Colonel Davisson. We agreed that she and I would be the maids, Davy the chef (that was to flatter him, because Mrs. Roberts was buying a practically prefabricated dinner from one of her clubs, and about all he had to do was warm it up), and Chi the sitter to stay home and take care of our Bruce and their Dorothy.

Davy was the big problem, the creep. I knew it couldn't be just because he was a Democrat. Davy feels about politics the way he used to feel about the Fallen Arch in his jalopy days: he'd had it a long time and put things back here and there when they fell off, and patched up the places where there was nothing to put back, and it seemed to get him where he wanted to go. But he was always very gracious to people in sedans. If he was passing them, that is. They had their car, he had his. That's how he is about Republicans.

So I couldn't make out whether he was jealous of what I tried to reasonably explain to him was my purely political interest in Colonel Davisson or whether he was such a snob he didn't want me to be a maid. He said—practically yelled—some pretty awful things that I would never have forgiven him for for several days if he hadn't finally agreed to do exactly what I wanted him to, as soon as I said, "Okay, so we don't help Mrs. Roberts. And what do you think is going to happen to our month-to-month lease—or maybe you don't care about having a roof over our heads," which is one thing Davy mentions at least twice every day. Not that darling Mrs. Roberts is the landlord type, but Davy is suspicious about anybody who has the say over where he's going to live. It's an idea he got in the war.

"All right, all right," he finally gave in. Go ahead. Sacrifice me."

"Sacrifice you!" I was really shocked. What do you think I'm going to be doing?"

"Sacrificing," Davy said. "That's what n against."

Actually I still don't know whether Davy nks or just thinks he thinks, but I have rned his weak points—that's one of the nderful things about marriage—and I can vays get him to do the right thing for the ong reason. So when I said "the roof over r heads" it was all over but cooking the ner, waiting on table and washing up erward—even if I did have to laugh po-ely one more time at Davy's pun about rs. Roberts having us on the end of a lease. We'd lived with my family for six months at seemed like years to Davy, and with his nily for six months that seemed like æons to , before we finally found the apartment er Mrs. Roberts' garage. We couldn't have lped loving Mrs. Roberts if she'd been na the Hyena, because the dear blessed man never asked us, "What did you do to-y, dear?" and didn't advise us about uce's formula; and most of all didn't—oh, ture—live in the same house with us.

Of course we aren't the only people who ore Mrs. Roberts. Everybody does. She's nice and restfully dumb I'll bet a lot of ople would go on loving her even if she sn't up in bucks, as Davy says, from in-riting absolutely millions from her dead sband.

Anyhow, as I said, everybody adores Mrs. berts, and the nice thing is she adores erybody too, so it seemed to me only nat-al that she would be giving this dinner in nor of Colonel Davisson, with people there e a president of some railroad, and a fa-us lady professor, besides lots of people I ver heard of and it seemed they hadn't ard of each other either. What a chance, I ought gratefully, for Colonel Davisson to eet the silent voter who it turns out nobody ts elected without. I found myself hum-ing happily over the shrimps.

So guess my unpleasant surprise when a harassed little man with a face full of broken commandments and looking unaccustomed in a dinner jacket burst into the pantry while Pauly was serving the third round of cocktails and I was inventing more canapés.

"Hey, sweetheart," he hissed distractedly, "I gotta phone."

"I'm not your sweetheart, sir," I chilled him. "My name is Maud and my husband happens to be right out there in the kitchen where all the knives are."

"Oops, my error," said this character contritely. "But where is the phone?"

"The phone for guests desiring privacy, sir, is in the study just beyond the room where cocktails are being served."

"There's no privacy there now," he protested, very distraught. "And stop calling me sir; my name is Kelly." He discovered the pantry phone, grabbed it and asked for long distance.

"Kelly!" I exclaimed. There are very few Kellys in the Republican Party.

"Long distance? Get me Colonel Davisson's headquarters in Harrisburg quick, sister, like an emergency, please."

"Kelly?" I repeated as I finished the dish of canapés—inventing them, I mean.

"That's right, sweet ——"

"My name is Maud—Mister Kelly," I said primly from a safe distance, "but how come you ——"

"Not the Boston Kellys," he said, "nor the New York Kellys. I'm a twig on the Philadelphia branch."

"But even John B. Kelly of Philadelphia is a Democrat," I said suspiciously.

"Yeah." Kelly moved his mouth sideways into a smile. "They can grow oranges and grapefruits on the same tree."

"H'm. Lemons too," I mused darkly. "You might be a spy."

"Now listen here, Mrs. Maud; as long as a Republican pays me to be his confidential secretary, I'm a Republican, see. Regular Republican and as honest as the day is long." He smiled the same way again.

Bacon to drain? Lay it on clean, white, absorbent ScotTowels. Grease sinks right in—fast! Bacon is crisper, more delicious.

Want less rubbing and scrubbing? Keep stubborn stains off linen towels by using ScotTowels for drying pots and percolator, mopping up spills, draining lettuce. Delightfully pliable, soft, absorbent —yet strong—ScotTowels really dry. 150 to a roll. Scott Paper Company, Chester, Pennsylvania.

...FEEL SO NICE-YET WORK SO HARD!

'ScotTowels' reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

MELT 3 tbsp. cooking fat • Stir in 3 tbsp. flour. Add salt and pepper • ADD 1 small minced onion, 1 tbsp. minced parsley, 2 cups milk • Stir smooth and cook till thickened • SLICE thin four large boiled potatoes to layer in casserole; top with SPAM slices • Pour on sauce, sprinkle with buttered bread crumbs • BAKE at 375°—30 minutes. Serves 6.

BAKE A SPAM! Score, stud with cloves. Rub with sauce: ⅓ cup brown sugar, ½ tsp. vinegar, 1 tsp. prepared mustard, 1 tsp. water. Bake 20 min. at 400°; baste.

SPAM DINNER. Ten minutes to fry SPAM and cook beans while potatoes bake. A bright idea for lunch or family dinner—everybody likes SPAM's pure pork flavor.

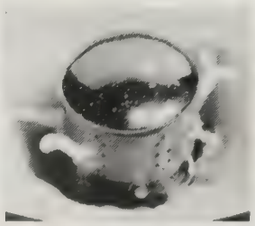
Ever see the difference Live-Water washing makes?

Ask your Frigidaire Dealer to show you how the only All-Porcelain Automatic Washer launders clothes whiter, brighter—drier, too!

Yes, you can SEE the difference in the cleaner look of clothes—when they're washed with Frigidaire's Live-Water action! All the washing motion is achieved by rolling, penetrating currents of hot, sudsy water—no pulling or yanking of clothes. And they're always washing in water—not half in, half out. Clothes look whiter, brighter, too. The Frigidaire All-Porcelain Automatic Washer rinses and re-rinses them—each time in clean, clear water!

You can FEEL the difference when you lift clothes out of this washer. They're far lighter, far drier! That's because Rapidry-Spinning really gets water out of clothes—gets a big part of your laundry so dry it can be ironed immediately.

Visit your Frigidaire Dealer today. Ask him to show you the difference this really different Automatic Washer makes. Ask, too, to see the new Frigidaire Electric Ironer and Automatic Clothes Dryer and all the other work-saving Frigidaire Appliances for your home. Look up name of your Frigidaire Dealer today in Classified Telephone Directory; or write Frigidaire Division of General Motors, Dayton 1, Ohio.



Listen to Frigidaire's New Lum and Abner Show, Sunday nights, CBS.

FRIGIDAIRE

The All-Porcelain Automatic Washer

All-Porcelain inside and out! Self-cleaning interior never needs attention! And you just whisk a damp cloth over the outside to keep this finish gleaming.

Only suds come out of Frigidaire's new-type underwater suds dispenser. Your clothes never touch undissolved soap or detergent, can't be spotted or stained.

Just touch the Select-O-Dial—and this washer does the rest automatically. Or you can hand-control the washer for laundering very special things.

"Come back in June when the days are longer," Davy growled from the kitchen, but I don't think this Kelly heard him because he got his long distance.

"Listen, it's Kelly," he was saying. "The boss wanted to know how things were going. Tell him so far not good, not bad—just lousy. I told him this dame with the dough would be poison no matter who she knew. And it turns out she knows everybody—including Ralph Zane, the railroad president. . . . Fine, yeah. . . . And that liberal Ph.D. dame that lectures at all the women's clubs ——"

There was a sputter over the phone.

"Right, the lefty one with the G. I. nephew in the trucking business. Phony coincidence she don't like the railroad lobby. . . . Yeah, sure we need railroad money—and women's club votes, too. . . . Of course I'll do what I can. . . . Any ideas? Well, call me back. . . . Yeah, call me anyway."

"Sounds like you got trouble," Davy noticed happily, sauntering in with a plateful of trichinosis specials.

Kelly made a noise like a snore. "I ask myself every day, 'Kelly,' I say, 'why are you in this work?'"

"And what do you answer?" Davy said. "If I may ask."

"I don't answer," Kelly said. "I'm speechless. I can't say a word. Listen." He took a fresh grip on his glass as if he might fall down if he didn't have something to hold on to. "You know what's happening in there?"

"What? Oh, what?" Pauly and I said like a Greek chorus.

"We are losing the election," stated Kelly.

"Oh-h!" wailed Pauly and me. "But isn't everybody for Colonel Davisson? Look what he stands for!"

"Listen, kids," said Kelly, "everybody is for theirselves. What the colonel stands for has got to be them, they figure. So we got a lefty and a big-money guy eating out of the same dish, see? The lefty says, 'This is all for me,' and the big-money says the same, and in the end they don't work it out and they go try some other dish. And the Democrats gets in."

"Hail," murmured Davy.

"What'sa matter?" said Kelly suspiciously. "You a Democrat?"

"Now Davy," I pleaded, "don't say anything—please don't say anything. Listen, Mr. Kelly, I and a lot of Young Republicans think Colonel Davisson is a divine man—his ideas and all, I mean. I mean, we are interested in good government."

"Oh," said Kelly, looking at me with a sharp look. "Young Republicans."

"Yes," I said, "and I for one don't see why you are so scared about Colonel Davisson meeting a scientific cross-section ——"

"It don't get a man elected, that's all."

"Maudie," Pauly said nervously, "Davy's bacon will be cold. Let's go, shall we?" She picked up her tray.

Kelly smiled tenderly, the way men always do when they see a woman being just a little woman with a tray. I sighed and wisely bore in my canapés. Some men you just can't teach.

In this life, if you have anything to pardon, pardon quickly. Slow forgiveness is little better than no forgiveness. —PINERO.

EVERYBODY was making a lot of noise without saying anything, the way people always do by the second or third cocktail, and the colonel was absolutely surrounded. He's so tall, though, he caught my eye right over the heads of the admiring throng and oh, bliss, he smiled directly at me, that wonderful wide white smile of his you see so often in the newspapers—only there it's for everybody. This one was specially for me. I wove toward him like a moth to the flame, my knees as shaky as a ninety-nine-cent bridge table.

"Ah," the colonel boomed as I approached, "just what I wanted. Food!" And he pounced on my tray.

It was then I realized I didn't mean any more to him than a pane of glass. He was all eyes for my canapés. Did I feel hacked!

But then I thought to myself sensibly, how can he help it? Alas, Pauly and I were anonymous in our black uniforms, and anyway our vote was safe and poor Colonel Davisson was in so much trouble, from what Kelly said, that what looked like a happy party from the outside was really him fighting for his life. What a grisly situation, I thought as I poked my tray under the lefty lady's cold eye, wishing Davy's trichinosis specials had not been an idle jest.

"Fancy, George the Third," said this lady whose name was Miss Phelps, peering down through her collapsible glasses which she snapped open on their chain when she wanted to look at something. "You don't see many of them outside a museum."

I WANTED to tell her Davy just made them fresh, but I remembered I was only a maid, and then Colonel Davisson said, bowing over the tray, "It's a rare privilege to spend an evening in this wonderland, isn't it, Miss Phelps? Horace Roberts had fabulous taste."

"And a fabulous income," spoke Miss Phelps. "Personally, I think art treasures like this tray belong in a museum. The public should be the custodian of the heritage of the past. Why should a few rich men pirate the nation's birthright?" She snapped up a shrimp and waved me away. It's a queer thing how the people who believe in the people often treat them like dogs.

"Don't look now," muttered Kelly in my ear as he passed me like General Patton coming to save the day, "but she et the toothpick. . . . That was an interesting fact I overheard, colonel"—he smiled mellowly on everyone—"considering the plan for a state art gallery you were working on the other night. Just a rough draft, you know, to toss to the steering committee."

"Humph!" said Miss Phelps. "A red herring, I call it. Do you realize what the duty of this legislature is, in these appalling times?"

"My dear lady, yes," said Colonel Davisson. "I just want to be sure it does. . . . Good evening, doctor—this is a privilege. I understand your public appearances are rare. I am honored." He took the hand of a wispy, frightened little man who Mrs. Roberts was kindly but firmly steering over from the corner where he had been brooding back of a bust.

"I just had to get you two together," Mrs. Roberts sighed happily. "Doctor Bates has such fascinating ideas about heavy water! He works all the time, you know. I just tempted him out tonight because I said, 'Fussy, the greatest man in the state is going to be at my house tonight and at last you can sit down and talk shop. He knows everything! That's what I said. He's a great scientist, colonel. The university financed all his research until the money ran out this year. Maybe the state could ——"

Kelly clutched me by the elbow. "Tell them soup's on!" he muttered fiercely. "Ring the gong."

"But we're supposed to go around one more time," I whispered back.

"Listen, you heard about Fussy's research needing state money. One more time around and some old lawyer friend of the family is going to turn up here who wants to be a judge. Create a diversion, see?"

"I'll ask Davy," I said, and I fled to the kitchen before Mrs. Roberts noticed me. It was an amazing coincidence, though, this Kelly saying that, considering what I've heard Mrs. Roberts say about her lawyer who happened to be at the dinner.

"Sure it's ready," Davy said, pouring boiling water into a giant dishpan on the floor. "It's been ready for hours."

"Davy," I said fearfully, "what is that water for?"

"For?" Davy straightened up and looked at me haughtily. "It's for washing the tools."

"But Pauly and I planned ——"

"Listen," Davy said, "I'm captain of this galley." He picked up the kitchen mop and sighted along the handle.

"Davy," I moaned, "what is that for?"

(Continued on Page 136)

WHY DO 4 OUT OF 5 HOUSEWIVES PREFER TO DO THE WASH AT HOME?

Women everywhere agree that it's more economical, simpler, more satisfying to wash at home. Modern laundry equipment and New 1950 Rinso help banish washday cares

AMERICAN women have the biggest choice of work savers in the world to help them with their washing. The new 1950 Rinso with Solium, the scientific Sunlight ingredient, has 3 times the whiter washing action of any other soap. And what woman isn't thankful for the ease of her washing machine, her electric ironer or clothes dryer! Yes, new advances in soaps and new advances in laundry equipment go hand in hand to make her washday cares far lighter today . . . give her more time for leisure. Little wonder that four out of five women said in a recent survey that "for the family wash, there's no place like home."

Rinso is always her washday friend. New 1950 Rinso with Solium . . . latest triumph of the world-famous Lever Laboratories . . . will do what no other soap can do. This new 1950 Rinso with Solium gives you 3 times the whiter washing action of any other soap. This new washing action of 1950 Rinso with Solium makes white clothes whiter than brand new. Makes washable colors brighter than brand new.

New 1950 Rinso is the only soap recommended by the makers of 33 leading washing machines:

A. B. C.	CONLON	HIBBARD SPEED-WASHER	SPEED QUEEN
ALLIED	CORONADO	HORTON	UNIVERSAL
APEX	CROMWELL	KENMORE	VOSS
ARMAID	DEXTER	MAGNETIC	WHITE WAY
AUTOMATIC	DUCHESS	MOLA	WHIRLPOOL
BARTON	FAULTLESS	MONITOR	WIZARD
BEAM	F-M	NATIONAL	WOMAN'S FRIEND
BEE-VAC	G. I.	NORGE	YOUNG
BLACKSTONE	HAAG	ONE MINUTE	ZENITH

She has her pick of fine helpers. Only a generation ago women would have rubbed their eyes in amazement at the electrical and mechanical marvels that now make washday hours shorter and easier. Electric ironers . . . electric clothes dryers . . . and sturdy, precision-built washing machines let electric motors do the work—some so automatically that they do the whole wash while you're off shopping or at the movies.

WHAT WOMEN SAY:

"Clothes last longer," says Mrs. G. M. Souther, Flushing, L. I. "With the cost of clothes so high, I like to keep them under my own control and to be sure they get 'home' treatment. New 1950 Rinso keeps my clothes whiter and brighter than the day I bought them."

"Homewashing with New 1950 Rinso SAVES ME MONEY," says Mrs. Mary Belle Kumpfer, Lake Como, N. J. "I save so much that my new washer and ironer practically pay for themselves. With the New Rinso my white clothes come out whiter than brand new."

"I get along with a smaller stock of clothes and linens," says Mrs. Estelle M. Berger, Bridgeport, Conn. "When I wash at my own convenience, the same number of cottons and linens go much farther. New 1950 Rinso makes my washable colors brighter than new!"

Lever Brothers Company
Makers of Rinso with Solium

THE GREATEST THING THAT EVER HAPPENED TO RICE

"Uncle Ben's" and "Converted" are trade-marks of Converted Rice, Inc.

NEW UNCLE BEN'S RICE RECIPE

Pineapple Rice Pudding

1¼ cups cooked Uncle Ben's Rice
2 eggs
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup sugar
2 cups evaporated milk
1 cup crushed, drained pineapple

Beat eggs and add to cooked rice. Stir in salt and add sugar. Add milk, then pineapple, stirring to blend. Turn into a buttered quart baking dish and bake in a pan of hot water in a slow oven, 300° F., for one hour. Serve with crushed pineapple or cream. Serves 6.

New scientific discovery, exclusive in this country with Uncle Ben's, gives extra food value to rice

The revolutionary and exclusive process used in Uncle Ben's Converted Long Grain Rice seals into polished rice grains B vitamins that used to be polished off.

That's not all. The grains all stand apart, white and fluffy.

Uncle Ben's Rice never gets sticky or gummy, whether hot or cold. Keeps perfectly on the shelf or in overseas packages—every grain is weevilproof. These advantages are not to be found in rice of any other brand at any price.

If your grocer doesn't have Uncle Ben's, ask him to get it for you.

©CONVERTED RICE, INC., Houston, Texas

SEND NO MONEY! JUST ENCLOSE BOX TOP!

Converted Rice, Inc., Dept. LHJ5
P. O. Box 1752, Houston, Texas
Please send me your new Rice Recipe Booklet. Enclosed is top from package of Uncle Ben's Converted Rice.

Name .....
Address .....
City ..... State .....

(Continued from Page 134)

"Will you please go blow?" he said crossly. "Kelly needs you, I don't."

When I announced dinner Mrs. Roberts gave me an oh-dear look, but everyone started toward the dining room and Pauly and I quickly began dealing out fruit cups. Mrs. Roberts had decided not to have soup because she was afraid to trust Davy with the soup cups, which it seems Mr. Roberts bought in Paris from some ex-lord. Alas, if she could know how right she was, I thought, thinking helplessly about the dishpan and the mop. Ah, well.

Dinner was certainly a rat race for Pauly and me, rushing in and out and getting in each other's way and being nervously corrected by Mrs. Roberts for passing on the wrong side. Of course I didn't blame her for apologizing to the colonel for the kind of untrained maids you have to put up with these days, but I can't say I liked it very much either, considering how hard we were trying—particularly as the colonel politely agreed with her.

"But we can't expect too much, dear lady," he said. "These are days of transition for all of us."

"Colonel," said the man on Mrs. Roberts' left, "that's a phrase I'm tired of. It's an excuse. If we're in transition, we're headed somewhere. What we citizens want to know is, where?"

"I'm a citizen myself, Mr. Zane," said the colonel, in his grave bishop's voice, "and I'm as interested in that question as you are. What we need is faith. In this great sovereign state ——"

"Will you come down a little, please?" said Mr. Zane sternly. "Please!" And I suddenly realized he meant me, and he was trying to see over the edge of my muffin tray which I was just passing him, not noticing how low he was. "Green," he announced to Mrs. Roberts, jerking his head at me. "I'm sorry for you."

I went sadly back to the kitchen, not even cheered by the strange gleam I thought I saw in Kelly's eye.

"It's no fun being underprivileged," I admitted to Davy in a momentary lull before the ice cream. "I'd sooner be nibbled by ducks."

"You and the rest of us Democrats," Davy agreed, while placidly stirring the chocolate sauce.

"No cracks from the cheap seats," Pauly said. Pauly is true to the cause, no matter what.

While I agreed with her that it certainly is exasperating to have Davy be a Democrat, he was mine after all, for better or worse—and he did look cute as a trinket with a cook's apron over his Levis and his white sailor hat on the back of his head, like a chef's hat that hadn't risen.

"That man in the White House may be bred in Missouri," Pauly went on, "but he's just a crumb to those bankers and such in there." She waved the ice-cream dipper in the direction of the dining room. "Laugh or I'll say it again."

"Drop dead," Davy advised.

Pauly took the first glasses of ice cream and started for the dining room without even a sneer in his direction.

"Oh, Davy, why can't you act sensible and be a Republican like everybody else we know?" I wailed, filling my hands with Mrs. Roberts' fragile ice-cream glasses.

"I'll tell you, if you'll tell me what shape a kiss is first," Davy said, coming toward me while dripping chocolate sauce off the spoon on the floor.

"Uh, I don't know—round, maybe?" I said faintly, unable as always to resist that lovingly masterful look of Davy's.

"I don't know either, but give me one and I'll call it square." (It isn't new. We just like it.) This was definitely part of the better I'd taken Davy for, I thought, as his arms enfolded me, bulky uniform and all.

"Break it up, kids, break it up," I heard Pauly saying from what seemed a great distance. "This ice cream won't wait."

All was not well with the party at the colonel's end of the table, I realized as I followed Pauly with glasses of ice cream while thinking about my adorable Davy. Mrs. Roberts was chat-chatting along in her usual happy and relaxed way—at the moment about Russia and could they really have the atom bomb the way dear Owen thinks. The colonel on her right was murmuring sympathetically but looking at her with that blank look people get when they're really listening to somebody else. Obviously he had his ear on Miss Phelps, who was positively heckling Mr. Zane across the table about the highhanded corruption of the railroad lobby, which wasn't exactly party manners, considering that Mr. Zane is a railroad president.

"Isn't it a funny thing now," said Kelly, on Miss Phelps' right, mopping the back of his neck with his handkerchief, "what an erroneous picture we can all get out of a bunch of statistics. Here you might think from what you read a state the size of this

★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

THE conversation at dinner had been about operations. Finally the youngest asked his question, "Does it hurt much to have your independence cut out?"

A mother-in-law calls her son's wife, from the Bluegrass State, her Kentucky Wonder.

"I don't like her, mother—her laugh comes from where her tonsils are."

Like vinegar, a man with too much mother in him has to be taken in small quantities.

Only when the children have a long rainy day at home do we parents fully appreciate our debt to the public schools.

When a mother told her little son he must be tired from yesterday, he reasoned, "Yesterday wouldn't tire me, only today would."

The nicest women slip-cover furniture after it's worn out, not before.

Child helping with dishes: "It's a little like washing ears, isn't it?"

After having been told that the curlicues on the goat's head were its horns, a little girl patiently watched the animal for a long time. Finally she asked, "When will they blow?"

At the moment I can think of no more shivering experience than having the puppy lick the toes sticking out the ends of my play shoes.

Mother's definition of suspense: The moment before she reads her child's thermometer.

To remove reputation stains, make a lot of money.

Suggestion for graduating classes: Choose the girl whose husband is the most likely to succeed.

If you must have an open quarrel, close the windows.

Getting a tooth filled always gives me a purified feeling, as if I'd just had all my sins absolved.

Happy words in a family multiply like guinea pigs.

A woman's idea of thrift is to buy something at a sale she doesn't need for fear she will.

A good mother serves as the differential in a family.

appetite delighter!

Marcia Camp's

TOSSED SALAD DE LUXE

Here's THE salad of salads for your party, luncheon, shower, buffet—or any old time when you want something new! It's an appetite delighter de luxe—with the secret in combining luscious marshmallows with fruit and vegetables. Try it—soon.

- 2 cups shredded cabbage
- 2 carrots (cut in thin slivers)
- ¾ cup pineapple cubes
- 4 oz. (1 Pack-ette) Campfire, Angelus or Recipe Marshmallows
- ½ green pepper (cut in slivers)
- Watercress
- Cream salad dressing

Place cabbage, carrots, pineapple and marshmallows in a salad bowl, tossing together very lightly. Garnish with slivers of green pepper and sprigs of watercress. Serve with a cream salad dressing. Serves 5 to 6.

one could get on without a railroad or a truck highway when all the time the both of them are screaming they're overload—overworked."

He choked suddenly and why I don't know, but when he held out his hand to me behind his chair I noticed for the first time a cocktail someone had forgotten by leaving it standing in the friendship plant, and I quickly gave it to him with my free hand.

But there was no detouring Miss Phelps. She had really wound herself up, pointing her finger and shaking her sheep-dog bangs in a fury. Finally she had to pause for station identification, though, and Mr. Zane grunted, "Humph, very interesting," and quickly jumped into the Russian conversation with a question to the colonel about the possibility of Russia declaring war.

Davy says girls who speak volumes end up on the shelf, so I couldn't help feeling a twinge for poor Miss Phelps, who was a fellow woman after all, even if she did have more degrees than a thermometer, while I nearly had to quituate from Shipley School. I should have saved my sympathy; I was going to need it myself all too soon.

"What a ridiculous question!" Miss Phelps interrupted rudely, refusing to stay shelved. "Don't you realize that no country has gone through the formality of opening hostilities with a formal declaration of war in thirty-four years?"

"My old friend was just taking a conversational short cut, my dear Miss Phelps," the colonel put in quickly, smiling and pouring on the charm all around. "That is a businessman's prerogative. On the other hand, to a scholar like yourself ——" The colonel smiled again, and believe it or not, both Mr. Zane and Miss Phelps smiled back. The colonel could sell stamps to a postman.

"Well then, colonel, how do you feel about the possibility of Russia—ah—opening hostilities?" Mr. Zane asked, with a sharp look at Miss Phelps that wiped off his smile like a cloud over the sun.

"Now that's a very complex problem, Ralph," the colonel said slowly. "Of course the overwhelming majority of the Russian people don't want war any more than we do. On the other hand ——"

The way the colonel said it, it sounded positively profound and I hated to miss the rest, but I knew the chocolate sauce wouldn't wait, so regretfully out I went to the kitchen as Pauly came in with the last glasses of ice cream. Anyway, I could catch a glimpse of my darling Davy.

"About time," Davy grumbled, taking the heavenly smelling chocolate pot off the stove and filling the silver sauce bowl. "Pass fast, baby, or this fudge sauce is going to be fudge." He set the pot back on the stove and poured more boiling water into the dishpan which I had just about forgotten.

From the colonel and the Russian problem to Davy and the fudge-sauce problem, I thought bitterly as I picked up the tray. For the moment love was to me just the tenth word in a telegram.

I passed first to Mrs. Roberts as Miss Phelps crashed through the conversation again like a bulldozer with more talk about trucks in interstate commerce and national defense. Poor Mrs. Roberts tried to change the subject to the new reducing diet she was going to start tomorrow, all the while pouring a ladleful of fudge on her ice cream, but Miss Phelps rode right over her. Mr. Zane looked fit to be tied and I was so unnerved, remembering Kelly's frantic call to Harrisburg about how the colonel was going to have to please both him and Miss Phelps, that I passed next to Mr. Zane instead of to the guest of honor, the poor colonel, who was still trying to smile but in a pathetic sort of frightened way, not a bit like Errol Flynn in the dungeon with people coming out of dark corners and him gallantly fighting them all with his one sword.

It was at that exact moment that the telephone rang, and a minute later Davy appeared in the pantry door and made a pointing gesture at Kelly. Oh joy, I thought, Harrisburg is calling up with a good idea, just when we need it. My heart should have begun to sing, but somehow I felt sad.

There's
6-way nourishment in all the good things made from

ENRICHED BREAD and FLOUR

Mouth-watering fruit and nut and cinnamon breads, golden pancakes and waffles, biscuits and muffins hot from the oven . . . if they're enriched, they're all thrifty, taste-tempting sources of 6-way nourishment. This 6-way nourishment helps keep you looking and feeling your best. So always buy "Enriched" flour . . . ask your baker or grocer if the baked foods he sells are enriched . . . in buying white bread be sure the wrapper says "Enriched".

"IS BREAD FATTENING?"

Not a bit more so than any other food of equal energy content. Nutritionists point out that the carbohydrates of bread are readily converted into energy to be used by the body as needed.

Copr. 1949 by Wheat Flour Institute, 309 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago 6, Ill

WHEAT FLOUR INSTITUTE

The handiest, finest thing in cotton . . .
RED CROSS* COTTON BALLS!

In the Nursery!

For First Aid!

For Cosmetics!

65 individual applications for 29¢!
On sale at drug and cosmetic counters everywhere

IMPORTANT—For the softest, whitest, most absorbent surgical cotton available...insist on Red Cross* Cotton Balls! Made from Johnson & Johnson Red Cross* Cotton, the sterile, long-fibered cotton preferred by 7 out of 10 users of absorbent cotton!

*No connection whatever with American National Red Cross.

The most trusted name in surgical dressings...
Johnson & Johnson

JOHN NELSON
M.C. "BRIDE AND GROOM" WANTS Kings Men
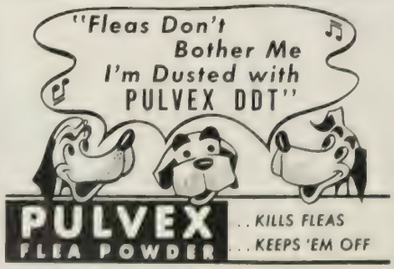
SHAVING LOTION
FOR FATHER'S DAY

CRYSTAL OR FIRED 23 KT. GOLD - FOR FATHERS WHO COMMAND LIFE'S FINEST

PAIN, CALLOUSES HERE?



If you suffer from tired, aching feet or pains, cramps, callouses or burning feeling at the ball of your foot, Dr. Scholl's Metatarsal Arch Supports and exercise will give you quick relief. Thin, light, flexible, adjustable. So scientifically designed, they feel as if they were molded to your feet. At Shoe, Department Stores and Dr. Scholl Foot Comfort Shops in principal cities. For FREE Foot Booklet and address of local dealer, write Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Department ASK, Chicago, Ill.

Dr Scholl's ARCH SUPPORTS

POISON IVY
OAK or SUMAC
New treatment stops itching, dries up blisters quickly—gently—safely.
At druggists, 59¢
IVY-DRY

"Will you please excuse me, Mrs. Roberts?" Kelly said, trying not to leap to his feet. "I been expecting a call."

Mrs. Roberts smiled graciously and signaled me in answer to my pleading look to go on passing the wrong way round the table since I'd started, so Pauly followed me with the cake. We were around to Doctor Bates as Miss Phelps turned on the colonel and shouted:

"The question of arbitrary and unfair weight restriction of truck loads in this state—this one state—has never been honestly and fearlessly discussed."

"Ah—there are so many factors to be considered," the colonel said, one eye on Miss Phelps, one on Mr. Zane—or at least that's the impression I got. "Ah—the load-capacity of the particular highway ——"

"Built with the taxpayers' money," snorted Mr. Zane.

"And—ah—the question of safety ——"

"Double talk, plain double talk," Miss Phelps said flatly. "The truth is that a G. I. trucker trying to earn an honest living, like my young nephew, can't cross the sovereign state of Pennsylvania with a pay load that is legal in New York and legal in Maryland, for just one reason ——"

"Aren't you oversimplifying just a teeny bit?" It was Kelly, bounding back into his seat like a quarterback who was just pulled out for a few minutes' rest.

"—— because of the unholy power politics of the railroad lobby in Harrisburg, that's why. Colonel, I ask you man to man ——"

Huh, no wonder she's never got married, I thought to myself as I got around to Kelly with the chocolate sauce, which was in truth turning to fudge just like Davy warned. Luckily there were only Miss Phelps and the colonel left to pass to.

The test of courage comes when we are in the minority: the test of tolerance comes when we are in the majority.
—ANON.

A silence fell, weighing many tons to the square inch, as everybody stopped talking at once the way dinner parties always do at awkward moments.

"Please go on, Miss Phelps," purred Mr. Zane. "I want to hear your question—and the colonel's answer." There was more polite menace in his voice than I've ever heard outside the movies. The colonel had given up even trying to smile and looked so pathetically like he just wanted out that I wished something would happen to Miss Phelps. Little did I guess what.

Just like in a nightmare I felt myself suddenly shoot forward, tray and all, and what was left of the chocolate sauce—it turned out to be a horrible lot—spilled all over the front of Miss Phelps and down into her lap.

MERCIFULLY I can't remember much about what people said or did in the next few minutes except for Miss Phelps' outraged scream and little Doctor Bates, the heavy-water man, trying to mop her with his napkin, but just like Davy said it turned to fudge and wouldn't mop, and then there were the colonel and Kelly on their knees scraping it off her with ice-cream spoons!

At such a time and place Pauly had to get the giggles, chasing the chocolate-sauce ladle across the rug.

"Is she browned off!" she choked in my red ear. "Is she browned off, but def!" The shnook!

Then I saw Mrs. Roberts, and on that once kindly face was an expression of outraged majesty such as I never thought I would see outside of the French Revolution. "You may go," she said and actually raised her arm and pointed to the door like when they send someone out into the night.

I rushed to the kitchen and cast myself into Davy's comforting arms. If laughing and crying at the same time is having hysterics, that's what I had. I just drew a blank when I tried to explain what had happened, and Pauly was worse, collapsing and screaming on the washbasket for napkins.

"Maudie spilled the chocolate sauce on Miss Phelps and is she browned off," she kept moaning idiotically until Davy gave her a cold stare.

"Get lost," he ordered.

And suddenly I heard a familiar voice and there was Kelly in the doorway, trying to look kind in his wolfish way. "Don't you worry about your job, Mrs. Maud," he started.

"It's not the job!" I wailed. "It's the roof over our heads! Oh, Mr. Kelly, she's our landlord—maybe I mean landlady—and did did you see her face?"

I felt so low I had to look up to see the bottom.

"LEAVE her to me," he commanded out of the side of his mouth. "When I tell her how a certain little gal saved the colonel from having to answer a very, very embarrassing question—never mind how she saved him ——"

"But it was an accident!" I protested, very unstrung. "It was! I don't know how I could have spilled that horrible chocolate!"

"Yeah, yeah," said Kelly soothingly. "It was just an accident."

I don't know why it was but all of a sudden I noticed how quiet and busy Davy was, not saying anything or comforting me any more but just putting the knives and forks in neat little piles on a tray while whistling softly.

"Davy Dillon," I said, "was it an accident?"

"You're asking me?" Davy said innocently. "Was I there?"

"Listen," Kelly said, "anyone can accidentally push a tray."

"Did you push my tray?" I demanded, sounding almost like Miss Phelps.

Kelly raised his arms weakly from his sides. "Somebody had to make a sacrifice," he said. "For the good of the party, see."

"Sacrifice—you mean he said—why that's what I said —— Davy!"

But just that minute to my horror Davy the fox dumped a box of soap flakes and the trayful of Mrs. Roberts' old family silver into the dishpan and began churning and pounding it around with the mop handle.

"Davy!" we all shouted over the earsplitting racket like coal going down a chute. "What are you doing?"

"I'm washing the tools," he yelled back, "like we washed them in the Navy. Very quick." And he made the mop handle growl around even louder. Then he dredged up a couple of pieces of shining clean silver and smiled happily. "See?"

"Davy," I said, "one thing I have to know."

"Now don't blow your top, sweetheart," Kelly cut in. "If you lose out here, the colonel will take care of you—he owes his political future to you. He'll take care of you all right."

Davy looked around at me from where he was piling up the silver forks and knives. "How nice that will be," he said. In his eyes was that heavenly heart-warming jealous look.

"Davy, darling," I said happily, puckering my eyebrows, "you are such a half-head."

"But such a half!" marveled Kelly. "How it thinks!"

"Only I still don't understand ——"

Pauly stretched and got up off the washbasket. "Life is just one fool thing after another," she announced. "Why don't you just accept it, Maudie?"

"And love," crooned Davy, "is just two fool things after each other. Accept that, it's more fun."

"But you're a Democrat."

"Can't I back a good Republican if I want to?"

"Oh, Davy," I breathed, "then you mean you are for Colonel Davisson?"

"No," said Davy, while giving me a pat where it would do the most good, "I'm for you. The only good Republicans are young Republicans."

THE END

In meetings such as this, Quakers worship in silence. There is no minister, since members believe that God is revealed directly to every seeking soul.

Meet a Quaker Family

John and Mary Hunt, of Downingtown, Pennsylvania, build a home, a profession and a faith.

By ROGER BUTTERFIELD

THE road which runs along Valley Creek, in rural Chester County, Pennsylvania, has many unexpected twists and turns and many spots of beauty. It crosses ancient covered bridges whose planks rattle sharply under the wheels of modern cars. It curves around old stone mills and the new white barns of the fox-hunting country gentry. In places it is so shadowed by forest trees that it seems almost gloomy; elsewhere it breaks out into a rolling countryside of sun-swept fields and farms.

Along this road John and Mary Hunt have found, in their early middle age, a kind of happiness that always eluded them in their younger years. Their home stands beside the road; it is a small, white-stuccoed farmhouse which is none too roomy for the Hunts and their four growing children. But it is surrounded by 35 acres of land on which they grow most of their own food. A few miles downstream, and off to one side, in the town of West Chester, is the small private school where John has the perfect job, for him, of principal and teacher. Still farther down, on Brandywine Creek, in a rich setting of oaks and spruce trees, is the historic Birmingham Meeting House of the Society of Friends (Quakers), to which the Hunts belong.

PHOTOS BY MYRON H. DAVIS

Birmingham Meeting was established in 1690, later used as a hospital for both British and American soldiers during Revolutionary War. Of its 70 members, 25% are "convinced" Quakers like the Hunts, who joined the sect in 1942.

Before they settled here the Hunts, like many other Americans of their time, had led restless and somewhat confused lives. John, in particular, went from one thing to another without finding real satisfaction: at various times he was a radio announcer, Y.M.C.A. secretary, road manager for a girls' singing trio, advertising salesman, and Methodist preacher. His father was a Presbyterian missionary in Egypt.

"No one will ever know how much we love this place. Owning it is security, working it a challenge." Pride of both Tommy, 8, and John is Mary Ellen, the cow who provides famil

"Our wants are simple: to work with the soil and children, plant seeds of understanding where we can."

Marriage is happy if you know "when to be dependent, when not to be demanding." Hunts didn't get along on first date, but "9 years together adjusted all that."

Among John's earliest memories is the picture of his mother and himself and his four brothers floating down the River Nile in a houseboat, which stopped at every little native town while his father preached open-air sermons to the inhabitants. Statistically, at least, the results were not impressive. "I've heard dad say that Mohammedans are awfully hard to convert," John recalls.

John Legus Hunt is a curious mixture, as he is the first to declare. He has always had an urge to preach; but in direct conflict with this, he has also had the feeling that he is not quite good enough to set an example for others. "There is something about standing in a pulpit and being called 'Reverend' that sets you apart from other men," he says. "It puts a little fence around you. I didn't want that fence around me."

John is fond of the common touch. He likes to drop into a Greek restaurant at Downingtown (where the Lincoln Highway crosses Brandywine Creek) on Wednesday nights, light up a fat cigar, and watch the boxing bouts on television; he likes to load his old farm truck with his home-grown sweet corn and go from door to door, peddling to housewives. He likes to dance, especially the old-fashioned square dances, and he earns a little extra money "calling figures" at barn dances in milk—and calves for beef.

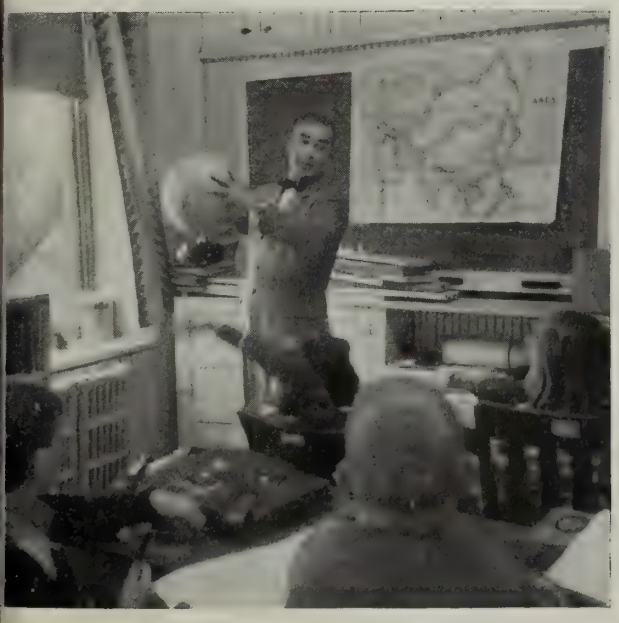
The Hunts didn't know "even the A B C's of farming" when they purchased their 35 acres 7 years ago. Today, they raise most of own food; made profit of over $500 on summer operations in '48. Tommy waters, feeds and cleans house for "Old Girl," the sow.

Loading the manure spreader: Hunts first used horses, learned to hitch their team from a wholesale catalogue. Tough jobs on the land don't bother John, but the budget does. Farm is mortgaged for $5000, and loans for new machinery last year added $1500 to his debts.

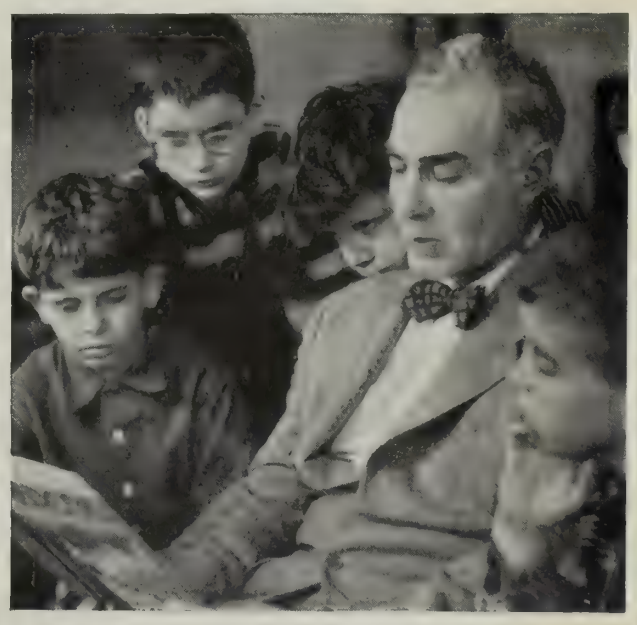


Chester and near-by counties. Every night, when he helps put his children to bed, John dances and sings a vigorous Southern folk tune entitled Scooping Up the Pawpaws. The floor boards of the old farmhouse rock and sag as he scrambles around the room pretending to pick up fallen pawpaws.

John thinks such congenial activities might be frowned on if he were an ordained minister, and perhaps he is right.

John was born at Cambridge, New York, near Albany, and was taken to Egypt at the tender age of six weeks. There he attended French, English and German schools, climbed the Pyramids, and collected a blackened mummy's foot which he sometimes carries with him in a brief case. His family returned to the U. S. when he was 11. John attended high school near Pittsburgh, and Wooster College in Ohio, where he was graduated in 1929. For a year after that he was a licensed Methodist preacher, serving four small churches in Ohio.

This was definitely a period of searching, for him—he wasn't sure what he wanted to do. Through a friend in Columbus he drifted into radio work for Station WAIU, operating the control board, selling ads, giving auditions, and announcing programs under the name of "Uncle John" (he was then 23!). He "discovered" a trio of small-town sisters who made a hit with their harmonizing on the air; when they were offered a contract for a tour, John pawned his brand-new typewriter to buy them their first long dresses. Their mother refused to let them travel unless "Uncle John" went along as chaperon and manager, so for six months he shepherded them from one Midwest theater to another. They never paid him for the dresses; he lost his typewriter, and became rather disgusted with show business in general. He left it and headed back, in a roundabout way, toward the ministry.



For two years he worked in a Pittsburgh Y.M.C.A. to earn tuition money, then enrolled in the big Union Theological Seminary in New York. He continued to pay his own way by working in Y's and summer camps, and selling his blood to a transfusion service, which paid him as high as $35 a pint. He finished his course in 1936 and could have been ordained to the ministry then; no less a personage than Harry Emerson Fosdick urged him to do so. But still he held back. For a while he was Y.M.C.A. secretary at the University of Kansas, then a teacher of comparative religion at Haverford School,

Out of the fields and back to class: John takes over winter job as principal and master of social studies at Friends' Community School. Salary is $3000—"but teaching as I believe is a reward beyond measure."

John likes small schools, wants a friendship with his students "that won't stop when the bell rings." There are 10 masters for 80 pupils in Friends' kindergarten classes and 6 grades. About ⅓ of children are Quakers.

"A real sense of the world and its peoples"—Quaker teaching stresses the brotherhood and likeness of all men. Even preschool children work in drives to aid needy of Asia and Europe.

Hunts fell in love with their farm "unexpectedly" when John was working at near-by Y.M.C.A. camp. Price of 200-year-old house, barn and land was $6500.

"We're raising our kids to choose their own way of life. We only hope they'll find a purpose in the world and peace within themselves."

near Philadelphia. This did not give him the answer he wanted—"I was merely talking about religion instead of doing something about it," he says.

In the meantime he had been married, briefly and not happily. His little daughter, Patricia, was living with him in a furnished room near the Haverford campus. His college classmate, Dr. Edward ("Red") Bourns, insisted that he make a week-end trip to Westfield, New Jersey, and meet a red-haired nurse named Mary Lea. John went, and even donned a Tuxedo for his first blind date with Mary, but the affair was not a success.

"I thought he was too stuffy and self-conscious," Mary says today. "And he thought I was just a natural-born old maid!"

But Doctor Bourns was determined to play Cupid, and he invited John for other week ends. A second date with Mary was arranged, with better results. This time they danced for hours in a little roadhouse; at midnight Doctor Bourns and his wife went home by themselves, leaving John and Mary to walk back in the moonlight. Mary took off her slippers so they wouldn't be spoiled, and walked along in her bare feet. When they said good night John felt like kissing her, but didn't quite dare; later on he found out that she would have been willing.

The following summer Mary went to her parents' home in Wisconsin and John drove all the way to Colorado to attend a youth conference. He wrote Mary that he would stop and bring her back East on his return—if she would pay part of the expenses.

Mary replied that she would be glad to pay for the ride, and invited him to Wisconsin to meet her family. They started off together in his car, with a big box of Mary's chocolate cake and her mother's homemade sandwiches, which were supposed to last them for two days. John enjoyed the provisions so heartily that when they reached Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, they were out of food. It was then, according to John, that Mary played her trump card. She suggested that they buy some steaks and cook their own dinner somewhere in the mountains.

"Of course it was a beautiful night and the moon was shining, and it was all very romantic," he says, winking. "That time she got kissed, and that was the end of it."

But Mary laughingly denies his insinuations. "I just thought it would be economical if we made our own dinner," she says. "And besides, who was it that drove five miles off the highway to build a fire?"

The next day they drove to New Jersey, to meet John's father, and then on to Long Island, where her brother was living. For a few lazy days they lounged in the sand and surf, and then returned to their separate jobs. In October (on Friday the thirteenth) they became engaged, and the following June they were married.

Not long after their wedding they attended a Quaker meeting together at Ithan, a little town near Philadelphia. This was in 1940, during the early part of the war, and a young man who had just returned from Europe was present. So was the Hunts' good friend, Dr. Douglas Steere, a professor of philosophy at Haverford (Continued on Page 146)

"He's into everything—specially everything he can eat," says Mary of blond Liggie, 2. But he also claims best disposition in family.

What's the best size for a family? "Our philosophy is just one more," says Mary, who expects a 7th Hunt this month. Clothes are main financial problem, since gardening holds food bills to low $50 a month. Last summer, the Hunts were able to can and freeze over 200 quarts of farm's fruit and vegetables.

"We may not have money, or rugs on the floors—but our roots are down in happiness." John remembers when achieving the good life meant a stint of trial and error. Throughout the '30's, he tried being a Methodist preacher, a radio announcer and advertising salesman. A brief, early marriage failed him and Patsy. Joining the Friends, he feels, gave him a philosophy to "live, not just talk about," with Mary and the kids "a sure and loving center."

Home chores are a "community project" and kids don't get paid for helping out. Patsy, 14, likes to keep house but would rather be a poetess—"if I could just earn a living at it."

Margie, 4, consoles Liggie during operation haircut. "She's more domestic than I am," says mother, who's taught her to make beds and garden. Pet job: collecting eggs as fast as the hens can lay them.

Family mathematician and master mechanic, Tommy knows how to run the tractor, likes to hitch it to sleigh for a winter snow ride. Last year, he helped harvest crops, harrowed one 6-acre field on his own.

"Our feet are in the dirt—but we can look up and see the stars."

"Meeting and liking all kinds of people"—Hunts share Sunday dinner with Penn medical students.

"'Tolerance' is a passive word—we prefer 'friendship.'" Hunts hope that guests like Clive Abdullah and Jean Sayegh will teach the kids "at home and lastingly" to judge in terms of "character," not races and creeds.

(Continued from Page 144) College. During the meeting the returned traveler rose (as is the Quaker custom) and spoke very feelingly about the things he had seen in the war zones. He recalled a religious ceremony he had once witnessed in Greece, in which hundreds of worshipers carried candles up the mountains to a little church. "Now all that is blacked out by bloodshed and barbarity," he said almost bitterly. "The candles have all been extinguished; will they ever be lighted again?"

He sat down and there was the usual Quaker period of silent thought. Then, without rising from his seat, Professor Steere uttered a single quiet sentence: "The candle of the Lord burns in the heart of every man and that light will never go out."

Those vibrant words went directly to the hearts of John and Mary Hunt—even now their voices tremble when they tell the story. It was an important turning point in their lives.

"Of These Things We are Convinced"

The Hunts are "convinced" Quakers, which means they joined the society at their own request (as contrasted with "birthright" Quakers, who are born into it). They are definitely not "converted" Quakers, for that is a word which Friends do not use about themselves. To them conversion implies some outside persuasion or pressure, and they do not believe in it. The urge to become a Quaker must come only (Continued on Page 170)

Barn-dance favorites make the rafters shake when John "quiets down" the small fry at bedtime. It's his idea that vocal talent is handy for parents—"Mary and I never spank the kids, but we can always outshout 'em."

Bright meat idea! You make it with the sweet, country flavor of Del Monte Corn

BRAND

Two delicious styles: Golden Whole Kernel, Golden Cream Style

One more good food from the brand that puts FLAVOR FIRST

No bones! No waste! Tastes like baked ham! And the special goodness of DEL MONTE Brand Corn makes this new meat recipe a two-way treat!

Those plump, bright DEL MONTE Corn kernels are full of sweet, hearty flavor—the kind that makes women ask what brand you buy, and makes men ask for second helpings.

That's because DEL MONTE makes such a point of tenderness and high natural sugar content in corn. Whether it's sunny DEL MONTE Golden Whole Kernel — or kernel-crammed DEL MONTE Golden Cream Style—the kernels are very thin-skinned. The flavor is sweet — rich and satisfying, too. And to double your corn enjoyment — try both styles!

CORNPATCH CANADIAN BACON

- 1 lb. piece Canadian bacon, unsliced*
- 18 whole cloves
- 5 onion wedges
- Prepared mustard
- Brown sugar
- ½ cup syrup from DEL MONTE Apricots, Peaches, etc.
- 1 to 2 cans DEL MONTE Golden Whole Kernel Corn

Remove casing from bacon; place in shallow baking pan, fat side up. Make 5 slashes halfway through meat. Insert onion wedges in slashes. Stud each meat section with 3 cloves. Spread with mustard; pat on brown sugar to cover; pour fruit syrup over. Bake in slow oven (300° F.), basting often, about 1¼ hrs. Spoon off excess fat from sauce in pan; add corn; salt, pepper and stir. Return to oven about 10 min., till corn is hot. To carve, cut meat in thin slices. Serves 4 to 6. You'll want 2 cans of corn for 6 people.

Great idea for dressing up canned luncheon meat, too! Use 3 onion wedges to a 12-oz. can, to serve 4.*

Sunbeam

DOUBLE AUTOMATIC

IRONMASTER

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

You've got it UNDER YOUR THUMB!

HOT in 30 seconds

HEATS QUICKER, STAYS HOTTER, IRONS FASTER

Until you've used Sunbeam Ironmaster, you've no idea how much faster and easier ironing can be. No waiting for it to heat up—it's ready to go in a split minute, and always delivers the correct, steady heat for whatever fabric you're ironing. That's why you finish quicker, feeling fresher with a Sunbeam on the job.

SAFE steady Low heat that will not scorch the finest lingerie.

SUNBEAM HAS the Thumb-tip Heat Control Dial up in the handle, where it is always cool and convenient. Easy-to-see. Easy-to-set. A finger-touch sets it for the correct, safe heat you want.

SUNBEAM HAS the Quick, Steady Heat made possible by Double-Automatic Heat Control, an exclusive Sunbeam invention. Heats faster—but never overheats. Reaches safe Low Heat for rayons in 30 seconds, quick High Heat for heavy, damp linens in 2½ minutes.

QUICK steady High heat for your heavy, dampened linens.

IN ADDITION, IT HAS the air-cooled, wrist-resting handle . . . larger ironing surface . . . permanently attached cord set . . . new streamlined beauty.

See your dealer.

© SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50, Illinois • Canada: 321 Weston Rd. So., Toronto 9

Famous for Sunbeam TOASTER, MIXMASTER, COFFEEMASTER, WAFFLE BAKER, etc.

PHOTOS BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

"It's so easy to freeze food and we save more things we raise," says Mrs. Hunt, tipped off to advantages of freezing by frozen-food lockers in town.

FREEZE IT!

Frozen foods are assets that can be cashed as needed.

By MARGARET DAVIDSON

DEPOSITING a variety of foods in a freezer is like putting cash in a bank to be drawn on at need. It's like having a private food bank, and appeals as much to city folk as to Mrs. Hunt, part-time farmer's wife. And it is just as desirable to keep an inventory of the freezer cache as to keep a checkbook up to date.

SPEED FRESH FOOD TO THE FREEZER

Fast freezing preserves the flavor of top-notch victuals, but it won't make poor food better. Fresh and fast are what it takes—fresh from the farm and fast into the freezer. Still, if you do the freezing as well as the storing at home, it's well not to be in such a rush that you neglect to follow directions. Here are some standard procedures you ought to know, and some improvisations we've tried in the JOURNAL Workshop that may have occurred to you, too, and then again may not have:

Sugared, sliced strawberries for shortcake packed in boxes with plastic tops.

WRAPPINGS SEAL THE GOODNESS IN

Zero storage is drier than dry, and wrappings and cartons are used to keep in the moisture and keep out the air. Special packaging is a must for foods to be stored for months, unless you have an Eskimo's taste for dehydrated provisions with the flavors spoiled and the fat gone rancid. If you eat out of the freezer day by day, food for two weeks or less can be packaged as for refrigerator storage. But if there's a chance it will be held longer, be certain to use materials specifically intended for freezer use. Families who don't like leftovers will be grateful for packages of one-meal size.

For meat, fish and poultry, you have a choice of aluminum foil, laminated papers, cellophane (treated for freezer wear and tear), Pliofilm, or a new plastic tongue twister, polyethylene. Some wrappings have a right side to be used next the food. There are clear freezer bags that can be shrunk with a quick hot-water dip to conform to the shape and size of meat and poultry. Fold other wrappings closely so that they fit like the paper on the wall, double fold the ends, and tie or seal them well with special locker tape. Thinner wrappings should be covered with a second freezer paper or stockinet which is form-fitting and tubular and comes in rolls. Frozen meat is hard as rocks. Shuffled around in the freezer, thin wrappings may tear if they aren't protected. For individual cuts like chops or fillets or steaks, it's a great convenience to use a double thickness of the wrapping between layers. This prevents their freezing together, and lets you separate them easily later.

For fruit, vegetables and cooked foods, there are special containers. Glass jars for freezer use are as wide at the top as at the bottom, and so allow the hard cylinders of frozen food to slide out. They are re-usable, too, and so are some heavy paraffined containers, a new type of which has transparent lids. Rectangular boxes with special linings fit together compactly in your freezer. To seal their liners, heat-controlled sealers made for the purpose are easy to use. A curling iron is good, too, if you have one around. You're more likely to have a temperature-controlled hand iron. Set this at "Rayon" and seal the opening of your liner by folding it over a ruler laid across the top of the box and ironing it shut. Fruits need tight packaging, especially if they're packed in sirup. Even below zero, some sirups won't freeze solid, and a leaky container can make a mess of your freezer. Cooked delicacies can not only be frozen, but also reheated in aluminum containers. You may want to pack creamed foods or stews in layers, with double thicknesses of wrapping material between. In this way small blocks can be separated while still frozen and will heat up faster than large ones.

PREPARING MEAT

When you have the freezer space, buy meat in quantity. Go the whole hog. Get a whole side or quarter of beef, and save up to forty cents a pound on steaks, chops and roasts. But unless you're an old hand at dissecting the larger vertebrates, persuade your butcher or your locker man to do the cutting and to help in the important matter of chilling and aging.

PREPARING VEGETABLES

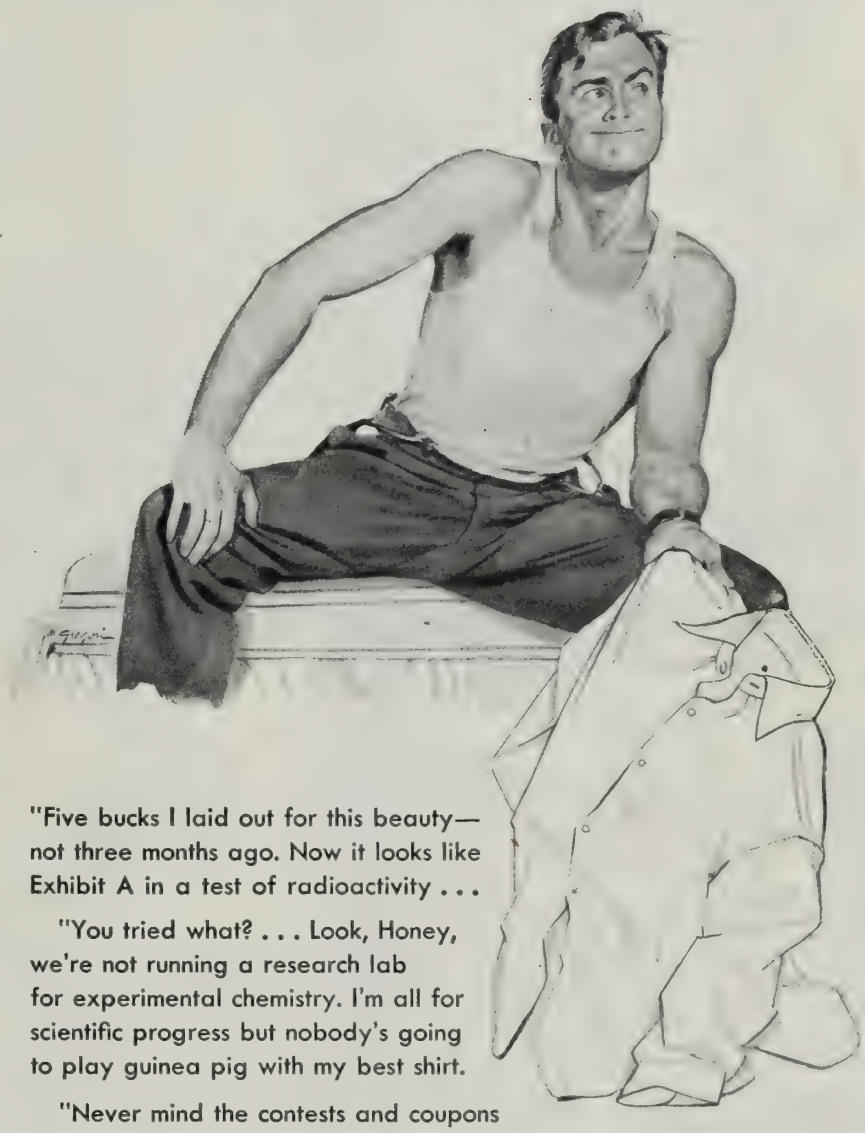
Vegetables should be scalded or heat-treated and then cooled before freezing, as you probably know. But did you know that when a suitable strainer isn't at hand, a coarse cheesecloth comes in handy for holding them during the operation? With peas, it's better than a wide-meshed strainer, for obvious reasons. Held by a fork, it's easy to pop into the steam or water bath, then quickly douse in cold running water or ice water for cooling. And have you tried freezing a combination of vegetables? The trick of blanching them according to their kind and then combining them for freezing is well adapted to a garden that grows only a little of each variety. There's nothing utilitarian about the way they taste later in salads and casserole dishes or eaten plain with butter. We tried peas with string beans and cut corn and cauli-

(Continued on Page 162)

Supported by ruler, iron seals package liner. The special sealers are fine too.

Between chops, double thickness of cellophane makes them easy to separate.

Squared aluminum-foil boxes make most of freezer space, have crimped-on lids.



A dip in near-boiling water shrinks special bag to snug fit for chicken.

To speed thawing meat, place wrapped package on rack in front of electric fan.

"When did we stop using Fels-Naptha Soap?"

"Five bucks I laid out for this beauty—not three months ago. Now it looks like Exhibit A in a test of radioactivity . . .

"You tried what? . . . Look, Honey, we're not running a research lab for experimental chemistry. I'm all for scientific progress but nobody's going to play guinea pig with my best shirt.

"Never mind the contests and coupons or what-have-you. I bought you a swell washing machine and I can still give you the price of the best laundry soap to use in it.

"Let's get back to fundamentals. And I mean Fels-Naptha Soap."

Fels-Naptha Soap is the proven laundry product for best results with all kinds of family wash. Get some today. Get gentle, quick-cleaning, sneezeless Fels-Naptha Soap Chips for your washing machine or automatic washer.

MADE IN PHILA. BY FELS & CO.

FOR EXTRA CLEANING ACTION USE

Fels-Naptha Soap

MILD, GOLDEN SOAP AND ACTIVE NAPTHA

"Save Eggs with Carnation Milk"

Says

Mrs. JAMES W. WILEY
Vermont Home Economist

Here's the way Mrs. Wiley turns her meat loaf into a glamor-dish that costs only about 17c a serving!

She uses Carnation Evaporated Milk in her Ham Loaf—so no eggs are needed. (The secret is Carnation's extra-richness and heavier consistency.)

Mrs. Wiley saves twice with her recipe—egg-money and milk-money! And this delicious Ham Loaf is just one example of the many ways you can save with Carnation Milk.

In any recipe that calls for milk, Carnation gives better taste, better nutrition at lower cost. Compare results—compare costs—and you'll be a "Carnation Cook," too!

She was a "Carnation Baby"

Mrs. James W. Wiley, now a "Carnation Mother"—was herself raised on Carnation Milk. More babies are fed on Carnation than on any other brand of evaporated milk, according to nation-wide surveys. Ask your doctor about Carnation for your baby—it's the milk every doctor knows.

LISTEN to Buddy Clark on Carnation's "Contented Hour" every Monday night on your NBC station.

Pineapple-Glazed Ham Loaf

VELVET BLENDED WITH CARNATION MILK

1 pound ground ham, raw or cooked
1 pound ground beef
1 cup uncooked oatmeal
1½ cups Carnation Milk
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
4 or 5 canned pineapple half-slices
¼ cup brown sugar, firmly packed
1 teaspoon dry mustard
2 tablespoons vinegar

Combine meat, oatmeal, Carnation Milk, salt and pepper. Shape into mold on shallow baking pan. Arrange pineapple half-slices on top of loaf. Bake in a moderate oven (375° F.) 1 hour. Mix sugar, mustard and vinegar and pour over top. Return to oven and bake ½ hour longer, basting occasionally. Let stand in a warm place 15 minutes to absorb meat juices. Serves 8 to 10.

SEND FOR the "Velvet Blend Book" containing many other delicious, money-saving recipes. Carnation Company, Dept. L-69, Los Angeles 36, California.

Enjoy COFFEE more—with Carnation

50 Years 1899-1949

"from Contented Cows"

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

PHOTO BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

Patsy gives small new potatoes a good scrubbing. They'll be cooked in their jackets and served with a dressing of sour cream and chopped chives.

Well-Dressed Vegetables

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

VEGETABLES can be dull or dramatic! You can't expect your husband and children to eat them just because of their nutritional importance unless they are interestingly cooked. The whole idea in a pea pod is to follow simple rules to save their food value, then season and serve them so attractively there'll be no refusals—only compliments to the cook.

The Hunts are fortunate in having their own garden. Keeping up with their seed-packet plunder is an all-summer marathon, just now beginning. If you have a garden, go through it with an expectant eye. Pick vegetables young and tender—when they are succulent miniatures—if you missed this stage last year. The quicker the transition from garden to table, the better. The Hunts do this and reap the best flavor.

But most of us have to shop for our vegetables, and if they're not garden fresh at the market, we're licked before we start. Vegetables must be crisp and fresh and young to taste really good cooked—no matter how many seasoning tricks you use. Snap beans should really snap—tops of root vegetables should look fresh—not tired and wilted. Pods of peas should be firm. In other words, choose the vegetables that have the look of youth.

KEEP THAT GARDEN FRESHNESS

There are really only two simple rules to remember when cooking vegetables in water. First, cook tightly covered in a size saucepan suitable to the quantity of vegetables—preferably a heavy pot with a lid that fits tight. Use as little boiling salted water as you can get by with and cook quickly until just tender but still firm textured. Serve immediately. Vegetables cooked hours ahead to save time, then reheated, never have the flavor of a fresh-cooked vegetable.

BEAN TEAMS

There are so many good ways to dress up green beans, your family will never tire of them. Frenched (cut lengthwise in slices), quickly cooked and dressed with mustard sauce, they are something special. . . . Or cook and bake under a soft blanket of cheese sauce and crumbs. . . . Adding a clove of garlic to the water in which you cook green beans adds a new flavor blend for family comment. Or heat the garlic in the butter or margarine for dressing the beans, if you wish. . . . Sometime try adding 1 green pepper, seeded and diced, or ½ cup minced celery to the green beans just before they finish cooking. Both pepper or celery and beans should still be sort of crispy before you add the ubiquitous butter or margarine, salt and pepper. . . . Team cooked green beans with sautéed almonds or mushrooms for texture and flavor. Combine them with young peas and Lima beans for a French panaché. . . . Go Dutch and serve them sweet-sour with a dressing of sugar, hot vinegar and bacon fat. And for a special dish, try this.

GREEN BEANS WITH SOUR CREAM

Cook 1 pound green beans, French cut, or if they are succulent, tiny ones, leave them whole. While they cook, sauté 1 onion.

chopped, and 2 tablespoons chopped parsley in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Work in 1 tablespoon flour and ½ cup bean liquor. Cook a few minutes until smooth. Season with a good pinch of dried or fresh dill, 1 teaspoon sugar and 1 teaspoon vinegar, salt and pepper. Add drained beans and stir in 1 cup thick sour cream.

CARROT CHARMERS

The first young carrots from the garden make a memorable dish—even the deceiving ones you pull up by mistake. Scrub these little fellows—don't scrape. Cook them whole and dress with butter or margarine, salt and pepper and add a frippery of chopped parsley, water cress, chives, fresh thyme or mint from the bed under the lilacs. Lemon butter—the same kind you make for fish—is a real carrot cosmetic. . . . Combine carrots with peas or tiny whole onions. And speaking of onions with carrots, here's praise for panning—panning vegetables, we mean—an easy and delicious way to cook some vegetables without any water at all:

PANNED CARROTS AND SCALLIONS

Chop 6 scallions—tops and all. Scrape 5 young carrots and shred or slice thin. Cook scallions in ¼ cup butter or margarine for 1 minute in a not-too-large saucepan over low heat. Add the carrots. Season with salt and pepper. Cover tightly and steam until tender. Wonderful flavor, as there's no dilution with water.

BEAUTY FOR BEETS

To keep the complexion of beets when you cook them—do not peel unless you're cooking them in a special way I will tell you about later. Leave 2 inches of top on beets too. A little vinegar or lemon juice added to the water in which you cook them heightens the color.

Some like beets sweet-sour, such as Harvard beets, or glazed with currant jelly. Never combine beets with cream sauce unless the clash of pink and red does not jar on your aesthetic senses. The beets bleed into the sauce, producing the wildest, weirdest pink you will ever want to see in a food. Clear sauces are best. Here's a way with orange sauce:

BEETS IN ORANGE SAUCE

Heat 1 teaspoon grated orange peel with ½ cup orange juice, 2 tablespoons lemon juice. Mix ¼ cup sugar with 1 tablespoon cornstarch and ½ teaspoon salt. Add to hot liquid—stir constantly until thickened and clear. Add 3 cups diced cooked beets and 2 tablespoons butter or margarine.

TEN-MINUTE BEETS

While whole beets shouldn't be peeled before cooking, here's a quick-cooking way you might like to try. Peel 1 bunch young beets and shred. Put 2 cups water in pan. Add 1 tablespoon butter or margarine and 1 tablespoon lemon juice and ½ teaspoon salt. Let it come to a boil. Cover tightly and cook over high heat 10 minutes. If you use a heavy pan and refrain from peeking, they will cook in even less time. You may think with this much water there would be considerable left, but you'll be interested to discover that there will be just enough butter sauce left in the pan to pour over the beets—thus saving the valuables. Season with salt and pepper and a little more lemon juice. Besides the saving in time, they become quite a new dish—one well worthy of your acquaintance. There's only one drawback to this method, if you consider it so—peeling and shredding the beets does stain your hands—but lemon juice takes care of that.

TOPS ARE GOOD TOO

Beet tops, if young and fresh, are more favored by some than spinach or other greens. Cook, chop and dress with butter or margarine and seasonings. Add a little vinegar and garnish with sliced eggs—another vegetable for your menu for free. . . . The thin-outs in the garden make a delectable mess of greens. A piece of bacon cooked with them does wonders. Cook tops and roots separately. Chop both and combine before adding seasonings.

GLORIFY GREENS

Salad days are here and greens go first in the bowl. But there are many tempting ways to serve cooked leafy greens too. Thank your stars if you have an herb garden or a row of fat little jars of dried herbs on your cupboard shelf. Savory, basil and rosemary blend their flavors best with spinachy greens. Try spinach or chard cooked with parsley, scallions, a little rosemary. Add salt, pepper and butter or margarine. It tastes better than spinach or chard ever tasted before.

Ever think of cooking lettuce, spinach, beet and radish tops together? It's really good. Mushrooms and horse-radish add their blessing to cooked greens, and, packed in a ring, greens make a trim hedge for creamed eggs, fish or another vegetable. Cooked greens wearing a cloak of lemonaise—mayonnaise heated in a double boiler and thinned with lemon juice—add a tart accent for the vegetable plate. . . . Or here's one: Heat ⅓ cup French dressing. Add 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, 1 hard-cooked egg, chopped, and ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce. Pour over drained greens before serving.

FAVORITE CREAMED SPINACH

Wash 2 pounds spinach in several waters. Cook covered with just the water that clings to the leaves, adding ¼ teaspoon salt, until just wilted. Drain and chop fine. While spinach cooks, melt 2 tablespoons bacon fat in small saucepan. Add 1 onion, minced, 1½ teaspoons flour and the liquid from the spinach. Cook until smooth and thickened. Add ¼ cup heavy cream, ⅛ teaspoon nutmeg, the chopped spinach and salt and pepper to taste. Serve garnished with tiny cubes of bread fried in butter or margarine.

CORN WILL SOON BE RIPE

A hectic rush between garden and table—that's the way to get the best of corn on the cob. Might even put the water on to boil before you slam the screen door. If you're not lucky enough to have a garden, buy corn from a grocer you know has "fresh" corn—kernels so plump with milk they pop when you cut into them. Moist the ears should be—not dry. Once it's in the pot, don't let it stay there more than 6–8 minutes. Half milk in the water does something for corn, and don't forget a little sugar. While real corn lovers do most of their eating off the cob, there are other ways, if you should tire.

Cut corn off the cob and go in for succotash with Limas, peas and string beans. Have a batch of corn oysters now and then or temper its sweetness with green pepper. Corn pudding adds up to a pretty sum. . . . So does corn when made into a mélange with string beans, tomatoes and cheese—baked as a scallop with a frilled edge of mashed potato—as a one-dish vegetable dinner.

VEGETABLE VARIETY

There are numerous other ways of preparing these same vegetables—most common in the markets most times of the year (with the exception of corn, soon to come for a short stay). When we get to thinking about tomatoes, peas, Swiss chard, potatoes and mushrooms, we want to go on and on. Then there are the special vegetables—the many members of the squash family—asparagus, with its season just past—the exotic artichoke—the uniquely flavored eggplant—and later in the season, broccoli, cabbage and cauliflower. Well, don't let's get started—there will be another time!

Do you think you're drinking too much coffee?

It seems that no matter how much people love coffee, they usually worry about drinking too much of it.

You probably do yourself.

And it's only natural—when you realize how the caffein in coffee can upset people.

So whenever you find yourself feeling nervous and jittery or sleepless at night you probably check up on how much coffee you've had.

Maybe you are being affected by the caffein in it. Maybe you ought to stop drinking it altogether . . . or at least cut down on it.

Luckily, there's an easier, pleasanter solution.

DRINK SANKA COFFEE

Sanka is a real coffee . . . a delicious-tasting coffee—that you can drink and enjoy without worrying.

Sanka is rich and full-bodied, with all the satisfying flavor, with all the bracing cheer, that only real coffee . . . and only fine coffee . . . can give.

REAL COFFEE-97% CAFFEIN-FREE

You can drink as much Sanka as you want—any time you want. For Sanka Coffee is 97% caffein-free. There's no need to limit yourself . . . no need ever to go without the pleasure of a good cup of coffee.

Start drinking Sanka and see for yourself. You have nothing to lose, and possibly a great deal to gain.

Sanka Coffee

Real coffee with the worry taken out. Drink it and sleep!

Products of General Foods

Betty Crocker uses Wesson Oil for this

Glamorous Chiffon Cake!

AMERICA'S MOST TALKED-ABOUT CAKE!
Extra-light! Extra-luscious!

ALLEGRETTI CHIFFON

Heat oven to 325° (slow moderate). Coarsely grate 1½ sq. (1½ oz.) chocolate (sweet or unsweetened).

1. In first bowl, sift together:
- 1⅛ cups (1 cup plus 2 tbsp.) sifted Softasilk cake flour (spoon lightly—don't pack)
- ⅞ cup (¾ cup plus 2 tbsp.) sugar
- 1½ tsp. baking powder
- ½ tsp. salt

Make a well and add these:
- ¼ cup Wesson Oil
- 2 unbeaten egg yolks (medium)
- ⅜ cup (¼ cup plus 2 tbsp.) cold water
- 1 tsp. vanilla
- grated rind 1 orange (about 1½ tbsp.)

Beat with spoon until smooth.

2. In large second bowl, put:
- ½ cup egg whites (4)
- ¼ tsp. cream of tartar

Beat into stiff peaks, stiffer than for meringue. DO NOT UNDERBEAT.

3. Pour egg yolk mixture gradually over beaten egg whites, gently folding with rubber scraper just until blended. DON'T STIR. Sprinkle with grated chocolate; fold in with a few strokes. Pour immediately into ungreased loaf pan (5" x 10" x 3"). Bake 50-55 minutes at 325°, or until top springs back when lightly touched. Turn pan upside down, resting edges on 2 other pans; let hang free of table. When cold, loosen sides with spatula; turn pan over and hit edge sharply on table to loosen. Frost with—

ALLEGRETTI ICING: Cream 3 tbsp. vegetable shortening (such as Snowdrift)—or butter; blend in 1 egg yolk. Stir in 2 tbsp. cream, 2 cups sifted confectioners' sugar, 1 tsp. vanilla, beat well. Add more cream if needed. Frost cake. Melt 1½ sq. (1½ oz.) chocolate with ¼ tsp. Wesson Oil over hot water; cool slightly. Pour over top...let chocolate trickle down sides.

THE most sophisticated cake you can serve is Chiffon! Entirely new! Frothy as angel food, yet different...rich, moist and luscious! All Betty Crocker's* Chiffon recipes call for light, mild Wesson Oil. So—to have that special texture and delicate flavor in your Chiffon cake—use Wesson Oil. Clear, sparkling Wesson Oil is famous for making other good things to eat, too, such as crisp and digestible fried foods and delicious home-made salad dressing.

*Of General Mills, Inc.

Wesson Oil—for making good things to eat

SHRIMP SALAD CREOLE
Grand with this home-made Wesson Dressing

Thinly slice 2 green onions, including tops—mince ¼ cup celery. Add ¼ cup delicate Wesson Oil, 1 tbsp. prepared mustard, 2 tbsp. lemon juice, ½ tsp. salt, ¼ tsp. pepper; beat together. Add ½ lb. cooked fresh shrimp or 1 can shrimp; toss well. Cover; chill 2 hours, so the shrimp have the smooth zest of the Wesson Oil dressing. Mix lightly before you place the shrimp on crisp shredded lettuce. 3 servings. Delicious with potato chips. This will be a "request salad" all summer, so crisp, so naturally good-tasting, thanks to Wesson Oil, America's favorite Salad Oil!

NEW IDEAS! 218 recipes in "How to Win Compliments," 100-page cookbook. Beautiful foods in color. Send name, address, 25¢ in coin to Wesson Oil and Snowdrift People, Dept. A3, New Orleans 12, La.

HAVE A NICE WEEK END

(Continued from Page 63)

A few observations. I have also observed that the experienced and skilled practitioner of the art of being on the three-fifteen and heading straight for the right station wagon puts all responsibility squarely on somebody else's lap—you see what I mean? Long practice has made perfect the model week-ender. Present for the hostess, candy for the moppets—if any—one lone bag, and a fair hand at bridge and gin rummy. What more can a hostess want? Except the tacit agreement on breakfast in bed and no borrowing the toothpaste. It's an art. And like most art, it's very simple. All you need is a clear head, good legs, a tweed suit and a ticket back—and you may count on nice week ends right through from June to October and keep expenses down.

Let's consider the hostess. On Fridays during the summer as the office closes there's an exodus of people with week-end bags and parcels dashing to catch trains, and the corridors and elevators echo with their departure—"Have a nice week end!" But what about the hostess who prepares for their expected arrival at the other end of the line? Will it be a nice week end for her too? It's you who want to have everything nice, everybody to have a good time, and enjoy your guests, too, that I have on my mind.

Ways and means. When making your plans for the week end, my advice is to stick to the two-a-day. Let your guests sleep late and combine breakfast and lunch—then give them a reasonably early supper. Combining courses whenever you can saves a lot of extra fixing. Now let us speak about the late breakfast or early luncheon combination and a supper you'll find laid out for you here, both suitable for the guests who week-end and not too startling for the hostess who, should she lack a cook, must prepare them herself. And that reminds me. There are two schools of thought and practice—as to whether a guest should offer to help in the kitchen, or dust the living room, and so on; or should she retire to the hammock and mind her own business. An offer of help is one thing. The gimmick is in the nuances of the offer—the quick glance of the eye toward the shaded lawn, the half-deprecating smile: "I am not too efficient, maybe I'd be in the way." This is a digression, but I think it's important. For if you want help it's well to have the task determined and ready to hand lest the offer escape you. And if you don't want help have a counterplan for that too.

> A man may inherit power, not greatness. Men are not born great: they are born babies.
> —ANON.

That morning meal. What could better please eye and appetite on a warm June day than cool, delicious fruit, made to look pretty tempting and to taste even more so! There are dozens of combinations, dozens of ways to dress them up. And if time is a consideration, and you, too, would like to take things easy and have a little fun on the week end, get fruits that you may fix the day before, or fall back on fine ripe melons, and there you can't go wrong. But right here and now, having to begin somewhere in the long list of wonderful fruits, I give you strawberries and pineapple in quite a snazzy setting, and that doesn't mean that they won't taste as good arranged another way. Remember that.

FRESH PINEAPPLE AND STRAWBERRIES

Wash a fresh pineapple. With a sharp knife cut all the way around the eyes of the pineapple in toward the core—around the top row, be sure to cut in deep enough so that the top comes away from the fruit. Continue to cut down through the pineapple—loosen each segment but leave the thing whole. Carefully insert wooden picks through the center of each piece so that guests can help themselves. Prepare the day before and chill overnight. Provide whole washed strawberries, too, and little paper cups of sugar for each person. It's dip and eat. And, as we say up where I came from—"Hobson's choice." Another way, easier and not so fancy, is to cut the pineapple in fingers, arrange it alternately with the berries on a handsome glass dish, and have a bowl of fine sugar in the center.

The main chance. Having disposed of the fruit, with sighs of pure delight and satisfaction, you're about to make the acquaintance of another casserole dish—and aren't they the handy things, though, it being hot and who wants to hop around a kitchen all day when the roses are in bloom—did I hear a dissenting voice? No, that was the screen door slamming. All right, here is a casserole dish that can be put together without too much time and bother. Hearty enough to carry them through to dinnertime, and this may be the night you're all going down to the Clam House or driving up to Mrs. Parker's for dinner, anyway.

BAKED DEVILED EGGS AND ASPARAGUS

Wash 2 pounds of fresh asparagus, or use that fresh-frozen kind, if the shy youngsters aren't doing their stuff, and cut in 1-inch lengths, using just the tender portion of stalk. Cook in salted water until tender—saving the tips to add for the last few minutes of cooking. Drain. Slice 10 hard-cooked eggs in half lengthwise and remove the yolks. Mash the yolks with a fork and blend with 2 small cans (2¼ ounces) of deviled ham, ½ teaspoon of Worcestershire sauce, 1 teaspoon of grated onion, ¾ teaspoon of dry mustard, 1 tablespoon of cream, ½ teaspoon of salt, a dash of pepper. Fill the centers of the egg-white halves with the egg-yolk mix. Melt 6 tablespoons of butter or margarine; add 6 tablespoons of flour and mix well. Gradually add 3 cups of milk (or half milk and half cream) and stir constantly until the mixture thickens. Cook about 5 minutes longer over very low heat. Add 2 cups of grated Cheddar cheese, ¼ teaspoon of dry mustard, 1½ teaspoons of salt and a dash of pepper. Stir until the cheese is melted. Put the asparagus in the bottom of a shallow casserole. Arrange deviled eggs on top of it. Pour over it the cheese sauce. Crush 1 cup of corn flakes. Mix with 2 tablespoons of melted butter or margarine. Spread over the top. Bake in a hot oven, 400° F., 20 minutes, or until the sauce bubbles and the top is brown.

Summer is salad season. Not that everybody doesn't eat salad all year around. Of course they do. But since this meal is planned for nearer noon than nine, it seems one should have some salady thing. It might be water cress only—and I'm here to tell you that cress alone, dressed in French dressing and looking so cool and self-possessed in its green leaves, spiced with some unidentified mystery from the shady waters where it grows, is an excellent choice. But here's a little summer number in which you can use any vegetable that grows.

GARDEN SALAD

Cut a slice off the top of 7 medium-sized tomatoes. Scoop out. Sprinkle the insides of the tomatoes with salt. Turn upside down to drain. Mix together ½ cup of diced green pepper, ½ cup of thinly sliced radish, 1½ cups of celery sliced crosswise in thin slices and ½ cup of diced cucumber. Mix the vegetables with ¼ cup of French dressing. Fill the tomatoes with the vegetable mixture and arrange on a bed of greens.

Relax and call it dessert. I am referring to blueberry muffins, nothing else. Made right, they needn't be sneezed at as a dessert. These are meant to serve two pur-

(Continued on Page 154)

Shower the bride with cooking pleasures!

The pleasure of seeing things turn out right!

Let a bride start cooking with Pyrex Ware. It's more fun . . . and less work! No need to lift the lid—she can see what's happening right through the top and sides. She can see when the soup is simmering, when sauces are done just right. Pyrex Ware cooking is better cooking for beginners and for experts!

PYREX SAUCEPAN 1½-qt. size $2.25

The pleasure of beautiful serving dishes!

Any bride will use Pyrex Ware with her loveliest wedding-gift china! Pyrex Ware is so good-looking. And it makes food look so appetizing! Sturdy Pyrex Ware holds the heat, keeps food hot for second helpings. And what a saving in dishwashing . . . she'll cook, serve, and store food in the same Pyrex dish!

PYREX PIE PLATE 10-inch "Flavor-Saver" 69¢

The pleasure of finding the EXTRA uses!

Give a bride a set of Pyrex Mixing Bowls. It serves as a set of baking dishes and salad bowls as well! She can use a Pyrex Percolator for cooking soup, a Pyrex Cake Dish for meats or scalloped potatoes. She can use every piece for a number of uses. For Pyrex Ware doesn't hold flavors or odors.

PYREX BOWL SET 4 nested colored bowls $2.95

The pleasure of that sparkling-clean look!

A new homemaker never has to wonder whether a Pyrex dish is really clean. She can see the slightest speck, and whisk it away. Acid foods don't affect it. Coffee doesn't stain it. Gleaming Pyrex Ware is perfect for a fresh, new kitchen. And it keeps its brand-new sparkle year after year after year!

PYREX CASSEROLE 1-qt. size 79¢

Get Pyrex Flameware for the top of your stove . . .

Double Boiler $3.45 — 6-cup Percolator $2.95 — 1½-qt. Saucepan $2.25 — Teapot $1.95

Get Pyrex Ovenware for baking and roasting.

Oven and Refrigerator Set $2.95 — Set of 3 Measures $1.50 — 8½-inch Square Cake Dish 69¢ — Well-and-Tree Platter $1.50

DOZENS OF OTHER SIZES AND DISHES . . . EXTRA STRONG FOR LONG SERVICE!

PYREX
If it's Pyrex Ware the trade-mark is on it
WARE
®

"Corning", "Pyrex" and "Double-Touch" are trade-marks in the U. S. of Corning Glass Works, Corning, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 152)

poses—one to eat with the eggs and one spread with honey butter will polish off the meal along with another cup of freshly made coffee.

BLUEBERRY MUFFINS

Cream well ¼ cup of butter or margarine with ¼ cup of sugar. Add 1 well-beaten egg and mix. Do not beat. Sift 2 cups of flour. Take 2 tablespoons of it and mix with 1 cup of blueberries. Sift the rest with 3 teaspoons of baking powder and ¼ teaspoon of salt. Measure 1 cup of milk. Add the dry ingredients alternately with the milk. Don't beat. Stir enough to mix the ingredients. Add the floured blueberries and fold into the batter. (The batter won't look smooth, for if you beat it smooth you will crush the berries and ruin the muffins.) Fill greased muffin pans ⅔ full. Bake in a hot oven, 400° F., 25 to 30 minutes. This makes a dozen, and most muffin pans are doled out in dozens. Custard cups bake dandy muffins too. In case—you know. Serve with honey butter. Cream ½ cup of butter and ¼ cup of honey together. Serve as a spread for muffins.

Supper is supper. This one's supper, not dinner, although it might be called that. But in the country, on week ends, unless it's in a big house with cooks and maids and butlers and all, it seems better to hear the call to supper. It has a country sound, like cowbells at dusk or the tree toads in the garden. Supper sounds more like it to me, but I guess you'll sort it out and call it what you want to.

Gathered in that lazy informality that pervades a week end in the country, it's nice to have, with whatever drinks you favor, something a little different from the usual canapé and cracker. And here you have it. All you need for serving is a bowl of potato chips. And what could be simpler than that!

AVOCADO SPREAD

Peel and remove the stones from 2 large or 3 small avocados. Mash or put through the ricer or a coarse sieve. You should have about 1½ cupfuls. Combine with the juice of 2 lemons (about ⅓ cup) at once. This seasons the avocado and at the same time keeps it from daring to turn a purplish black on you. It will if you turn your back, so hand it the lemon-juice treatment. Add 1¼ teaspoons of salt, a little white pepper, and one or two dashes of Tabasco sauce. Cut the meat off the pits of 6 large ripe olives. Chop this fine and stir into the avocado mixture. Fry 2 slices of bacon, crisp. Drain and crumble it and add along with 1 tablespoon of minced onion. Last—add the yolks of 2 hard-cooked eggs put through the sieve. Mix well. Now taste it and add more seasonings to your own taste. Serve as a dip for potato chips.

That familiar face. Reams have been written about our old friend chicken pie. I myself have contributed several reams on the subject. Always talking about it. Always admonishing, but meaning well. For it's one of my most favorite dishes, and one that I make as perfectly as it's possible to make it. And for occasions such as this when you have a hungry horde to feed and don't want a lot of last-minute cooking to keep you in the kitchen, I know of few other dishes that suit the purpose as well. So once more:

CHICKEN PIE

Always be sure to have plenty of chicken and plenty of gravy. Have 2 chickens of roasting size or fowl that are not too experienced, cut up into portions, as for a fricassee. Put into enough cold water to cover the chicken well, and set it on to simmer. Add a little salt. Simmer gently until the meat is tender enough to fall from the bones. Remove skin. Separate all the meat from the bones—and never, never cut it up fine. Leave it in pieces just as it comes from the framework. Cool the broth and "extend" it by adding chicken broth as needed for plenty of gravy. Be sure to skim every speck of grease from the cooled broth before going any ther. Now blend to a smooth roux a thickng of 1½ tablespoons each of flour and ter or margarine for each cup of broth l, when the broth is warm, add gradually l cautiously, stirring every minute. Cook il the gravy is about the consistency of y heavy cream. If there's a single lump, ain the gravy. Season circumspectly h salt and pepper—nothing else. Taste to that it has savor. Put the chicken por-ns back into the hot gravy, and be sure to p it hot. Put the hot chicken and gravy o a casserole and cover with biscuit crust, ing it carefully around the edges and cking or slitting the

. Bake in a hot oven,
0° F., until crust
brown and done.
n't let the crust lean
o heavily on the icken part. Some ple set a cup in the ter of the dish to lster up the crust, but I don't. Somehow it ways acts pretty for me, so I don't have to.
In this case we have made biscuits and pped our pie with the biscuits, leaving nty more to serve with the gravy. Now e word about biscuits. (You know there e some pretty fine mixes, don't you? Save ne, save—well, save.) But—making them
m scratch—don't handle the dough too
uch. Don't be afraid of the baking powr; this dough needs to be hoisted to be
ht. Roll as if you were walking on eggs.
nd bake your biscuits before you're ady to serve your pie. Have the chicken bbling hot, cover it with the hot biscuits d get it on the table. Extra biscuits e wonderful eaten with extra gravy, if ur gravy is the kind I make. Best part of e whole works.

> I do not care to "fool" any man. When he discovers I have fooled him, he will do me more harm than my cunning did me good. —ED HOWE.

Pretty and pert. This describes the jeld cherries and cheese salad. Looks pretty, esn't it? And as looks are nothing without od behavior, this number has both. It akes a salad, sort of glorified, but it's a salad. And it doubles in brass by being a dessert, too, and that should be a help.

JELLIED CHERRIES AND COTTAGE-CHEESE SALAD

Soften 1 envelope of unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup of cold water. Mix ½ cup of sugar, ⅛ teaspoon of salt and 1 cup of hot water. Add the softened gelatin and stir until it is dissolved. Add ⅓ cup of lemon juice and chill it until slightly thickened. Fold in 2 cups of pitted ripe sweet cherries. Pour into a ring mold and chill until almost set. While the cherry layer is setting, prepare the cheese layer, which is by way of being salad and dressing for this dish. Beat 2 eggs until light. Add ½ cup of sugar, gradually, and beat well. Add ½ cup of pineapple juice, ⅓ cup of lemon juice and the grated rind of ½ lemon. Cook in the top part of a double boiler over hot water until thickened, stirring constantly. Soften 1 envelope of unflavored gelatin in ⅓ cup of cold water and add to the custard mixture. (This means the mixture in the double boiler. As if you didn't know!) Stir it until dissolved, stirring all the time. Cool, but do not let it set. Fold in 1 cup of creamy cottage cheese and pour over the cherry layer. Chill until set. Turn out on a bowl or platter of salad greens—garnish with cherries. This is a dessert salad. Lets you out of making a pie or something. And very stylish it is, to boot.

A last word. Like a parlor organ at a country auction—"going, going"—I have gone. Didn't you hear the door slam? But—I shall be back soon. Sooner than you think. June has only thirty days. After I've got the week-ending job well under way, I'll be with you. In the meantime, let us think our thought for the month. It doesn't matter so much what you make, so long as you make it good.

THE END

Home-made ice cream Easy does it!

Velvet-smooth! Creamy-rich!

FRESH BANANA ICE CREAM

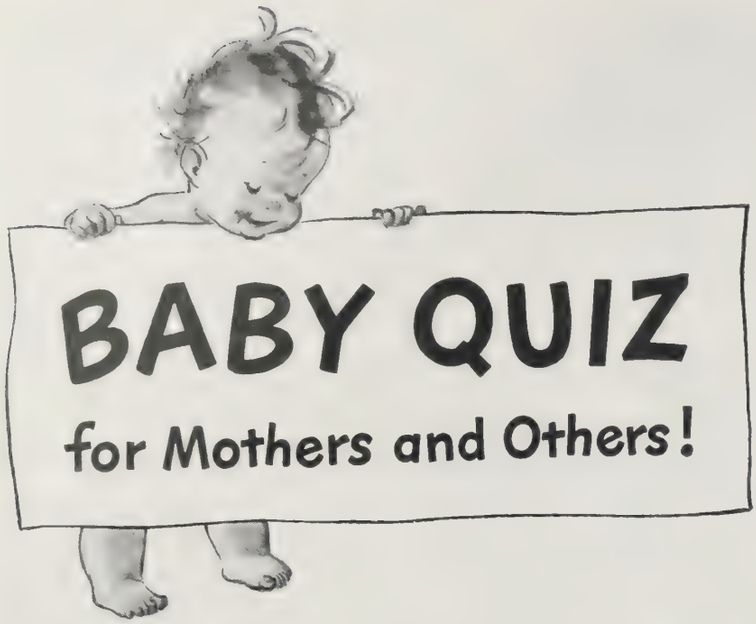
1 can Ten-B-Low
1½ cups water
2 tsps. vanilla
2 well ripened bananas, mashed with 2 tbs. sugar

(a can makes a quart)

1. Set refrigerator control to coldest temperature.
2. Place Ten-B-Low in mixing bowl. Add water, vanilla. Mix thoroughly.
3. Pour into freezing tray and freeze until entire mixture is frozen. You need only add water and flavoring to Ten-B-Low because each can contains all the sugar, heavier-than-whipping cream, milk and egg yolks necessary for extra-rich ice cream.
4. Break up and spoon frozen Ten-B-Low into mixing bowl, whip to a consistency a little softer than creamy mashed potatoes. Stir in bananas.
5. Return to freezing tray and freeze. That's all there is to it — nothing to add but flavoring and the water we've removed! Ten-B-Low is NOT a powder, NOT a so-called "mix", but genuine ice cream in heavy, concentrated form. Get several cans today!

Ten-B-Low
CONCENTRATED REAL ICE CREAM

free 20 delicious recipes, including many unusual and easy-to-make desserts. Just write Sally Ross, Ten-B-Low Co., Dept. B-96, Columbus 16, Ohio.



You'll know it's nourishing*

Put a serving of Corn-Soya with milk under your belt, and see how satisfied you feel! It's crisp, delicious, with real stays-by-you nourishment. You won't get hungry in a hurry. CORN brings you tempting flavor and ready-for-anything energy. SOYA brings you more body-building protein* than in any cereal. And you get whole-grain vitamins and minerals, too. Buy some at your grocer's.

* The protein value of one ounce (2/3 cup) of Corn-Soya with four ounces of milk equals that of one egg with three slices of bacon. It's real nourishment and real economy.

BABY QUIZ
for Mothers and Others!

1. Is it normal for a baby to be cross-eyed?

Yes—most babies can't focus well till they're about three months old. Those three months are important in skin care, too. Many doctors recommend crystal-clear Johnson's Baby Oil for after-bath smooth-overs, to keep baby's skin comfortable—plus Oil applications at every diaper change, to help prevent "urine irritation."

2. Will snuggling "spoil" a baby?

Medical authorities agree a baby needs loving. Snuggling from Pop. "Babying" when mother is caring for him. Frequent sprinkles of satiny-soft Johnson's Baby Powder are part of good care—helping chase chafes and prickles; keeping baby sweet.

3. Does a baby inherit a temper?

Psychologists say no. But your doctor will tell you that what often looks like temper is skin discomfort. Smart mothers keep both Johnson's Baby Oil and Johnson's Baby Powder on the nursery tray—to keep baby protected—comfortable—happy.

Recommended by more doctors—used by more mothers

PHOTO BY H. ARMSTRONG ROBERTS

In most cases, mumps is just what it seems to be—an unsightly infection of glands that needs to be handled with care, but not fear.

Mumps—More to be Watched Than Feared

By DR. HERMAN N. BUNDESEN
President, Chicago Board of Health

UNTIL recent years, mumps was generally regarded as being one of the less common and less harmful of the childhood diseases. True, the child with mumps might have painful swelling of the face for two or three days, but this was usually the extent of the trouble; when the unsightly swelling disappeared, the child was well.

Then, a few years ago, mothers began to hear stories about children whose bouts with mumps were neither so simple nor so harmless. Especially in older children, it was rumored, mumps was likely to have some mysterious effect on the sex glands—even making it impossible for some of the victims to have children of their own when they grew up.

What are the facts? Is mumps a harmless infection, or a sinister threat to normal health and development?

To the many mothers who ask me this question, I reply that mumps is definitely a harmless infection in the vast majority of cases. Once in a great while complications may ensue, sometimes involving the reproductive glands in children who are past the age of puberty at the time the infection occurs. But even in these few cases, I add, recovery without any lasting effect on the functioning of these glands is common. Sterility due to mumps is extremely rare, but the bare chance that it can happen makes it necessary for mothers to treat the disease seriously when it comes.

The first sign of infection is usually the characteristic swelling just in front of the lower part of the ear. One or both sides may be affected, and the swelling may be accompanied, or even preceded for a day or two, by fever. The swelling is caused by inflammation of the parotid gland, which normally furnishes saliva to aid digestion. The location and the function of the gland are such that swallowing may be difficult or painful during the infection. Occasionally, other salivary glands may also become inflamed, adding to the discomfort.

The cause of the infection is a virus that is found in discharges from the mouth and nose of an infected child. Thus, the disease may be spread by direct contact, as droplets of virus-carrying moisture are sprayed into the air when the child coughs or sneezes, or by indirect contact—through handling, eating or drinking anything touched by the sick person. (Continued on Page 159)

GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. The booklets will be sent monthly; be sure to tell us when you want the first booklet. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 25 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1346, sells for 6 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

C'mon Sweetheart, it's YOUR turn to Treat!

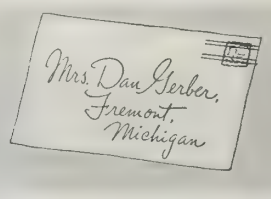
Come on . . . let's have another big smile between spoonfuls.

That's the biggest treat you can give us, because turning out foods that make babies smile is our only business. And year after year millions of babies have grinned over Gerber's Cereals, Vegetables, Fruits and Desserts.

Seven new smile-getters: Strained Sweet Potatoes . . . and six Strained and Junior Meats. Babies, doctors and mothers are all beaming approval of these latest Gerber True-Flavor Foods. The "Sweets"...smooth as golden satin, teeming with Vitamin A; the Meats, prepared from Armour quality beef, veal and liver, rich with essential proteins.

We've been studying what baby likes so long, we can even make his first cereals taste good, and feel so good, too. For that Perfected-Texture of all Gerber's Foods is another plus tots go for from the start.

Gerber's
BABY FOODS
Fremont, Mich.



Babies are our business . . . our only business!

Mothers Club News

Reported by Mrs Dan Gerber
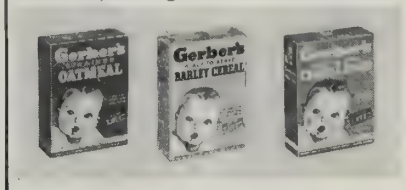
Mother of 5

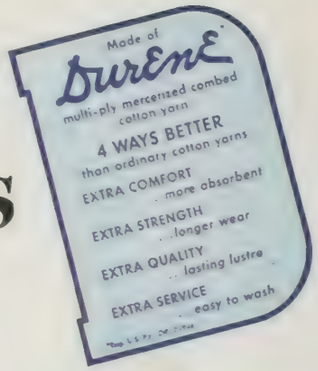
NEW MEMBER: Another mother joins our coast-to-coast ranks. From Connecticut she writes, "I love the Club News. So does our sitter. She says to remind all mothers to always leave a tasty snack for Baby's night watchwoman."

SPEAKING OF FOOD: The next item gives you 45 hints on serving Baby the tempting, well-varied meals your doctor approves.



GRADUATION PRESENT: When Baby graduates from Strained to Junior Foods you pay no more for Gerber's. Same high quality—at the same low price.

NEW SHAMPOO SHADE at Department Stores everywhere. Keeps soap out of baby's eyes and looks so cute. You'll want Daddy to take a snapshot for Grandma.



FREE VITAMINS

Iron and calcium, too, come in Gerber's 3 ready-to-serve Cereals. For free samples write to Gerber's, Department 86-9, Fremont, Michigan.

Accepted by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Assoc.

When you see this on this —buy it!

. . . because every word on that label has been proved true by searching tests—in homes as well as laboratories. Durene is mercerized cotton. Anything bearing the Durene name—socks, undershirts, knit suits, sleepers, polo shirts—is subject to the Durene quality control plan, including regular, impartial laboratory tests. That's why the trade-mark "Durene," on any garment, doesn't just promise you extra value—it delivers it!

(Continued from Page 156)

The fact that mumps is considerably less ommon than other childhood diseases, such s measles, whooping cough and chicken pox, uggests that it is not transmitted as easily. A efinite exposure, such as prolonged indoor lay with an infected child, will almost inariably result in a child's contracting mea- es or whooping cough, for example; but ften this kind of exposure passes harmlessly n the case of mumps. Thus the child who has een exposed to mumps or gets the disease is ot quarantined, though mothers are warned o watch closely for signs of infection when xposure has occurred. It is also a good idea o put the child's teacher on guard, and to ask he doctor for instructions.

The incubation period of mumps—from he date of exposure to the appearance of ymptoms—varies from twelve to twenty-six ays; the average period is eighteen days. We annot say precisely when the communicable eriod begins, but probably it is one or two ays before the symptoms start. This period asts until the swelling of the affected glands as disappeared.

Mumps is typically a cold-weather disease, ccurring most commonly in winter and early pring, less frequently at other seasons of the ear. Incidence is highest among children five o fifteen years old; though infants and ounger children may become infected, their ymptoms are likely to be comparatively ild. Usually an attack of mumps makes the hild immune to further infection, but this is ot always the case; second attacks are by no eans rare. Mothers caring for children with umps should be careful not to expose themelves. Adults are definitely susceptible to he disease and usually are sicker with it han children are. During World War I, for xample, we had an epidemic of mumps mong soldiers living in barracks. Thousands f men became infected, and serious complications occurred in a number of cases.

Ordinarily, mumps runs its course in from en days to two weeks, with three to five days of fever and painful swelling and a week of convalescence. The sick child should be kept in bed as long as the swelling lasts—usually about a week—and guarded against overexertion during convalescence. Many mothers, and a few doctors, believe that failure to keep the older child with mumps absolutely quiet in bed increases the chance of complications involving the sex glands, but there is no direct evidence that this is the case. It is always wise to keep a sick child in bed as long as the infection lasts, but mild activity during the period of convalescence (the doctor will say what and when) will do no harm and will help the child gain back strength.

We do not know just why it is that in some older boys mumps is accompanied by inflammation of the testicles. However, at the very first sign that this has occurred, the doctor should be called at once. In these cases there is likely to be extremely painful swelling of the testicle and severe general fever and prostration. In adolescent girls, the mumps infection may also spread to the reproductive glands, with resulting inflammation of the ovaries, uterus and even the breasts. In either boys or girls, careful medical care is needed as long as this complication lasts. In a few of these children, the genital infection may result in sterility or partial sterility—affecting the ability to have children but not, as is sometimes incorrectly supposed, interfering with other sexual functions.

Other complications that may occur with mumps in rare cases are encephalitis and meningitis, in which the inflammation involves the brain or spinal cord. Headache, pain or stiffness of the back or neck, or extreme lethargy may be an early sign of one of these complications, and, again, the doctor should be consulted without delay. Fortunately, however, these are even less likely to follow than are the genital infections. In most cases mumps is just what it seems to be—an unsightly but harmless infection of glands in the face that needs to be watched but not feared.

THE END

By Munro Leaf

THIS silly-looking creature that is headed for real trouble is a Bike-Showoff. It is never happy on a bicycle unless it is riding in some way that it shouldn't. It loves to zip up too close to other riders, stand on the seat like a monkey, ride on sidewalks and the wrong side of the road. Bike-Showoffs also like to ride "no handies," and one of these days this one is going to land in the hospital with "no handies"—no arms and no legs—if it keeps on being so stupid.

Chix Chat

About your baby and you

By Louise Zabriskie, R.N., Director, Maternity Consultation Service, New York

YOUR FIRST? Then be wise buying clothes for baby. Don't over-supply. New babies grow quickly and soon need clothing in larger sizes. Buy only the essentials so you can get other items as they're needed. And here's a suggestion: wherever CHIX layette essentials are sold you'll find willing and competent guidance in picking your infant's wardrobe.

BABY'S CLOSEST COMPANION for the first year is the diaper! So choose diapers with features for baby's comfort. Best way is to get CHIX Gauze Diapers . . . the softest, most absorbent diapers ever. And they're made with pinked edges . . . no hems to catch soil and irritate tender skin.

PROPER DIAPER WASHING is important to baby's health. Wash diapers in hot water and mild soap — then rinse at least 4 times in tepid water. You'll find CHIX Gauze Diapers easier washing, much quicker drying because they're made of two layers of open weave fabric.

DIAPER DUTY! Mothers are discovering how much less washing drudgery CHIX Cottoned Diaper Liners mean. These soft but sturdy liners go inside of diaper . . . keep baby's bowel movement from touching and staining the diaper. When liners are soiled, just flush them away!

FEEL LIKE A VACATION from diaper washing? CHUX—the 100% Disposable Diaper—is a blessing on rainy or extra busy days. You just throw CHUX away when soiled! Grand during first months when diaper demand is unpredictable. CHUX needs no waterproof pantie!

EASY DOES IT! Keeping baby's crib fresh and clean is a much simpler job with CHIX Crib Pads. They wash easier . . . dry faster than quilted pads because they're made with double layers of knit fabric that lets air circulate freely. Always dry flat and smooth.

Send for a free copy of Louise Zabriskie's helpful booklet—"Common Sense in Dressing Baby"—and free samples of CHIX Cottoned Diaper Liners. Address CHIX, Department LH-3.

This advertisement read and approved by a well-known Professor of Pediatrics.

CHICOPEE MILLS, INC.

47 Worth Street, New York 13, N. Y.

PHOTOS BY HAROLD FOWLER

Carol Janeway, who has made decorating news with her enchanting tiles, produced the fireplace above. The average setting of 64 tiles can be made right over an existing facing.

Room Re-created

A little back porch became this inviting dining space when finished off and gaily decorated.

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK

Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

A ROOM doesn't ever really belong to you until you have re-decorated it yourself. This makes a roomful of used furniture a welcome sight to a decorating-conscious woman. Now she does not have to take the standardized choice of colors and textures offered on new pieces. She can do what we did in the picture: combine all her favorite elements into a room both charming in effect and modest in price.

The room itself looked hopelessly standard. Lining the fireplace wall with bookshelves is the most effective device for imparting atmosphere to a room that we know. As beautiful as a fine original painting, but less expensive, the blue-and-white tile sea-gull fireplace, designed by Carol Janeway, sets the color and the style keynote of the room.

The cottage-type construction with its random plank walls suggested gay flowered chintzes in shades of delphinium, larkspur and violet. The walls were whitewashed to allow just a hint of the pinky brown of the wood to show through. The linen-weave curtains picked up the blues in a plaid for contrast.

IF YOU'RE LIKE JOAN...

Interesting hats and stimulating conversation, red camellias and beach parties . . . these are for you if you're like Joan. And your sterling pattern, of course, will be smart, sophisticated, yet traditionally correct.

You'll find Joan's pattern, and yours, among the much-admired Reed & Barton designs in heavy weight solid silver . . . each created for a distinct personality, a special way of life . . . each a promise of an even brighter future.

Six-piece place setting approximately $22.50 to $28.75, including tax, at leading jewelry stores and silverware departments.

Helpful Hostess Hints: For fascinating, valuable booklet, "How To Be A Successful Hostess," send 10c to Box 990, Dept. L, Taunton, Mass.

POINTED ANTIQUE

GEORGIAN ROSE

FRENCH RENAISSANCE

MARLBOROUGH

BURGUNDY

REED & BARTON

STERLING

Pieces from the open-stock Travis Court Group

SOMETHING NEW...

Something Old

Here's a new idea—new, livable furniture designed around old, lovable lines. It's the open-stock Travis Court Group, by Drexel—more than fifty graceful yet compact pieces for you to choose from, whether you're starting out, doing over, or filling in. Look at the serene lines of that table! Picture the bow-fronted breakfront with its curved glass door displaying your best china. And notice the richness of the pierced ladder-back chairs. . . . You can use most Travis Court pieces anywhere in your home. You can start with a little now, add more later.

See moderately priced Travis Court by Drexel in leading furniture and department stores. Look for the "by Drexel" brandmark—your proof of fine craftsmanship.

Write today for booklets: "Travis Court"—full color—10c in coin; "Traditional"—10c in coin; "Precedent"—two booklets in full color illustrating Drexel's contemporary furniture—25c in coin. Address: 272 Huffman Road, Drexel, N. C.

by Drexel

Drexel FURNITURE COMPANY

DREXEL, NORTH CAROLINA

WORLD'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF BEDROOM AND DINING ROOM FURNITURE

FREEZE IT!

(Continued from Page 149)

flower; Lima beans with cut corn and peas and string beans; and we had a hard time telling which we liked better. You may find other medleys that you like even more. And did you know that if you wash spinach in warm water, it will shed its sand faster? Or that if you carefully drain and dry small vegetables, they will cook faster and more uniformly because they won't freeze in a solid block? Well, now you know.

PREPARING FRUITS

As for fruits, most of them are best packed with sugar or sirup to preserve their color and flavor. Prepare them in summer to lighten up a heavy winter diet. Add zest to a December salad or a January compote with a few raspberries, strawberries or melon balls. Leave the berries whole, scoop out perfect melon balls, and do them up in small containers with sirup, each kind separately. Or try a mélange of fruits that ripen together. You can have your pie cherries as tart as you please when you own a freezer. One package, one pie; add sugar to taste. Peaches and apricots, that turn brown before you turn around, can be frozen in all their pristine beauty. Dip them first in boiling water to loosen the skins, then cool and peel and slice into cold citric-acid solution. Pack with a sirup to which you've added ascorbic acid (vitamin C); or use a ready-made mixture. Citric and ascorbic acids are white powders sold at drugstores and wherever freezer supplies are stocked.

READY-PREPARED FOOD

Cooking double is little trouble, and what you don't eat right off can be stashed away in the freezer. For stashing away, however, be sure you don't cook your provender too long. It will be heated again. And the faster you cool it and freeze it, the better it will taste. Bread and rolls can be frozen after they are baked or as raw dough shaped for the pans; but if they're the yeast kind, it's simpler to bake them first, then freeze. Pies frozen in metal-rimmed paper plates keep your regular pie plates in circulation; and don't cut vent holes in their top crusts till you're ready to bake them, if you want them to turn out extra fresh and juicy.

Frozen salads, straight from the refrigerator tray and into the freezer, are among painless party foods. If you've added nuts, though, to their base of cream or cheese or mayonnaise, freeze them extra fast or else the nuts will soften and discolor the salad. Tube-shaped paper containers are fine for these because you can peel them off and cut salads into round slices. Or you can freeze them in small paper cups and then pack them in moisture-tight containers. Unwrap and peel, and you have molded shapes.

Cream puffs filled with ice cream are another prefabricated dessert. Thoroughly chilled before filling and packed right, they'll keep fresh for several weeks. Add a sauce, and there you are. Or why not freeze the makings of a baked Alaska? If you've hung back from attempting this super-de-luxe dessert for fear the ice cream would melt under the browned meringue, just reflect that ice cream out of zero storage will keep its figure even as the topping browns.

Sandwiches, open or shut, freeze like a charm, particularly those made with cheese or ground, chopped or sliced meat, fish or poultry, peanut butter or marmalade. To keep these from going soggy, spread the bread next the filling with butter, margarine or peanut butter. And when it comes to frozen sauces and gravies, make them with as little fat as possible; then they won't be so likely to separate when they're reheated.

Note: Some foods you won't want to freeze, for they aren't good eating afterward. Among these are tomatoes cooked or fresh, potatoes raw or any way but French-fried, cooked egg white, cooked salad dressing, fresh salad vegetables and greens, and sandwich fillings of the same.

Under normal conditions, most food can be kept fresh in a freezer nine to twelve months, excepting pork (six months), highly seasoned mixtures like sausage (three months), and prepared foods (two to three months). In any case, don't hoard your frozen assets. Strawberries will ripen again next June, and there will be fryers running around on two feet.

THAWING AND COOKING

For meat, the main recommendation is to thaw gradually, if possible, to keep it juicy. Allow about two hours a pound at room temperature, and four or five hours a pound in the refrigerator, the best method. But in an emergency, you can use your electric fan for quicker results if you keep the meat in its freezer wrapping to prevent leakage of juices and set it on a rack so that all sides thaw equally.

Meat and fish can be broiled when they're only partly thawed if you place them far enough from the heat to prevent their overbrowning outside while they're still raw inside. But thaw meat or fish completely if it is to be crumbed or floured, else the coating won't stick. Frozen roasts of meat and poultry are naturals for a range with an automatic timer. They can thaw out in the oven before the heat goes on, without danger of spoiling. For all meat and fish and poultry, allow proportionately longer cooking time if they're still partly frozen.

Vegetables don't need thawing, with two exceptions to prove the rule—corn on the cob and asparagus. Thaw these out, or else you'll freeze your teeth on an icy cob and reduce your asparagus to a mush. Small vegetables, frozen in a solid cake, can be rapped smartly on a table to break the block into pieces, and will thus cook more uniformly.

Frozen vegetables cook faster than fresh ones. To keep them from losing their food value, which is high, cook them in covered vessels with only a little water, and let the steam do the work.

Fruits to be eaten raw are most delicious when they're only partly thawed—still frosty. Left in the container, as it should be, a pound of fruit will thaw sufficiently in the refrigerator in six to eight hours, at room temperature in two to three hours, and under cool running water in about half an hour. You'll probably eat it all; but if you don't, cook it briefly in its own sirup and store it in the refrigerator. It won't be good refrozen.

Cooked Foods, like chicken à la king, shrimp Creole, lobster Newburg, stew, casserole dishes and chicken pie, are quickies for reheating. But don't try to rush them too fast, and stir them to heat them evenly.

If frozen bread is to be eaten warm, thaw it and heat it in one fell swoop in the oven.

(Continued on Page 164)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Daisy

By Marion Lineaweaver

He loves me, he loves me not.
The sky is fair
And the sun is hot.
His eyes are blue as forget-me-not.

Pinch the pollen and toss it up
Into the wind above me.
His hair is bright as a buttercup.
How long will he love me?

Count the grains and throw them away,
Spring is adolescence.
His mouth is warm as a summer day,
And time is of the essence.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Zenith Challenges Any Comparison

WITH THIS

The Most Sensitive FM Radio Ever Built

FOR THE PUBLIC

ONLY ZENITH GIVES YOU THIS

Most Sensitive Performance
Superb reception even on weak signals.

Longer Distance
Because of high sensitivity, brings in stations in fringe areas others miss.

No Interference
No whistles, no overlap, no cross-talk, no background hiss.

No Static
Even in the worst storms. Only rich, glorious tone.

No Special Antenna
With Zenith's patented Power-Line Antenna, just plug in and play.

Whatever radio you own—whatever radio you have ever heard—Zenith* now asks you to listen to a new marvel of Radionic* science.

This all-new Zenith Model is the climax of years of acknowledged leadership in genuine Zenith-Armstrong FM—that hundreds of thousands now know as true FM—the FM radio that leading FM stations over the nation rely upon to monitor and test their own broadcasts—truly the FM of the Experts!

So we say—go to your Zenith dealer and compare! Be prepared to hear the most sensitive FM receiver you have ever listened to—a genuine Zenith-Armstrong receiver at a sensationally low price.

ZENITH
•LONG DISTANCE• RADIO and TELEVISION
THE ROYALTY OF RADIO

Over 30 Years of "Know-How" in Radionics Exclusively
ZENITH RADIO CORPORATION, CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS *®
Also Makers of America's Finest Hearing Aids

Look what you're missing if you don't have an FM radio!

★ Your favorite regular network programs—free from static and interference, even in the worst storms!

★ Plus many network shows which crowded AM stations don't bring you in some areas, but FM stations do!

★ Special sports broadcasts and other events not carried by AM stations!

★ Beautiful recordings and transcriptions with static-free tone beauty and high fidelity not possible on AM!

LOOK FOR

Organdie Curtains

WITH THE FAMOUS

SAYLERIZED PERMANENT FINISH®

This label assures you of beautiful, billowy white curtains with a crisp freshness that will last through damp weather and countless washings.

The Saylerized* process minimizes lint and fuzz . . . imparts soil resistance that assures less laundering.

This label appears on the curtains of many of the foremost manufacturers.

No Starch Required!

(Also on cotton wash fabrics and handkerchiefs)

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

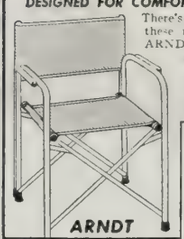
2 NEW "BABY'S TREASURES"

Dr. Claffin's Teether and Feeder

MOLDED OF NYLON

... CAN BE STERILIZED

Scientifically designed! Teether is safe . . . easy to grasp . . . cannot be swallowed; helps reduce gum distress. Feeder fits baby's hand, spoon bowl—shaped to avoid back-side spilling—is at correct angle to simplify self-feeding. Set comes in clear-plastic reusable gift box.



$1.00

If unavailable locally, order direct . . .

Manufactured by Federal Tool Corp., Chicago 45, U. S. A.

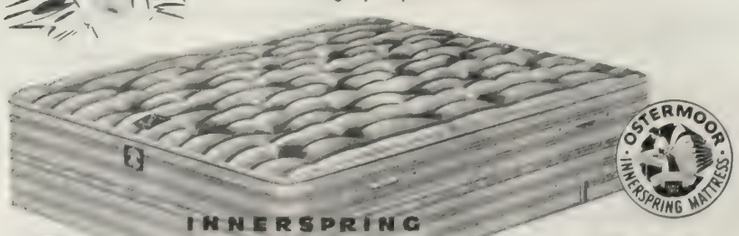
SEAT-ISFACTION!

DESIGNED FOR COMFORT AND COMPACT UTILITY!

There's spacious relaxation for you in these non-tipping, body-proportioned ARNDT chairs. Sturdy, rust-resistant, satinized aluminum-tube frame keeps cool in sun! Rubber feet prevent marring or scratching of floors. Replaceable seat and back made of durable vat-dyed duck in choice of blue, green, red or tangerine; reinforced with white piping. Fold it when not in use. Write for FREE catalog and dealer's name or order direct. Only $14.50 postpaid.

ARNDT

KOMFO-FOLD DECK CHAIR



GET FREE FOLDER

Arndt Metalcraft Corp., P. O. Box 909-M Trenton 5, N. J.

Good mornings start with good nights...

...and sleep-inviting relaxation starts with the lullaby comfort of an Ostermoor. Quality-built with the craftsmanship you rightly expect of its famous name.

INNERSPRING

OSTERMOOR

AMERICA'S QUALITY MATTRESS FOR NEARLY 100 YEARS

Dealers in Principal Cities—or write OSTERMOOR & CO., Chicago 16, Ill., or Bridgeport, Conn.

(Continued from Page 162)

But unless you are sure of your wrappings, it's well to remove them, since some leave a telltale flavor, and others melt at oven heat.

Stirring gravies and sauces during reheating usually restores their texture if they separate, but if stirring fails, beat them with a rotary beater or an electric mixer.

WHEN IT'S TIME TO DEFROST

A freezer or freezer compartment of a refrigerator should be defrosted when the inside walls get coated thick enough to interfere with its utility—usually every four to six months. Try to choose a time when your frozen-food supply is low, and put the packages in the refrigerator if you have room. Otherwise wrap them well in paper while you scrape away the frost, using a wooden paddle or spoon or a stiff brush. For regular defrosting, leave the current on and the freezer will be ready for refilling as soon as the scraping chore is finished. Trays or heavy paper in the bottom of the compartment will catch the falling snow; and a final pickup with a damp cloth or sponge is in order.

IN EMERGENCIES

If the power goes off, don't open your freezer whatever you do. Cover it up with a blanket. Well-stocked, unopened and blanketed like an old cab horse, it should keep its contents frozen as long as three days; though naturally, if it's nearly empty, it will warm up faster. In such a crisis, find out from your power company how long the current will be off. If the indications are for long, as after a blizzard or a hurricane, then pack your freezer with dry ice or call your local locker plant to find if it has room for your orphans of the storm. Some freezer manufacturers issue insurance policies to pay for food losses due to mechanical failure. And you can buy alarm systems to warn you when your freezer's temperature is going up.

SALVATION ARMY CARE

(Continued from Page 23)

The case worker, a court employee, had found Marjorie working in a Pittsburgh hospital laundry. Most girls at Booth Memorial home are pitifully young. Of the 100,000 unwed mothers registered annually in this country, nearly 50 per cent are 19 or under.

Earnestly Marjorie said, "I want my baby adopted, so he'll have some kind of a chance. I don't want him in juvenile court when he's six months old. I don't want my baby to be like me." Pressed for thoughts about her own life, she said only, "I'd like to be able to finish high school sometime."

This parade of disillusioned youth is hard on even a social worker like Major Kimball, with 25 years' experience. "It isn't always easy to be objective," she says. She is a tall, slim woman with iron-gray hair and pink-and-white skin. She has doelike eyes. Her rimless glasses are stern, but they are the only thing about her that is.

Besides a decent place to live and a complete, modern medical program, the Booth Memorial home offers teaching and guidance to the girls who come there. Major Kimball, who holds a master's degree in social work, co-operates with social workers assigned to girls by such agencies as the Children's Aid Society, Family Welfare Society and Children's Service Bureau.

Last year 31 of the girls decided to keep their babies; two had relatives who took charge; there were 12 whose children were adopted directly from the home. Thirty-one sent their babies to boarding homes—12 later planning adoption through social agencies.

The same night that Betsy's baby was born, a new girl was brought to the home by her mother. The girl carried a small cardboard suitcase which contained all her belongings. The mother's grip on her daughter's arm was strong as she led her across the lawn where roses and daffodils bloom, inside and up the broad oaken staircase to the Major's rooms. There Eva, 16, listened to her mother, telling the story with words she couldn't stop—spewing from a bitter mouth.

your hair can be Much More Colorful and Glamorous

Millions of beauty-wise women now USE

NOREEN

SUPER COLOR RINSE

The rinse that really blends in gray, beautifies and glorifies all shades of hair with abundant temporary COLOR...Color that looks so natural.

If your hair is dull, drab, graying or discolored, try NOREEN Super Color Rinse. NOREEN will enhance the natural color of your hair by adding beautiful, glamorizing shades of gold, bronze red, deeper brown gold, coppery brown, deep dark brown, or lustrous black.

NOREEN lusterizes gray hair, takes out yellow, and adds cool tones of steel gray or smoke gray...makes pure white hair shine like platinum.

NOREEN amazingly blends in to the natural shade the unwanted gray in graying hair.

We sincerely believe that NOREEN will really do what you have always wanted a temporary hair rinse to do...provide generous color and lustre...prevent tangles and leave the hair delightfully fresh, clean and manageable.

Try Noreen Today... as a thrilling but harmless experiment. NOREEN is so easy to rinse in and wash out. You'll find at least one of NOREEN'S 14 shades perfect for your hair. Packed in dainty capsules for convenient use at home. 25c and 50c sizes.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

At Leading Cosmetic Counters or Beauty Salons...Everywhere

NOREEN Dist., 450 Lincoln St., Denver 9, Colo.

FOR THE GIRL WITH A SMALL BUST

PATENTED

Lucille Garden SMALL BUST BRA*

NO PADS • NO PUFFS*

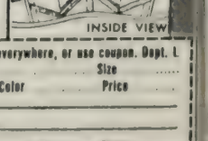
NO "FOOLERS" *TRADE MARK

The patented adjustment inside the bra makes your own bust fuller.

- LOW NECKLINE†
- STRAPLESS
- REGULAR NECKLINE

All in . . .

Broadcloth . . $2.50



Nylon $3.00

In Tearose and white

†Also in Black Nylon

'AA' cup for very small bust.
'A' cup for small bust.
'B' cup for average bust.
(If you do not fill out an 'A' cup order an 'AA')

Sizes 30, 32, 34, 36

INSIDE VIEW

At stores everywhere, or use coupon. Dept. L

Style ..... Size .....

Cup ..... Color ..... Price .....

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

GARDEN FOUNDATIONS, INC. 45 White St., N. Y. 13

Apple Blossom

The pristine beauty of an April orchard, pink-and-white with dainty blooms, is exquisitely reproduced in this newest Roseville creation . . . Apple Blossom. Rustic twig handles enhance its charm, with gorgeous fresh colors of Aqua Blue, Coral and Apple Green borrowed from Nature herself. Forty-five lovely shapes. Featured at good stores.

"How to Decorate with Art Pottery." 24 pages, illustrating interesting pottery settings. Enclose 10c with your request. ROSEVILLE POTTERY, INC. Dept. L-69, Zanesville, O.

created by

Roseville

New underfoot Luxury

LONGER RUG AND CARPET WEAR

★ Makes rugs and carpeting look and feel deeper, handsomer, more expensive.

★ Sponge rubber resilience built in for life.

★ Cuts to fit from rolls, 36 or 53 inches wide. Standard ¼" and 3/16" thicknesses.

Rugs won't creep or slide with U. S. Carpet Cushion. It won't mat or pack. It's non-allergic, moth- and vermin-proof, free of dust and lint. Installation is simple, easily taped.

RECOMMENDED FOR RADIANT HEAT INSTALLATIONS

U.S. carpet Cushion

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
Mishawaka, Indiana

"The shock was so terrible. I cried and cried and I feel a million years old. That any daughter of mine —— Her baby is due in two months and she didn't tell me until last week. I thought she was getting fat. I always made her go to church and I never let her out at night. How did I know she would start sneaking out? I can't understand how a girl would want anything to do with men anyhow. Believe me, with seven kids and a husband always drinking ——

"The Children's Aid Society said to bring her here and they assigned a case worker. That worker is no good, let me tell you. The very idea—why, that woman said I wasn't maybe a good mother!"

When Eva's mother left she did not kiss her daughter good-by nor ask what care would be given her. Eva sat on the edge of a chair, plainly frightened, as Major Kimball read the case worker's report. The report said Eva probably would be better off if she did not go home after her baby's birth. It added that the girl seemed to want someone to adopt her baby, seemed also to need spiritual guidance such as the Salvation Army offers through chapel services and classes relating the Bible to modern living.

Fortunately not all mothers are like Eva's. A few days later the home had another visitor. She is a poor woman and she lives in a distant part of the state. She had not been able to make the trip to see her daughter, Polly, sooner.

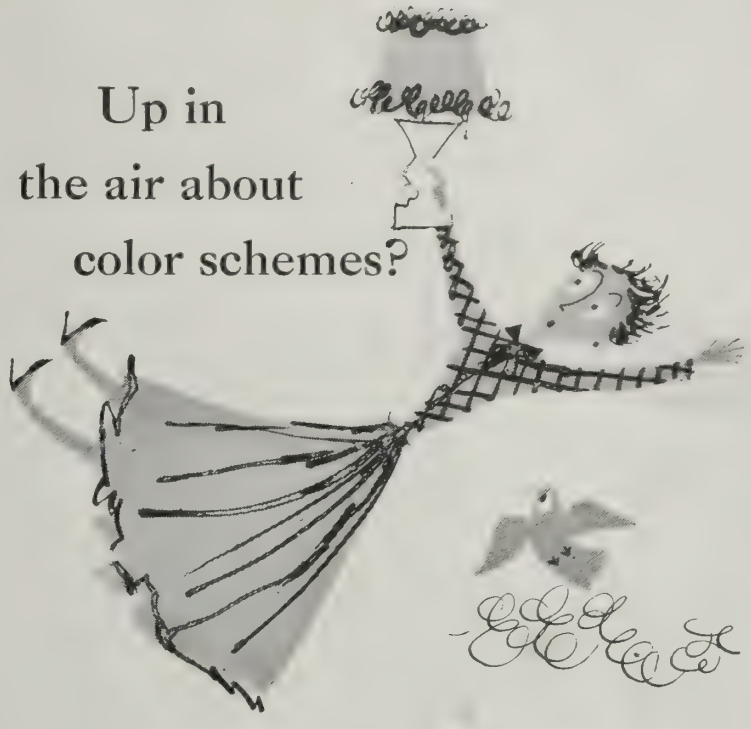
Polly's mother talked for more than an hour with Major Kimball, wept a little. "I know now I wasn't a good mother," she admitted. "Polly ran away when she was fifteen. We were wrong. We said she was wild and bad and we let the court send her to the State

It's a funny thing about being in love, that the moment a man begins to get serious, he begins to get foolish. —HELEN ROWLAND.

Training School and then to a work home. We're moving to the West Coast soon. I'm young. If Polly wants to keep her baby, in a new town I could say it was mine. Or maybe Polly's too much a kid yet. I just don't know."

Polly herself doesn't know yet either.

"All the work I do here," she told her mother, "is in the morning. I dust four rooms."



She took her mother into the big kitchen, better equipped than any she had ever seen. The green-tinted dining hall was spick-and-span. The hospital wing impressed her with its two nurseries where there are six bassinets for newborn babies and thirteen cribs where mothers can care for their own children. The ward with seven beds is antiseptically clean, the obstetrical equipment new. On the second floor are eight bedrooms to which the girls are assigned, four to the room. In the basement there is a laundry with automatic washing machines, a recreation room, and a well-stocked library with good lights for reading—more comfort and convenience than Polly's mother ever had seen.

The father of Polly's unborn child, a college student and son of the foreman in the steel mill where the girl's father works, had paid the $150 charged for out-of-county residents at the Booth home. Girls from Allegheny County pay $125, though the cost to the home for care and medical service runs to over $500, since most of the girls are there almost three months.

Polly, showing her mother about, also had a Red Cross cooking certificate to display. Every other Thursday she had attended a cooking class taught by a local volunteer. Her baby's layette was complete, too, paid for by the Salvation Army Junior Auxiliary. There is a sewing class each Thursday at the Booth home, taught by four local women, and knitting and crocheting classes on Fridays, taught by a Salvation Army officer, assisted also by local women.

Polly had gifts for her mother. In the Saturday-night ceramics class she had made a brightly tinted ash tray and a pair of match-

Up in the air about color schemes?

Learn the down-to-earth facts in "Colorama," the color-idea book by Clara Dudley, Alexander Smith's color-consultant. For your copy, send 25¢ to Clara Dudley, Alexander Smith & Sons Carpet Co., Dept. LH-7, 285 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. 16.

Alexander Smith

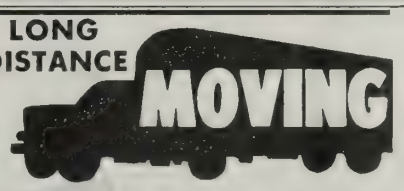
FLOOR-PLAN RUGS 1845 BROADLOOM CARPETS

HOW TO MAKE YOUR DREAM ROOM COME TRUE!

KATHLEEN WHITE . . . Interior Decorating Consultant to Harvard of Cleveland, offers scores of bright ideas in a new 20 page illustrated booklet. It's "Decorating Magic"—when you use the all-metal adjustable . . .

HARVARD FRAMES for HOLLYWOOD BEDS

Outstanding features include recessed legs, snug fit and casters. For use with or without a headboard. Fits any coil or box spring. Any size available for HOLLYWOOD BEDS.



SEND 10c IN COIN FOR YOUR COPY OF "DECORATING MAGIC"

Harvard OF CLEVELAND
6201 WOODLAND DEPT. 9 CLEVELAND, OHIO

At Your Furniture or Department Store

LONG DISTANCE MOVING

Over 500 agents. See classified phone book for agent near you.

Call us for quick, safe moving to any part of the nation. Trained personnel. Modern vans! Get our estimate on packing, moving and storage.

North American VAN LINES, Inc.
General Offices: FORT WAYNE, IND.

RESET LOOSE HANDLES with PLASTIC WOOD

EASY! No skill required. Handles like putty . . . and hardens into wood.

A CELLULOSE FIBRE FILLER ®

IN CANS OR TUBES

ADHERES TO METAL OR WOOD

SMART WOMEN KNOW . . . SMARTEST WOMEN WEAR

Smart-form IT'S CUSTOM FITTED

See ad on page 172

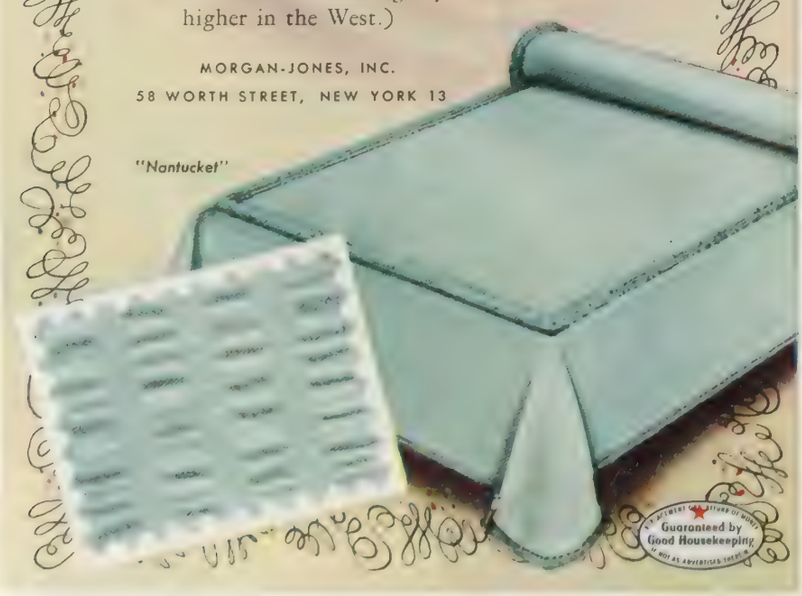
Be sure it's a DAZEY

Form a DAZEY CHAIN of kitchen products
• CAN OPENER • KNIFE SHARPENER
• JUICER • ICE CRUSHER • BLEND-R-MIX
• NUT CRACKER • FAMOUS DAZEY CHURNS

DAZEY CORPORATION ST. LOUIS 7, MISSOURI

Two beautiful bedspreads for Summer

. . . and all year 'round



Morgan-Jones TRADE MARK

"Heiress"

Top honors go to Morgan-Jones' "Heiress" . . . the magnificent supersize bedspread that touches the floor. Richly covered with more than 16,000 petite tufts—all woven-in! Antique or bleached-white, striking decorator colors, or soft crystal pastels. Yet only about $10.50. Below, feast your eyes on the "Nantucket" bedspread . . . Morgan-Jones' own new crinkly cotton with loop decoration. Close-up shows texture of material (actual size). The bedspread comes in bleached white and crystal pastels; and is only about $8. (In better stores coast-to-coast. Prices slightly higher in the West.)

MORGAN-JONES, INC.
58 WORTH STREET, NEW YORK 13

"Nantucket"

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

ing candlesticks. The instructor is ceramics supervisor for the department store from which the home buys the special clay.

Polly's health is better than it has ever been. Once a week there is a clinic at the home, with a volunteer obstetrician on hand. A volunteer general practitioner is available on call. Girls are advised on nutrition and their progress is carefully checked. A volunteer pediatrician will care for Polly's baby after its birth. The girl has two new fillings in her teeth, done in the office of a local dentist, also a volunteer.

Last year the Army's Junior Auxiliary donated a movie projector and now the girls see sound films at least once a week. Interested friends and a radio company gave a television set which stands in the dining room. A lawyer's secretary contributes her Saturday afternoons, sometimes brings refreshments for the girls, often takes two or three to the main section of Pittsburgh to shop or see a show. Every month there is a birthday party with refreshments, and a community group gives a party once a month too.

It is always annoying to discover that other people are quite as superior to you as you are superior to them.
—ELLEN T. FOWLER.

At least one evening a week Major Kimball speaks to a church group or community club. She interprets the work of the home, tells stories of the girls but never their names, for only the major and the bookkeeper ever know these. "Such talks are a good way to inform the public of our work," the major claims. "Afterward people often come to me and offer to give garments or volunteer their services. Some want to give money. But the main thing is to make people understand that a girl needs a chance to readjust and to acquire a feeling of security. This understanding is essential if she is to be a useful member of society."

Last year the operating expenses of Booth Memorial home totaled $39,995.10 and the girls paid only $10,377.21. There were some who could afford nothing at all. The Salvation Army in Pittsburgh provided $30,462.35 from its independent city-wide fund drive. There were trust funds available from regional headquarters in New York for capital expenditures. There were gifts of clothing and food amounting to almost $700.

Major Kimball and four of her staff are Salvation Army officers and, as such, have dedicated their lives to their work. The major receives only $976.50 a year. Altogether, the staff salaries total $4,569.50.

Her biggest job, the major feels, is helping the girls to come to the right decision about their futures. That is why she does not permit a person or an agency to persuade a girl to sign adoption papers until after she has seen her child and decided there is no way for her to keep him properly. At the Booth home when a girl wants to keep her child the major and her staff do everything to make this possible.

Late in the afternoon of the day Polly's mother visited the home, Ann, who is 22, came to say good-by. She was taking her baby, a fine boy, to a boarding home. She would arrange later to keep him with her. Her parents, Mississippi farmers, didn't know she had the baby. Now she was leaving, going back to the home where she had been employed as a maid before her pregnancy.

The major told Ann something all girls hear when they leave. "Come back and see us any time you feel we can help you. I think you know by now we're your friends."

The two women walked down the long corridor as girls gathered at the foot of the big staircase, smiling, wishing Ann luck. At the door she turned, her baby in her arms, bundled up in a blue shawl his mother had knit.

"Major, I'm afraid," she said.

"It's going to be all right." The major's voice was reassuring. "I know it is. You call us if there's anything going wrong."

Ann stepped into a car where a woman friend waited, and waved through the window before she started the ride back down the hill, back into the world again. THE END

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Vogue Patterns on Pages 58, 59.

Vogue Design No. 6792. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. Size 16 (34) requires 4⅜ yards of 35-inch material. 60¢.

Vogue Design No. 6778. "Easy-to-Make" suit-dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 40. Size 16 (34) requires 4⅞ yards of 35-inch material. 75¢.

Junior Vogue Design No. 3286. One-piece dress (slip or camisole included in the pattern); 9 to 15, 29½ to 33. Size 13 (31½) requires 5⅞ yards of 35-inch material, ⅝ yards of 35-inch material for camisole, and ⅞ yards of 35-inch material for collar. 75¢.

Vogue Design No. 6781. "Easy-to-Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. Size 16 (34) requires 4⅛ yards of 35-inch material, and 1⅛ yards of 35-inch material for collar and cuffs. 60¢.

Vogue Design No. 9334. (To match dress No. 6781) Gloves, mitts and mittens; 6 to 7½. 35¢.

Vogue Design No. S-4988. One-piece dress and jacket; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. Size 16 (34) requires 2⅛ yards of 35-inch material for jacket, 3⅛ yards of 35-inch material for dress. $1.00.

Vogue Design No. 6767. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 40. Size 16 (34) requires 4⅛ yards of 35-inch material. 60¢.

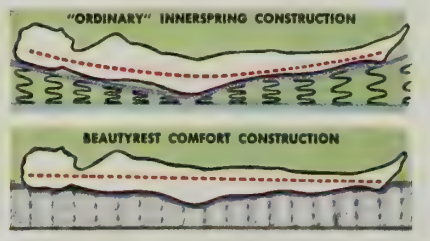
6792 6778 3286

6781 S-4988 6767

BEAUTYREST... THE MATTRESS BUY OF THE YEAR!

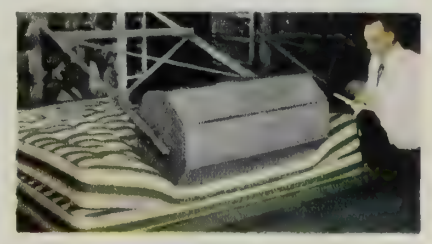
1½¢ A NIGHT! 1½¢ A NIGHT! 1½¢ A NIGHT!

Here's a good way to check up on mattress values, even before you put your money down!



Ask a Beautyrest owner. There're probably several among your friends. You'll discover why it's America's favorite mattress—the best value at any price!

Real luxury rest for only 1½¢ a night. Figure it out. $59.50 is the price. And Beautyrest is guaranteed for 10 years. That comes out to only 1½¢ a night!



Get this great mattress value . . . start enjoying Beautyrest luxury tonight!

1. Glass-of-water test proves Beautyrest is unique—Beautyrest is better! See how each of its 837 coil springs is individually pocketed. Springs act on their own—springs can't force each other down! Result: Just pure comfort!

2. Here's the big difference between Beautyrest comfort construction and "ordinary" mattress construction. "Ordinary" mattress springs are tied together, pull each other down, cause sag! But Beautyrest springs are not tied together—can't sag.

3. Twice as durable as the next best mattress tested in United States Testing Co. Laboratories. In "torture" test above, a 275-lb. roller pounds and squashes Beautyrest 740,744 more times than any other mattress tested!

P.S. Edges stay firm for the life of the mattress! Pre-built border and no-sag edges protect smartly tailored looks of your Beautyrest. Coils are built in to border's edge, giving you mid-mattress comfort right out to the edges. 8 ventilators keep it fresh and clean inside!

Simmons Interviews a Twelve-year Beautyrest Owner!

Twelve years ago, Mrs. Clair Yates of Glen Ridge, N. J. bought a Beautyrest. We wanted to find out how Beautyrest stands up in actual use after twelve years. So we asked Mrs. Yates.

SIMMONS: We guaranteed you years and years of luxury rest with your Beautyrest. Did Beautyrest fully live up to the promise?

MRS. YATES: My Beautyrest is still as comfortable as the first day I bought it!

SIMMONS: Did Beautyrest pre-built borders and no-sag edges hold up all these years?

MRS. YATES: Well, just look at my Beautyrest. Not a sag or lump anywhere!

SIMMONS: How often do you have to turn your Beautyrest?

MRS. YATES: Only occasionally. Three or four times a year at most!

SIMMONS: Would you recommend Beautyrest to your friends?

MRS. YATES: I have—often! In my opinion, Beautyrest is the best mattress you can buy!

From us to you: Start your first ten years of Beautyrest luxury rest soon.

Only SIMMONS makes BEAUTYREST*

ALSO FROM THE HOUSE OF SIMMONS—the greatest name in bedding: Hide-A-Bed—the sofa that doubles as an "extra bedroom." Electronic Blanket—a new defense against colds. Deepsleep mattress—a fine Simmons mattress at a lower price. Babybeauty crib mattress—made to doctors' specifications. Ace Spring—the modern spring for the modern mattress.

*TRADE-MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. COPR. 1949 BY SIMMONS CO., MDSE. MART, CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN BEAUTY...

Summer Wardrobe

top is knitted ribbon, $14.95; tie-skirt rayon linen, $8.95. By Toni Owen.

Navy-blue organza, bordered with piqué, for dancing. $49.95.

BY ANN HAGERTY

BARBARA TANNER, twenty-one-year-old JOURNAL Cover Girl from Lansing, Michigan, is the first of our Undiscovered American Beauty series, and is featured on this month's cover. Just out of Michigan State College, she's going to take time off to play and live with her family this summer. Dates with her best beau, Bob, will top her list of social events; they'll go outdoor dancing at Eastwood Gardens, drive to Leamington, Canada, from time to time, to spend the day and swim. As with any pretty girl in any American town or city block, pretty clothes are important in her life. The wardrobe on this page fills her needs, costs around $105. It includes an organza evening dress, cotton skirts and tops for week-end changes, a crisp cotton suit for town and church on Sunday.

Shirred jersey weskit, cotton skirt, $16.00.

BY STEPHANIE KORET

Checked-cotton suit, $14.95; straw bag.

59¢—43¢
25¢ and 10¢

FRESH
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
CREAM DEODORANT
STOPS PERSPIRATION

use FRESH and stay fresher

try the test below

Have you ever wondered if you are as lovely as you could be—are you completely sure of your charm? Your deodorant can be the difference . . . and you will never know how lovely you can be until you use FRESH.

FRESH is so completely effective, yet so easy and pleasant to use . . . Different from any deodorant you have ever tried. Prove this to yourself with the free jar of creamy, smooth FRESH we will send you.

Test it. Write to FRESH, Chrysler Building, New York, for your free jar.

MEET A QUAKER FAMILY

(Continued from Page 146)

from an inner "conviction" in the person who wishes to join. With the Hunts, this process took time.

"It wasn't a case of 'Bang! Hallelujah! I'm converted,'" says Mary. "It was a very gradual thing." And John explains, "We didn't change all of a sudden and become Friends. But we found in the Friends and their way of life what we had been searching for for a long, long time."

Even after the Hunts were "convinced," the actual joining was not easy. John chuckles a little when he recalls the difficulties they encountered.

"Friends are funny that way," he says. "They are warm and kind, but they don't just say 'Come on in' to anyone. They want to be sure it isn't just a whim, or sudden impulse. The first persons we mentioned our feelings to were Douglas and Dorothy Steere, who were close friends of ours. Douglas made clear what we would have to go through, and we were scared. In fact, it took us two years to get up our courage and ask for admission."

What the Hunts did (and this applies to all convinced Quakers) was to write a letter setting forth their reasons for wishing to join. The letter was read in the Monthly Meeting to which it was addressed, and discussed by everyone present. Then a committee (one man and one woman) was appointed to call on the Hunts, and test their sincerity in a face-to-face talk. They reported back to the Meeting, and the Hunts were then formally admitted. This procedure took about two months. Although they took so long to write it, the Hunts' letter of application was short and simple:

"Dear Friends: For many months Mary and I have been sure that we would like to be numbered as one of the family of Friends. We have been hesitant only because we were not sure that we could live up to the expectations of such a membership. Of this we are still not sure, but would like to join you as honest seekers after 'the way.'

"Of these things we are convinced:

"That the worship in silence is far more enriching than the traditional forms of liturgy to which we have been accustomed.

"That the application of practical Christian service in local and world communities through the Friends Service Committee is an indication of a living religion.

"That no Christian organization is fully worthy of the name unless, like the Friends, they apply the teachings of Jesus in a concrete way to the everyday business of living in the home, in business, in education and at play.

"That war, under any circumstances, is an unnecessary blight in the life of the human race and that we will not voluntarily support it in any way.

"Because of these convictions we would like to be admitted to the Society with the hope that we may grow in worthiness of its principles. In sincerity,

"JOHN L. HUNT. MARY LEA HUNT."

Quakers have no formal creed or dogma; they hold, as one authority has said, "that all written records are subordinate to the direct revelation of God to every seeking soul." But they do have a traditional body of beliefs which they call "testimonies." One of these is the well-known "peace testimony," which has led most Quakers to pacifism, and a refusal to bear arms in either peace or war. Even this is not rigidly adhered to: there were individual Quakers who fought in the recent war, and in every American war. The famous Marine Corps general, Smedley Darlington Butler, was a Chester County Quaker who grew up not far from where the Hunts live. This is a problem which is left to each member's conscience, and if a Quaker decides to serve his country by fighting, he is rarely disciplined or expelled from the Society.

THE SUITOR'S VISIT

By TER BORCH

THE easel picture, the kind of picture we are accustomed to hang in our homes, flourished in the seventeenth century, especially in Protestant Holland. Here a new secular style replaced the timeless dramas of Christian art, which had occupied painters in the past; and, for the first time since the end of the Classical world, momentary glimpses of everyday life became the fashion.

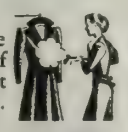
Of such genre pieces, The Suitor's Visit in the National Gallery of Art by the Dutch painter Gerard Ter Borch (1617–1681) is typical. We watch, as through an open window, the suitor in all his finery forever approaching his pensive fiancée, while her father from behind looks on appraisingly, and her sister or friend with self-conscious concentration strums on a musical instrument known as a theorbo. As sometimes happens in the movies, the film strip seems to have caught, the actors suddenly to have become immobile. Everyone, even the dog, questions the future, which cannot begin while the enchanted stillness lasts. Here is a different kind of timelessness, one described by Goethe when he said to Eckermann, "Every situation—nay, every moment—is of infinite worth; for it is the representative of a whole eternity."

This new search in painting for the permanent in the ephemeral led to a more realistic transcription of appearance. Consequently the best painters in Holland, with the exception of Rembrandt, were in varying degrees scientific investigators of the image which the eye conveys to the mind. It is significant in this connection that the Dutch are also credited with the practical discovery of both the compound microscope and the telescope, one about 1590 and the other about 1608.

The visual field—a glimpse, for example, of figures in a room—is seen as areas of color which are lit up or darkened according to the source and intensity of the illumination. The achievement of a realistic impression in a painting necessitates, therefore, an infinitely difficult adjustment of tone and value. In the present picture the figures of the suitor, the friend and the father are mutually consistent, but the figure of the fiancée is out of key. The high lights on her white dress and salmon bodice are too bright to be justified by the apparent illumination of the room. This overemphasis on certain passages, especially of white silk, repeatedly upsets the balance of Ter Borch's colors. Yet paradoxically his fame rests on this flaw in the actuality of his scenes, for the popularity of his canvases is due largely to his handling of satin, to his rendering of texture which, skillful as it is, at the same time affects the reality of his paintings.

—JOHN WALKER,
Chief Curator, National Gallery of Art.

The ONLY sure POSITIVE MOTHPROOF



method used for years by big mills – Now sold for home use!

You can be ABSOLUTELY SURE moths will never eat your woolen clothes if you just spray them for a few minutes with LARVEX. One easy spraying with magic LARVEX mothproofs woolens for a whole year.

LARVEX is the ONLY SURE mothproofing method used for years by big woolen mills and now sold for home use. LARVEX actually mothproofs the cloth itself. Moths will commit suicide by starvation rather than eat anything treated with LARVEX. Non-inflammable. Stainless. Odorless—no moth ball, camphor or cedar odors. Just spray garments with LARVEX and hang them in their usual place ready for immediate wear. And spray your rugs and sofas, too.

Inexpensive! It costs no more to make a suit or coat mothproof with LARVEX than it does to get it dry cleaned. Only 79¢ a pint. $1.19 a quart.

So Easy! A few minutes' spraying with LARVEX mothproofs for a whole year.

ALL DRUG, DEPARTMENT AND HOUSEFURNISHINGS STORES

LARVEX

The Largest Selling Mothproofer

The Hunts, however, are convinced pacifists, and John came close to going to a conscientious-objectors' camp in the last part of World War II. He was called by his draft board, but was excused on the grounds of dependents and his teaching job.

To any outsider, the "worship in silence" is probably the most striking feature of Quakerism. Quaker meetings such as the Hunts attend have no presiding ministers or elders—the whole congregation sits together in silence until some member feels called upon to speak. No one talks for more than a minute or two, and the silences between are always longer than the speeches. Remarks are never prepared in advance, there is no attempt at discussion or debate, and voices are never raised above a quiet conversational level. Any deliberate efforts at oratory are frowned upon as bad taste, and probably insincere. During an hour-long Sunday meeting the average number of persons who speak is four or five, and ten is considered almost too many.

"Some of our best meetings," says John, "come when no one speaks at all."

For Quakers, the "worship in silence" is a mystical and profoundly inspiring experience.

How the Hunts Spend Their Money

(monthly average)

Payments on mortgage and loans	$148.00
Food	50.00
Taxes and insurance	32.00
Car upkeep	30.00
Feed for animals	20.00
Electricity and gas	10.00
Phone	7.00
Papers	3.12
Rent on frozen-food locker	2.00
Saved for miscellaneous expenses	75.00
	$377.12

John's income from teaching, farming and extra jobs on the side averages about $375 a month. The $75 which they attempt to save must cover all yearly clothing and medical expenses, heating and recreation and tithe to the Birmingham Meeting, which is based on what they can afford to pay.

One Quaker writer has expressed it thus: "In the Quaker practice of group worship on the basis of silence come special times when an electric hush and solemnity and depth of power steals over the worshipers. A blanket of divine covering comes over the room, and a quickening Presence pervades us, breaking down some part of the special privacy and isolation of our individual lives and blending our spirits with a super-individual Life and Power—an objective, dynamic Presence which enfolds us all, nourishes our souls, speaks glad, unutterable comfort within us, and quickens in us depths that had before been slumbering. . . ."

Among the Friends of two and three hundred years ago, other effects were sometimes noted. These early enthusiasts were accustomed to shiver and shake so violently that they were nicknamed "Quakers" in derision. Such things don't happen now.

A few weeks ago I attended a Sunday-morning meeting with the Hunts and their four children: Patricia (Patsy), 14; Tommy, 8; Marjorie (Margy), 4; and John Legus, Jr. (Liggy), 2. About forty other Friends were present. They sat in rows of ancient wooden benches which had been fitted recently with comfortable dark red seat pads. Warm sunlight streamed through the windows of the old meetinghouse, which was used during the Battle of Brandywine in 1777 for a typical Quaker purpose—as a hospital for both British and American soldiers.

At eleven o'clock the meeting began with everyone bowing his head in unspoken prayer. After a moment or two heads were lifted, and Yours Luxuriously...

That's the story of a summer with marvelous Martex Beach Sheets. They're big (36 x 68 inches), bright and beautiful . . . absorbent, yet dry out quickly. Get one for each member of your family. And make sure you have plenty of regular-size Martex towels for extra summer demands. At better stores everywhere.

Martex THEY DO WEAR LONGER

Beach Sheet. Gay stripes on white or sunlight background. About $3.50

White bath towel with smart colored borders. About $1.00

MARTEX TOWELS — A PRODUCT OF WEST POINT MANUFACTURING CO. ★ WELLINGTON SEARS CO. • SELLING AGENTS • 65 WORTH ST., NEW YORK 13, N.Y.

make this sunsuit faster

with DOT® SNAPPERS

A few blows of the hammer and these laundryproof fasteners are on to stay! Professional attaching tool included — they're the same DOT Snappers used on fine ready-made clothes. No buttonholes to make, no buttons to pop off. Quick and easy for small fingers to fasten. At your favorite notions counter. John Dritz & Sons, Dept. LHJ-6, 1115 Broadway, New York 10, N. Y.

McCall Pattern No. 1466

Ask to see Pearl Dot Snappers for blouses and sportswear

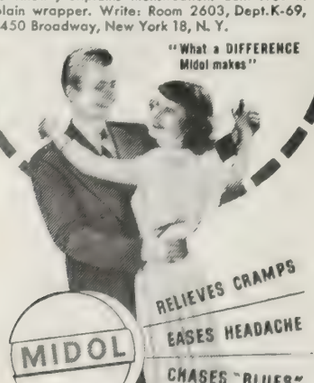
DOT SNAPPERS KIT

$1.00 a box

Refills 25c

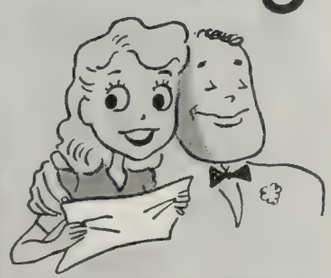
free | Send stamped addressed envelope for free booklet, "Dritz Tips for Home Sewers"

ANOTHER DOT PRODUCT OF UNITED-CARR FASTENER CORP.



Those BAD DAYS CAN BE GOOD DAYS

MIDOL



RELIEVES FUNCTIONAL PERIODIC PAIN

CRAMPS-HEADACHE-"BLUES"

MOTHERS: 24-page book, "What Women Want to Know", explains menstruation. Sent Free in plain wrapper. Write: Room 2603, Dept. K-69, 1450 Broadway, New York 18, N. Y.

so strong!

SITROUX TISSUES soft . . . absorbent

NOW FINER THAN EVER

. . . say SIT-TRUE

the "worship in silence" began. At lengthy intervals members rose to speak. One man recalled the Quaker "peace testimony," and suggested that Friends should think about world government as a means to that end. Another told of a luncheon meeting of the Rotary Club in near-by West Chester had held recently in a Negro community center, "An ancient testimony of the Society of Friends is for tolerance and understanding in race relations," he said. "I feel that in this event we have made one little step forward, out of darkness into light."

Then a sunburned young farmer stood up. "Some of us have wondered if there is as much of God's light to lead us as there was in the times of older Friends," he said. "The other day I thought I found an answer to that question in the corner of my barn. Two rays of light were coming through the window and striking against the whitewashed wall. They were reflected back with great brilliance; I stepped over and it seemed to me that I could trace them all the way back to the sun. There were many other rays which came through the window and reached only the dark part of the wall; they disappeared in darkness. Perhaps that is an answer—in too many cases today our surfaces are dull and don't reflect the light. It is up to us to keep our surfaces polished and clear, and reflect God's light as always."

He sat down and rested his chin in his hand; a few minutes later a village doctor rose beside him. "The rays of light which George spoke of are a three-way arrangement," he said. "The light flows from its source, the Creator of heaven and earth, and is reflected by us. But where is it reflected? Into someone else's life? It takes courage to make these steps in better race relations and world federation, that have been spoken of. There are so many ways of spreading God's light—if we are sensitive reflectors."

This concept of "spreading the light" is something that Quakers in general conscientiously try to live up to. Though comparatively few (there are only about 115,000 Quakers in the U. S.), their influence in education, social work, charity and international understanding is great. Through their American Friends Service Committee they carry on world-wide relief and rehabilitation work with strict fairness to all nationalities. The Co-operative for American Remittances to Europe (CARE), which has sent millions of food and clothing parcels abroad since the war, is based on Quaker methods, and is directed by a Quaker, Paul Comly French. Another Quaker, Dr. Philip C. Jessup, is a U. S. delegate to the General Assembly of the United Nations.

Both Feet in the Soil

For many Americans the word "Quaker" instantly brings up the traditional picture of a portly William Penn, wearing a broad-brimmed hat, long gray clothes and a decidedly sober expression. Present-day Quakers do not look or dress like this, and John Hunt is a typical sample. He is an athletic, light-footed man of 42, with a deep vertical dimple in his square-cut chin, ruddy cheeks and sparkling dark eyes. At school, where his pupils call him "Master John," he wears snappy bow ties and sports jackets, with a pipe tucked in one of the pockets; around home he is most often seen in a pair of dilapidated dungarees. He says somewhat shamefacedly that he enjoys the hardest and dirtiest kinds of farm work. "I love to clean the barnyard," he says. "My favorite job is spreading manure on the fields in spring."

Mary Hunt has curly reddish brown hair and Irish-looking features, though her ancestry is mostly English. She was born in Wisconsin, trained as a nurse in a Catholic hospital in St. Louis, and did graduate work in New York City. When she met John she was specializing in physiotherapy and orthopedic work in the Westfield Hospital. Now she runs a tractor, pitches hay and hoes long rows of corn with as much gusto as her husband.

Both the Hunts are passionately devoted to their little farm, for which they have sacrificed many of the ordinary comforts of life. Their household furniture is rickety and mostly secondhand; there is no mirror in

Smart-form

It's CUSTOM FITTED!

OPEN-WEAVE NYLON with Embroidered Nylon Marquisette . . . only $16.95

Our Amazing PATENTED FITTING FEATURE assures you glorious figure lines and the MOST PERFECT FIT imaginable!

You'll love our new OPEN-WEAVE NYLONS, and open-weave brocaded fabrics—they're so COOL and COMFORTABLE for Summer wear . . . And your Smart-form will WEAR MONTHS LONGER than other foundations with Smart-form's innovation . . .

HEMMED SEAMS!

See your local Smart-form Corsetiere or Smart-form Corset Shop for America's most complete line of all-in-ones, girdles, corsets and belts.

MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY

For name of nearest Smart-form Corsetiere or Corset Shop ☐

Or learn how you can establish yourself in this fascinating money-making profession ☐

Name_____

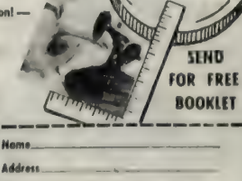
Street_____

City & State_____

SMART WOMEN KNOW SMARTEST WOMEN WEAR Smart-form Smart-form, Inc., Newark, N. J.

the oh-sew-handy Bobinbox sewing aid

Clear plastic box for either round or long bobbins. Fits any machine drawer. Now available wherever sewing machine supplies are sold. $1.



IT'S FUN TO LEARN AT HOME!

Women's Tailoring . . turn your Spare Time into DOLLARS!

LEARN AT HOME — SPARE TIME
CUSTOM TAILORING FOR WOMEN
WELL-ESTABLISHED SCHOOL

Make Tailoring a Vocation! — You Will Tailor Your Own Garments

LOW COST EASY TERMS

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET

Metropolitan School of Tailoring Home-Study Division

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

4717 South Indiana Avenue, Dept. #203 • Chicago 15, Illinois

The Pink of Perfection...

WISS

PINKING SHEARS

Take a look in tailoring and dressmaking shops . . . you'll see Wiss Pinking Shears, first choice of professionals. Wiss Pinking Shears are the ones you want, too... they put a professional ravel-free finish on every fabric edge as the pattern is cut. For all light fabrics, use Model C... for heavy or light fabrics, use Model A. But be sure you always insist on Wiss... famous for quality for more than a century.

for all light fabrics

Model C $7.95

Leather Case, $1.50

for all fabrics

Model A $10.95

New Lightweight Aluminum Model

WISS Quality for more than a Century

J. WISS & SONS CO., Newark 7, N. J.

their low-ceilinged bathroom, so John does his shaving at the kitchen sink while Mary is fixing meals. Mary's "laundry" is in a primitive dirt-and-stone cellar which was dug by the original settlers more than 200 years ago. But these things are more than outweighed, for them, by the sense of security which their own land gives them. "I don't think anyone can ever know how much we love this place," says John.

The Hunts raise all their own food except such store-bought staples as flour, sugar, salt and coffee. Their one Guernsey cow (named Mary Ellen, after one of John's old-time girl friends) produces all the milk they can drink, with enough left over to make butter and cottage cheese. About every two years Mary Ellen also produces a calf, which eventually winds up as 300 pounds of roasts, steaks and hamburger in the Hunts' frozen-food lockers. Their sow produces four to six little pigs every spring, and by winter these are converted into sausage, bacon and other forms of pork. The 25 Brahma white hens seem to work overtime laying eggs—last winter John collected up to 20 a day, and frantically urged the whole family to eat more eggs. He and young Tommy, whose appetite is phenomenal, can do away with four fried eggs apiece at breakfast, but the others stop at two.

Mary bakes her own excellent bread (Tommy likes it so much he calls it "angel bread"), and is lavish with vegetables, either fresh or frozen. In the summer their own garden supplies more than they can eat; last year John and Mary, working as a team, canned and froze large quantities of peas, corn, Lima beans, tomatoes and tomato juice. In their cold cellar they stored away four bags of their own potatoes, along with carrots, turnips and onions.

On top of all this John made a cash profit of $519.99 on his farming operations in 1948, over and above the cost of seed, fertilizer and a very small amount of hired labor. His money crops were sweet corn and green peas—he sold the corn himself to housewives in West Chester and Downingtown at 45 and 50 cents a dozen, and delivered the peas in bulk to a canning company for $85 a ton. In past summers he has usually spent part of each summer vacation directing recreation in camps as far west as Michigan. But this summer he plans to work full time on his farm, and he thinks he can boost his income from that source to at least $1000.

Working his own soil and teaching young children are John's two favorite occupations,

(Continued on Page 175)

Abandoned Girl

WHAT happens to our children when there is no one at home to care for them properly? When mother dies and there are seven children under sixteen—but not one mature enough to run the home while father earns the money?

Joan was seven when her mother died and her family plunged into such chaos that they never emerged from it. Finally, her father gave up. For four years, she and her three younger sisters have been wards of the City of New York—and Joan has been in trouble more than once for fighting for them. Spunky, temperish, sensitive and lovable, she's one of the lost ones, struggling to find herself.

What kind of life does she live in an institution for child care? What kind of chance has she got for happiness? What is going to happen to her—and other children like her? Read

ABANDONED GIRL

By Joan Younger

in How America Lives, in the July Ladies' Home Journal

My Mommy says it's like White magic

Mother's Dress from Butterick Pattern No. 4899, Child's, No. 4491

"Smart, look-alike dresses, aprons, blouses . . . I make them all now on my White Rotary. The beautiful cabinet fits into my living room perfectly and my machine is always ready for use without fuss or bother, whenever I have an hour to spare."

New White Sewing Efficiency in a Charming Living Room Desk

You'll move your lovely, new White Rotary right into the nicest room in your home to add new charm to your decorating scheme. You'll find new sewing thrills every time you sit down to sew. It is easier to do fine work because White's exclusive feed keeps stitching smooth and straight, grips material securely on all four sides of the needle. You even baste on your White—just set the dials for a loose, long basting stitch, reset instantly for fine sewing. The White glides over varying thicknesses of fabric, even over basting pins! A flick of the reverse lever and your White sews backward without stopping, to back-tack seam ends, to darn and to mend. See all the simplified features that make White first choice of so many expert dressmakers—at leading department stores.

White ROTARY SEWING MACHINES Since 1876

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

WHITE MAGIC KEY BUTTONHOLE WORKER. Makes beautiful buttonholes—even keyhole buttonholes never before possible on a home sewing machine.

Match-up magic with Avondale
Companion Colors
Because Avondale fabrics are dyed-in-the-yarn, you get the exact same colors in solid shades and stripes.
Noontime or moontime, you'll see them out together — Avondale chambrays in smiling Companion Colors! A perfect match, they're actually made to go together, for the same colors in solid shades and stripes are dyed-in-the-yarn. Avondale chambrays are easy to sew . . . Sanforized*, they keep an accurate fit, and stay fast through washings and wear. In a range of qualities and prices, in ready-to-wear and fabric by the yard.
Look for the green label that identifies these Avondale Marlin chambrays in Companion Colors.
AVONDALE
dyed-in-the-yarn fabrics...the stay-fast colors are woven-in 58 Worth Street, New York 13
*Residual shrinkage less than 1%
Bare sun-browned shoulders in a chambray evening gown . . . Avondale's Marlin stripe for the basque top, lemon yellow for the billowing skirt. Afternoons, wear a shorter skirt in Marlin grey with striped pockets. Daytime or nighttime, don the yellow cutaway for one more costume. Bows or cummerbunds, as you like, in matching stripe, yellow or grey.
All from one Butterick pattern 4872

(Continued from Page 173)

and he is especially happy in his job as principal of the Friends Community School in West Chester. The school is an old gray-stone building on the grounds of the West Chester meetinghouse. Like almost all Quaker buildings, it is surrounded by shade trees and seems to have a distinctive air of serenity and peace. There are 80 pupils, all of elementary-school age, and 10 teachers, including "Master John," who has two daily classes in social studies, takes charge of the daily assembly and also serves as athletic coach. About a third of the children come from Quaker families, but, besides John, there is only one other Quaker on the faculty.

John came to this school in 1947 after teaching for several years at the big Friends Select School in Philadelphia. He feels that he really found himself when he began to teach small children; it gave him a chance to plant his ideas in receptive minds, and watch them develop in a tangible way. He is an unconventional educator in some ways: not long ago he told one of his classes that he might give up textbooks entirely, and teach them through movies and television shows. Needless to say, they clapped and cheered.

His school salary is $3000 a year, which is paid in ten monthly checks of $300 each. (Like most teachers, he has two months of payless vacation in the summer.) There are no deductions from his pay check—his large family exempts him from income tax, and teachers are not covered by Social Security. He also collects about $25 a month from parents for the use of his secondhand Dodge sedan as a "school bus," and another $25 a month (on the average) for speaking and barn-dance engagements. This, with his farm profits, and his other summer work, brings his average income up to about $375 a month the year round.

Of this amount at least $300 a month goes out immediately for fixed charges and living necessities. The biggest bite is $148 a month which the Hunts pay on their mortgage and various other loans. When they "bought" their farm and house in 1942 they did not have enough money to take title, but the old Pennsylvania Dutch farmer who owned it liked their enthusiasm, and let them move in anyway. They paid $600 cash and $100 a month for ten months, barely squeaking through that first year. Then they were able to get a mortgage for $5000 and pay off the rest. Later they increased the mortgage to $7500 to finance such improvements as a new cesspool, oil burner, storm sash, second-floor insulation and outside painting job, but their payments have brought it down to around $5000 again.

John also has three loans outstanding—from a finance company, a credit union and a bank. Most of the borrowed money—$1250—was invested in a tractor, plow, disk harrow and cultivator last spring. His other fixed costs include $14 a month for taxes and fire insurance, $10 for electricity and gas, $6 to $7 for telephone, $10 for life insurance, $8 for automobile insurance, $3.12 for newspapers (the Philadelphia Bulletin and the West Chester Local News), and $2 for their two frozen-food lockers. Feed for the animals and chickens comes to $20 a month; gasoline (John uses at least five gallons a day, but buys it wholesale) is about $30 a month; and Mary's monthly grocery bill is around $50.

This leaves the slender sum of $75 a month for all clothing for a family of six (with a seventh due this month), medical bills, furniture and household appliances, repairs, recreation and savings. The last item does not exist at present, but the Hunts consider the farm their savings account. "We've got a place here that is worth around $20,000, including the machinery and animals," John says. "In fact, we've had people stop here and offer us that much in cash for immediate sale. Our debts are around $7500 now, so we're $12,500 ahead." And Mary says, "The farm is the best security I could have. If anything should happen to John I wouldn't have to look for a job—I could make a go of it right here."

The Hunts have been lucky on doctors' bills; their youngsters so far have escaped the more serious childhood diseases, and for such things as colds, chicken pox and minor cuts, Mary's nursing training is sufficient. Living in the country appears to have kept the family unusually healthy. Tommy, of course, got knocked off his bicycle by an automobile out in front of the houses, but the most serious damage was done to the bike. Now he is earning a new one by raising one of the latest little pigs.

Clothes are a much more serious problem. Tommy wears out a new pair of $3.98 shoes regularly once a month, and his overalls go just as often. The girls aren't so hard on their things, but they are constantly outgrowing them. Mary gets along on almost no new clothes at all, and John often gets his second-hand. Not long ago Mary bid a quarter at a country auction sale and got a "gold mine"—eighteen pairs of serviceable socks (only a few darns) for John, and three more pairs for Patsy. "I never had so many socks in my life before," John says.

The Hunts are tireless bargain hunters at such sales. Among the articles which Mary has bought for a dime are a self-rising bread pail, a pair of grass shears, and a stuffed pheasant whose tail is always falling off. Several pieces of their furniture were picked up in this way; a few other items, such as a handsome comb-backed fireplace bench, and a pine milk cupboard in the kitchen, are real eighteenth-century Pennsylvania antiques. Mary has spent many hours scraping off paint and refinishing these old pieces.

Both the Hunts used to read a lot, but they rarely look at a book any more. The farm and house work just doesn't leave them any time, they say. They read the daily newspapers and the Friends Intelligencer, and Mary gets a couple of women's magazines. A year ago they had a serious talk and decided to set aside one evening a week just for reading worth-while books. But a few days later a big stone truck ran John into a ditch while he was driving home from school, completely demolished his car, and sent him to the hospital with a broken arm and several fractured ribs. In the ensuing excitement they never got started on their reading program.

They would have some difficulty if they did. Their four youngsters are a lively crew, and evenings in the Hunt household are well taken care of, what with Tommy and Margy running trains through John's study, and little Liggy scrambling across the living-room floor.

Patsy, the older girl, is a typical gray-eyed sweater-wearing teen-ager who thinks it would be fun to have a boy carry her books home from school—if only she didn't live five miles out in the country! She would like to go to the movies every week, as her girl friends do, but the Hunts are rather suspicious of the movies generally—"We like to know just what she is going to see," John says. So Patsy gets to the movies once a month. She does a lot of work around the house, minding the baby, washing dishes and waiting on table, and seems to enjoy it. Her hobby right now is taking long, lonesome walks in the wooded hills back of the farm, where she sits on a rock and composes poetry. She thinks she would like to be a poet, but is afraid she couldn't earn her living at it.

Eight-year-old Tommy is a sturdy, aggressive youngster who seems to eat his own weight at every meal, and does almost a man's work on the farm, cutting and pitching fodder to the cow and pigs, driving the tractor and helping his father gather corn. Margy likes to draw pictures and has a quaint turn of phrase—when she first saw her father's chickens, which have big tufts of feathers on their legs, she shrieked, "Oh, look, they've got their pyjammys on!"

The Hunts are a gregarious, sociable family who like nothing better than to have five or six or even a dozen extra people drop in for dinner, or an afternoon of chatter. Sometimes their guests are students from the University of Pennsylvania who became acquainted with John at a Friends' summer camp; sometimes they are the caretaker and his wife from one of the big estates near by, or their Greek-restaurant friends from Downingtown. About once a month the Hunts join a group of their Quaker friends for a combination dinner and discussion session. Everyone helps get the meal, and afterward they talk about a new book, or an article in the Friends Intelligencer—"anything that interests us," says Mary.

John wants it known that he is definitely not an intellectual. "I've had debates with my friends about the way I live," he says. "They think a person in a professional field should always be bending every effort to furthering his profession, writing articles and sending them to magazines, or working on a book. But I would rather live the simple life with my family as a center, meeting and liking all kinds of people, working with the soil and the children at school, planting seeds of understanding where I can. That way I feel I am carrying out the Quaker idea of living a better life, instead of just talking about it, or writing about it.

"Of course we have to wear old clothes, and shovel manure, and do without a mirror in the bathroom. But such things don't worry me, so long as my life is lived in unity and peace. Nobody is perfect—there's dirt and stars in all of us. Our feet are in the dirt, but we can look up and see the stars."

THE END

What America Spends on Charity

American hearts—and pocketbooks—are quick to respond to the cries of the distressed, whether they be victims of famine in India, of floods along the Mississippi, or of earthquakes in divers places. Through such organizations as the Friends Service Committee, CARE and the American Red Cross, American dollars provide relief for disaster-struck people everywhere.

The average American contributes $182 per year to philanthropy*. By income groups, contributions to philanthropy in 1945 (last year for which figures are available) were:

INCOME	CONTRIBUTIONS	AVERAGE GIFT
Under $5,000	$1,705,209,000	$36
5,000–10,000	337,925,000	179
10,000–25,000	238,225,000	402
25,000–50,000	116,819,000	972
50,000–100,000	79,860,000	2,384
100,000–500,000	73,896,000	8,372
500,000–1,000,000	11,673,000	45,244
Over 1,000,000	11,082,000	156,085

*From the Yearbook of Philanthropy

DENTISTS SAY:

Colgate Tooth Powder with the 2-minute routine Gets Teeth Sparkling And Super-Clean

OVER 4,000 DENTISTS SAY THIS EASY WAY REVEALS NATURAL SPARKLE OF TEETH

1 Simply brush teeth for two minutes, morning and night, with Colgate Tooth Powder.

2 Brush all three surfaces—front, back, and biting edges of teeth.

3 Always brush away from the gums.

SEE THE RESULTS— IN YOUR OWN MIRROR

Watch how this Colgate Tooth Powder routine removes dull film that improper cleaning misses! Leaves teeth naturally bright, shining clean. And—Colgate Tooth Powder's tangy flavor refreshes your mouth, sweetens your breath! Try it today!

KISSABLE of course! Colgate Tooth Powder sweetens and freshens your breath, too!

No dentifrice can get Teeth and Breath cleaner!

r long hair: Comb all hair toward center back and draw it through ht rubber band to secure close to head, allowing ends to fall. Make oop with free hair, bringing ends up and through band. Add flowers.

From center part wave hair toward back of head; secure with combs. Remaining hair is in a bun, braided coil or twist.

From either side of part draw three equal sections of hair back to tie with crisp bows. Let ends fall in soft loose curl.

KEEP A COOL HEAD

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

Short or long, your hair can be prettily arranged to look cool and refreshing for hot summer days. News in short cuts—the V-shape, which solves the problem of what to do with back hair that just won't curl in warm weather. We have shown three views below of the most wearable popular short cut, which will make it simple for you to reproduce exactly. There are smooth, cool ideas for long hair, too—a looped chignon, a French twist, a trio of ribbons. Try one of these hair-do's to make you feel as pretty as you look this summer.

Front View: The V-shape is cut from 1½" to 2" in length. Here, with a side part, soft wave over the forehead.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

HAIR DESIGNS BY MICHEL

Side View: To set, use two rows of pin curls for front and sides, three rows in back.

Back View: Hair is neatly clipped and straight along neck to form a V-shape.

BY APPOINTMENT
PERFUMERS TO
H. M. QUEEN MARY
YARDLEY, LONDON

the delicate fragrance that makes you more enchanting

YARDLEY English Lavender

Yardley English Lavender, $5.75, $2.85, $1.75, plus tax

Yardley English Lavender Soap, 45c

Box of three tablets, $1.35

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U.S.A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

Weathervanes* tailored by Handmacher

America's favorite warm-weather suit...

$25.00

A dozen styles in watercolors and dressy darks... in Weathervane rayon by Celanese, these are yours to wear all summer long... in smart cool comfort.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Office

"YOU CAN FEEL THE GOOD FIT"

Write Department LJ-2 for free Weathervane folder in full color.

Handmacher-Vogel, Inc., 512 Seventh Avenue, New York City

SILVER WEDDING

(Continued from Page 57)

blond hair—ash-blond, not bright like Ginny's auburn. Her brown eyes were as clear as sherry wine; he remembered them suffused with tears, when he used to fight with her—at her, better said—in the early days of their marriage. Why did I sometimes want to hurt her? he asked himself wonderingly. He could not, at the moment, recall. That early romantic love—hurting the other seems part of it—quarreling and making up. Later love is kinder love, he thought.

He supposed there were prettier women; some would say Ginny was prettier—more sensational—but Gertrude walked so beautifully, with such free, long-legged grace; the way she carried her head; and her laugh, so spontaneous, yet so low. The way she always looked so clean.

His hand gently slapped the white florist's box reposing on his knee. "I love that woman," he said out loud. "I just love that woman." And the mischievous dimple was in his cheek when the driver turned around.

"Did you say something, sir?"

"I said I loved my wife," replied Henry Maynes. "It is my twenty-fifth wedding anniversary, and I am in love with my wife."

"I've been married ten," replied the driver. "Four kids. But she's still my best girl—unless it's the littlest kid. She sure is daddy's baby."

Funny, thought Henry, it's sometimes that way. Take my partner, Tim Mathews, and his daughter Helen. Just puts her mother in the shade with Tim: "Henry, I want to introduce you to my daughter!" Helen coming down to the office to lunch with her father, he tucking her arm under his and asking, "Where will it be today, beautiful?" Mary, Tim's wife, never showed up. Went in for clubwork, he heard, and looked rather drab.

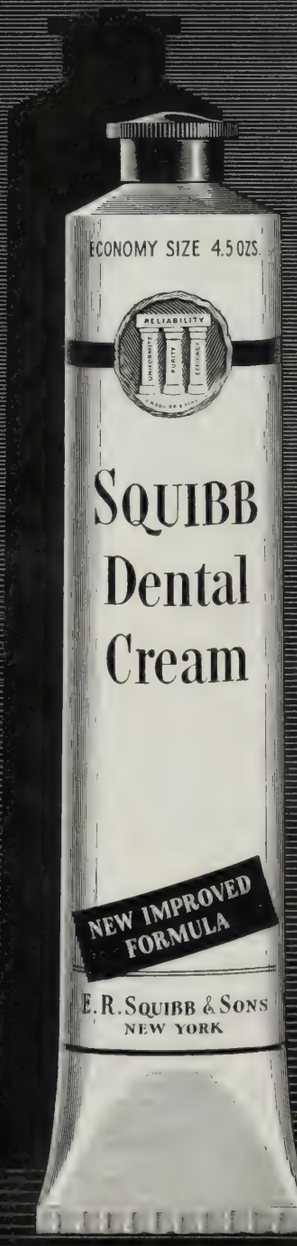
Those psychoanalytic fellows—Henry's thoughts went on—maybe they have something in the Oedipus-something-or-other, though that was mother and son.

GINNY chattered about psychoanalysis and he remembered something she had said. That was when she and Jack announced that they were going to leave the house and live in that barracks hut out at the university where Jack was still a G. I. student.

Gertrude had protested, "But darlings! You will be so cramped! You can hardly turn around in the rooms, and here at home you have your own suite, and if you want to entertain you can have the living room any time."

But Ginny and Jack pulled out against Gertrude's protests. What had Ginny said then? "All the marriage counselors say if you want your marriage to fail, just live with the in-laws. Jack and I intend our marriage to succeed," and she had tossed her head as though her father and mother knew nothing of successful marriage. How wrong she was! thought Henry Maynes emphatically.

The word "drab," as he had thought it in connection with Mrs. Mathews, came back into his mind. Gertrude never looked drab. She never would. When she was eighty her bones would still be beautiful.



But she looked something else sometimes—plain tired. The fair skin just a little drawn; the lines around her eyes just a little sharper, and sometimes, under them, a faint blue smudge. Gertrude didn't have to do much housework now. Sigrid had been with them five years, and she was exceptional. Gertrude helped, of course. Truth to say, he didn't know exactly what she did; Gertrude had always been like that: when they had no maid at all, and that was the greater part of their lifetime together, things seemed always to be in order, without effort. His mind went over the apartments they had had—so small, the first, and then bigger, until they bought the pleasant North Side house. But they all had that clear, clean atmosphere, and a pleasant smell of wax and Gertrude's scent—sweet, and light, and herby somehow. He wondered what it was. How odd that he could smell it merely by thinking of her—and had never asked its name. But she must 3 reasons for the extra clean feeling...

action of magnesium hydroxide

real peppermint for taste and breath better penetration between teeth

The priceless ingredient of every product is the honor and integrity of its maker have worked hard sometimes. During the depression she made all Ginny's clothes and her own, and did the washing; sometimes then she looked tired, but why should she be tired now?

Of course, she was always doing things for Ginny, and he suspected that they were no fewer since Ginny had moved out with her husband. Hadn't he caught her baking a cake for a party Ginny was giving? And that sitting with the baby! On Sunday she had come in at three A.M.; Jack and Ginny had been at a dance. How many times had that happened last week? He had gone over with her himself one night, and Ginny had suggested quite a lot of Jack's socks needed darning, and Gertrude had darned them, and washed the supper dishes Ginny had left. Ginny, of course, was taking courses at the U, with the idea of getting a master's, though what for was beyond Henry Maynes. She's not really intellectual, he thought, just plays at it. Maybe I'm unfair.

But it was preposterous anyhow! Ginny would never bring the baby over and leave it overnight with them. "The psychologists say babies must have an unconscious feeling of absolute security in their surroundings. Baby must feel that he is in his own home, when he goes to sleep and wakes up." So Gertrude was paddling back and forth, and probably had enough to do at home, at that. Somebody mended his, Henry's, socks, too, and it certainly wasn't Sigrid. The more he thought of Gertrude's sitting with her grandson, the angrier Henry got.

Ginny, when she had first asked her mother to sit with the baby, had said, with that little toss of the head, "Unless, mom, you really don't like playing the role of granny."

How idiotic! Gertrude adored the baby—adored all babies. She had been so disappointed there was only Ginny, but there had been that trouble when the other one got born wrong, and dead, and afterward there couldn't be any others. But why in the world the baby couldn't be put to sleep in Ginny's vacated room he couldn't for the life of him see.

The taxi was passing a candy shop, and he tapped the driver's shoulder. "Just a minute," he said. "I want to buy something."

HE wanted to shower Gertrude with presents. He wanted to buy her the things he had never been able to buy her when they were young. He remembered the frustrated longing with which he had gazed then into florists' windows, and at the displays of jewelers. He thought with satisfaction of the wedding anniversary six years before, when he had pulled off the ring with the pitiful little diamond, hardly more than a chip, and replaced it with another with a big square-cut stone. "With this ring I thee betroth," he had whispered. She had put her arms around his neck. "But, my darling, my best and only, I love the other one," she had said. And nothing could stop her from wearing it all the time, even with the big one.

I love that woman, his mind and heart reiterated.

And now he was home. He paid the driver, with an exorbitant tip, and raced up the steps, holding the boxes with their strings all gathered up into one hand, and the strings slipping, turning his key and opening the door with the other.

He called, and his wife came out of the dining room. "You are home early," she said. "Miss Smith phoned that you would be." She saw the parcels and smiled.

He gathered her up into his arms, lifting her off her feet, and nuzzling his nose into her soft hair. Then he set her on her feet and kissed her hand.

"Madame," he said, "it is our wedding day. I congratulate me."

"I thought you had forgotten," she cried. Laughing, and holding his cheeks firm between her slim hands, she kissed him on the mouth.

"I have brought you bridal raiment," he said. "From your aging, gray-haired bridegroom."

She studied him appraisingly. "I like you better with gray hair," she said. "It is like the wings of a dove."

He ruffled her hair. "You do not get gray at all," he said. "Once I thought I discerned some silver, there where your hair sweeps back, but when I looked next day it was gone."

HIS wife smiled at him, her underlip pouting forward a little. I suppose he knows I get it touched up, she thought. But why go into it?

"It was your underlip that was my doom," he said, giving it a tiny biting kiss. "Tonight," he went on, "we shall celebrate. I have tickets for the Cornell opening. People will whisper, 'Who is that old codger with the perfectly beautiful woman?' And someone will say, 'Why, they are the Mayneses. Haven't you heard about them? He struck a jack pot, twenty-five years ago.' Come, my sweet, look at the clothes, dress up in them, get Sigrid to give us some coffee and sandwiches; we'll sup at leisure after the theater."

Gertrude beamed.

"What I really love most in you," he remarked, "is the way you light up—like a cathedral—when you are happy."

But her face clouded. "Oh, darling, I forgot," she stammered. "I absolutely forgot. Ginny called up this morning, terribly excited. It seems that a classmate of Jack's also had tickets for the Cornell opening and has come down with a terrible cold. He gave Jack the tickets. He and Ginny are going—and there's nobody to sit with the baby. I said I'd go."

An association of men who will not quarrel with one another is a thing which never yet existed, from the greatest confederacy of nations down to a town meeting or a vestry.

—THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Henry Maynes glared. "So you forgot it was our wedding day!" he exclaimed. "You forgot all about it." A stubborn line creased his forehead. "You never gave it a thought."

"I didn't forget, my darling," she said softly. "I thought you had forgotten. I was a little hurt when Miss Smith called, and you didn't come to the phone. Then I thought maybe it was a most appropriate way to spend our silver wedding—taking care of our grandchild. But I was going to ask Ginny, on account of its being our day, to bring the baby over here, just this once, so we could be at home, together. And I've ordered turtle soup, and guinea hen, with that special sauce, and fresh fruits with lemon ice. I didn't forget it, darling. How could I forget!"

The triangle between his eyes dissolved. He held her again, close to him. "My wife," he said, "my wife." He held her off at arms' length and repeated, "How I love that woman! . . . We shall eat the dinner," he said decisively. "Can Sigrid be ready by seven?"

Gertrude nodded.

"But we shall not stay home with our grandson. Ginny will stay with her child. We shall step out, you in your beauty, and I in my overweening pride, and afterward we shall have supper. Do you know, madame, that we have not been out on the town for six months!"

Gertrude demurred unconvincingly. "But I can't bear to disappoint Ginny. You know she loves the theater."

"Ginny can love it just as much on another night. I'll make it up to her. I'll buy her tickets. I'll even buy her a baby sitter, a professional one. But tonight it will be the way you and I want it."

"Ginny doesn't approve of strange baby sitters. And I can't bear to tell her," Gertrude murmured. "Young people take things harder."

"You don't have to tell her. The voice of authority will lay down the law. I'll phone her immediately."

But no one answered at Ginny's.

"She's probably airing the baby," he said, turning from the phone. "It's barely four," he added, glancing at his watch. "I'll call

End guesswork in your next home permanent

Find your "Rayve Number" on the Dial-a-Wave exclusive with Rayve

...the new personalized

HOME PERMANENT

FASTER . . . GENTLER . . . EASIER

Rayve's personalized waving times are up to twice as fast as ordinary home permanents. Yet Rayve's improved creme formula makes waving action noticeably gentler. And it's all as simple and easy as rolling your hair in curlers. Picture-booklet directions are crystal clear, and you don't even wear a turban!

LONG-LASTING . . . YET SOFTER, MORE NATURAL—No fuzzy ends, no frizz with Rayve. Even on the very first day, your hair feels satin-soft . . . looks and acts as if you'd been born with naturally-curly hair. Once you've tried this new personalized Rayve Home Permanent, you'll never be satisfied with any other kind of wave.

YOUR "RAYVE NUMBER" IS YOUR GUIDE TO THE ONE RIGHT WAVE FOR YOUR KIND OF HAIR

There's nothing hit or miss about a Rayve cold wave. With the easy-to-use Dial-a-Wave that's in every Rayve kit, you just set the dial for the texture and condition of your hair—and up comes your own Rayve Number. It's your guide to the professionally correct timing procedure for your type of hair and the amount of wave you prefer.

COMPLETE RAYVE KIT—everything for a perfect permanent. Includes 60 "easy-wind" plastic curlers, step-by-step directions, and the Dial-a-Wave. $2

REFILL KIT—with Dial-a-Wave. Complete except for curlers and bands. $1

FROM THE FAMOUS PEPSODENT LABORATORIES

Your hair needs special summer care

Look for the helpful display of essentials for summer hair beauty at your favorite drug or cosmetic counter right now.

RELIEVE PAIN INSTANTLY
COMBAT INFECTION from minor CUTS
WITH SOOTHING CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

Use this modern, stainless antiseptic for relief of all minor Cuts, Burns, Scratches, Skin Abrasions, Pimples

Avoid nasty infections from little skin injuries. Quick! Apply soothing Campho-Phenique. It stops pain—instantly. Kills many germs on contact. Aids healing by combating infection. Use Campho-Phenique also to relieve cold sores, fever blisters, itchy insect bites, pimples. Many doctors, dentists and nurses prefer this famous liquid antiseptic. So do children. It does not smart or sting like ordinary antiseptics . . . and it's stainless! Recommended over 50 years.

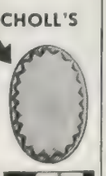
Apply generously with cotton

CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

(pronounced Cam-fo-fi-neek)

THE ANTISEPTIC THAT RELIEVES PAIN INSTANTLY

Trapped by Corn Pain?



DR. SCHOLL'S ZINO-PADS

GIVE INSTANT RELIEF!

Relief follows the instant you protect corns, sore toes, callouses or bunions with new Super-Soft Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. Painful shoe friction stops and pressure is lifted almost like magic. Apply these soothing, cushioning, protective pads at first sign of sore toes from new or tight shoes and you'll stop corns before they can develop! Use them with the separate Medications included and your corns or callouses will quickly loosen for easy removal.

NO OTHER PAD IS LIKE DR. SCHOLL'S

New patented creep-proof Pinked Edge molds pad to toe or foot with form-fit smoothness. Will not stick to stocking or come off in bath. Flesh color. As easy to apply as a postage stamp. Write for FREE sample (mention size wanted) and FOOT booklet. Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Dept. Z1, Chicago 10, Ill.

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

Have "SECOND LOOK" Legs!

Kept smooth and hair-free longer . . . by Nair . . . the safe, odorless depilatory lotion . . . that removes leg hair quickly, easily . . . leaves legs smoother . . . more exciting . . .

Lady—throw your razor away—use safe, odorless Nair lotion to keep legs smoother . . . more exciting . . . hair-free longer . . . with no ugly razor stubble! No irritation to normal skin. Get Nair today!

Cosmetic lotion to remove hair safely

FOR LEGS THAT DELIGHT USE NAIR TONIGHT 79¢ plus tax

again in an hour. Now, come upstairs and see what I brought you." He picked up the boxes.

In their bedroom Gertrude unpacked them. The dress came first. "Oh, Henry, oh, darling, you really shouldn't have . . . white—so impractical . . . and when will I ever wear it—I mean after tonight? But it's—I adore it!"

"You will wear it on the Caribbean cruise on which we are embarking the minute my next case is settled," said Henry. "Its price is none of your sweet business beyond the fact that your doting husband can afford it. He can also afford the first vacation in three years." He began lyricizing, like a travel catalogue. "Islands—purple mountains, sloping to an indigo sea—beaches blinding white—palms cutting silver swaths against a sapphire sky. You in white and me in cream-colored suits—cold fish in aspic."

Gertrude laughed merrily. "Darling, your purple rhapsody is either wish-dream, or you have been hiding things from me."

"Things have to be hid from you, woman," he answered. "Otherwise, Ginny would have had six bridesmaids instead of two, and lots of other things besides. I begrudge Ginny nothing, but we've done well by her, and I do begrudge the things you haven't had, and that you—and I—are going to have while we are still young enough to enjoy them."

WHILE he was talking, Gertrude was unpacking the other boxes with oh's and ah's. Now she embraced her husband, laying her cheek against his. "I've been so happy," she murmured, "all my life with you."

"Try the clothes on," he said. "I'm going to have a shower and then get out of your way," and he retired into the dressing room-bath.

Gertrude, in the new gown, stared at herself in the long mirror of her dressing table. "Oh, darling, it is lovely," she called to her husband, a little breathlessly.

"Let me see," he called back, but she warned:

"No, no, please not! Not until I'm made up—hair and everything."

She observed the design and detail of the gown; its studied simplicity, actually achieved by the most expert cutting, draping, shirring. The wide skirt fell long and full, pulled toward the back in a regal drapery. The dress was caught in at the waist with two slim thongs of silver leather, and she buckled them closer. I'm glad I'm not yet thick in the waist, she thought.

As she took off her dress, she could hear the shower splashing. She slipped into a foulard dressing gown, and lay down on the chaise to survey the rest of her finery.

Henry emerged, ruddy and smelling of lavender soap. He bowed over the chaise longue, kissed her hand.

Later, lying on his elbow at her side, he whispered, "You are lit up—like a Christmas tree. In twenty-five years there was never any woman but you."

Gertrude smiled. The dear liar! She remembered the summers when she had taken small Ginny to the lakeside cottage where Henry could come only week ends, and people who love to peddle bad news had told her Henry was being seen all over town with that handsome Mrs. Turner. She hadn't wanted to go away with Ginny and leave Henry, in spite of the heat. But they had agreed it was better for the child. She remembered the time, only a few years back, when Henry, for two months, had come home very late at least once a week, with the most incredible stories about the demands of clients.

But now she said comfortably, "I know, darling, I know. 'I have been faithful to thee, Cynara, in my fashion.'"

"I have never loved any woman but you. Never," he asserted, and though at times she had in secret shed lakes of tears, she believed him. "I must call Ginny again," he said, and went to the phone. "She's still not in," he said vexedly.

Gertrude dressed, brushing her hair and trying several arrangements while the water was filling the tub, taking off nail polish, and rubbing cream into her face while Henry, in the bedroom, got into his dinner clothes ex-

HEADACHE NEURALGIA NEURITIS Pain

RELIEVED

incredibly fast

the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend—

ANACIN®

Here's why

Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, it contains not one but a combination of medically proved ingredients. Get Anacin Tablets today.

NOW A COMPLEXION CLAY THAT MAKES SKIN LOVELIER

Cleans Pore Openings • Reduces Skin Blemishes

Works Wonders With Tired Lines in Face

Look better, feel better, after the first application with Hopper White Clay Pack®. See for yourself how this amazing facial pack cleans pore openings, helps tighten the tired lines in your face and loosen blackheads which can then be easily removed. Yes, you can thrill at the new loveliness of your complexion, the radiant, tingling feeling that is yours after a facial with Hopper Clay Pack. It's easy to use, costs only a few cents. At drug or cosmetic counters.

TRY EYE-GENE
AMAZING EYE-OPENING TEST!

Eyes can be so tired you want to close them for relief . . .

Millions Thrilled Over Transformation It Makes!

2 drops make this striking difference in SECONDS!

Clear, expressive eyes are fascinating. 2 drops of soothing, safe EYE-GENE in each eye floats away that tired, dull, strained, irritated look and feeling in SECONDS—dramatically lights up your whole expression! Safe EYE-GENE is like a tonic for your eyes. Use it every day. Insist on EYE-GENE. 25c, 60c, $1 eye-dropper bottles.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

DIAPERS
that are KNITTED TO FIT YOUR BABY

PANT-EASE diapers stay in place on the most active infant and the elasticity of this specially knitted cotton fabric keeps your baby comfortable at all times

No Folding—No Seams—No Loose Ends to slip, hang down or become bunched where they do not belong - - - -

EVEN DADDY CAN CHANGE

Pant-Ease diapers

Highly absorbent—Easy to launder and the double thickness with open ends, permits hanging so the air can circulate through each garment and — DRY IN LESS TIME

Pant-ease DIAPERS

are used and approved by Doctors, Nurses and thousands of modern Mothers

See Pant-ease at Department Stores and Shops or Send for FREE LITERATURE SAMPLE GARMENT 25¢

PANT-EASE INFANT WEAR CO. DEPT. 515 ARCADE, N.Y.

A SECRET THE SMARTEST WOMEN KNOW!
IT'S Smart-form CUSTOM FITTED
See ad on page 172

Quickly identify stored articles—Mark them with Dennison
GUMMED LABELS
One of many Dennison Handy Helpers for Home, School, and Office
On sale at stationery counters everywhere peditiously. He was dressed when there was a knock.

"Miss Ginny is downstairs," said Sigrid through the door. "She wants to borrow Mis' Maynes' pearls."

"I'll be down," said Henry, who was humming a tune while brushing his hair vigorously with two military brushes. "I only know I lo-o-ove you," he caroled, and Gertrude heard him through the door. "Love me and the wo-o-orld is mine." She heard his voice disappearing. "I care not for the stars that shine," Ginny heard him from the top of the stairs. "I only something or other that you are mine."

Ginny was standing in the living room, wearing brown moccasins, a long dirndl skirt, a short polo coat, and a colored handkerchief tied over her head and under her chin. From under it her thick, bright hair curled on her shoulders, and her face beamed with healthy energy.

"Look at pop!" she cried. "Home at five and all dressed up. Going somewhere?"

"Don't call me 'pop,'" said Henry energetically, kissing her on the cheek. "Why do you girls all dress like East European peasants?"

"Why not 'pop'?" asked Ginny, taking one thing at a time. "I always called you 'pop.'"

"You did not," corrected Henry Maynes. "When you were small you called me 'daddy.' When you were twelve you called me 'father.' When you went to college you came home calling me 'pop,' and your mother 'mom.' 'Pop' and 'mom.' What words! Quit it—call me anything; call me 'old man,' call me 'Hank'—call me anything but 'pop.'

We do not quite forgive a giver. The hand that feeds us is in some danger of being bitten. —EMERSON.

And, yes, I am going somewhere. I am stepping out. To the Cornell opening, to supper, maybe to dance. With your mother. My wife."

"But, darling, you can't," Ginny said ingenuously. "I mean mom—mother—can't. She's promised to stay with baby. Jack and I have tickets to the opening."

"Your mother's promises are nothing—worthless—absolutely worthless," said Henry, grinning. "I am the master in this house, mademoiselle; your mother promised to love, honor and obey me, and is about to do the latter. No go, Ginny. No free baby sitter tonight. How is the young man?" he broke off and walked over to see his grandson, whom Ginny had deposited in a corner of the sofa. "He looks fine," he said, as the small pink face gurgled with pleasure at his approach. "Wonderful eyes—like Gertrude's."

"You don't mean that mother is going to let me down!" exclaimed Ginny, more in perplexity than anger. "I do think families should co-operate!"

The word set Henry off again. "Co-operate! Young woman, I don't know what they taught you at Wellesley, but co-operate, of Latin derivation, means work with, operate together. Now we can't all operate together in going to the play, unless you can get another baby sitter. What you are suggesting is that we unoperate our plans so you can operate yours."

"But mother didn't say a thing about such plans," said Ginny.

"She didn't know about them, that's why," replied her father. "They were my plans, see? A surprise for my wife. Do you know what day this is?"

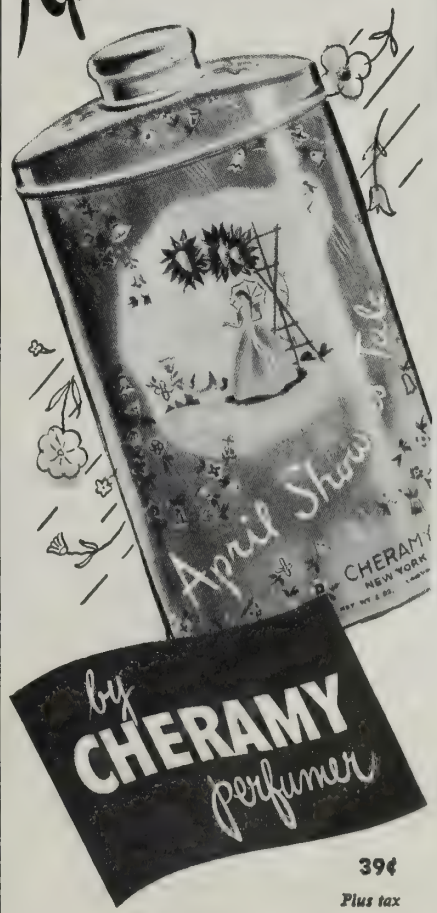
"The twenty-seventh," said Ginny. "Why?"

"It's our wedding anniversary. Twenty-fifth. Silver accepted." He began to chuck the baby under the chin, singing, quite loud, "I care not for the stars that shine."

"Don't," said Ginny. "You'll upset him. Babies shouldn't be poked at—and all noises frighten them."

"Then they should not live in Chicago," said Henry stubbornly. "He likes my song. He grins."

LITTLE LULU



Psst-the best dressed noses use Kleenex*!

Little Lulu says: YOU WIN BY A NOSE WHEN SOFT, STRONG KLEENEX IS YOUR CHOICE IN TISSUES DURING COLDS! BE CONSIDERATE OF OTHERS, TOO—DON'T SCATTER KLEENEX BUT USE THE NEAREST WASTE CONTAINER.

© International Cellucotton Products Co. ★ T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

THE FRAGRANCE OF YOUTH . . .

by CHERAMY perfumer
39¢ Plus tax

Hand made of human hair
An indispensable fashion accessory
All colors 20¢ White, grey, purple 25¢
Single or double mesh
VENIDA
The Guaranteed HAIR NET
rules the waves
FAMOUS VENIDA HAIR BEAUTY AIDS BY RIESER CO., N.Y.

"But about tonight," pursued Ginny. "Whatever shall I do?"

"I haven't any idea," said her father happily. "Why not stay home? Wash the dishes, darn the socks, be domestic—be married."

Ginny looked so disconsolate that her father's heart softened.

"Listen, precious," he said. "It's too bad it turned out that way. But it had to come sooner or later. You are abusing the kindness of your mother. If you want to bring the baby here for overnight, now and then, and we are going to be home, that's all right. But otherwise—find another baby sitter. Babies are darling, but not stimulating company, and why Gertrude should spend night after night sitting in your apartment, I do not see. I won't have it."

"But pop—father," Ginny moaned. "What's happened? This is all so new! I don't mean about tonight—but—if you don't want mother to be alone, why don't you go and sit with her—I mean, usually?"

Henry sat down and pulled his daughter beside him. "Listen, honey," he said, "you don't understand. Nothing is more pleasing to me than the company of your mother, but I like to be in my own surroundings."

"You can play cards—or listen to phonograph records—or whatever you and mom do together, when you are alone."

Henry stood up impatiently. "When your mother and I are together, maybe we don't do anything at all," he said. "Our spirits commune. We read. We talk. Or we don't talk. We listen to phonograph records. But our records. I don't like your records. I hate Shostakovich—all that noise. I don't like Prokofiev either. I like Brahms. The only records of yours that I can listen to are Bach, and I know those already by heart."

"You are so old-fashioned," said Ginny with a touch of scorn. "I suppose you can't help not appreciating ——"

"And I don't like that Picasso on your wall—that print," he mentioned stubbornly. "I'm old-fashioned, reactionary, whatever you like, but I've got just as much right to my prejudices as you have to yours. All I ask is that you grant your mother and me our rights. If you like—our right to be reactionary. Does it say in the Constitution that nobody has the right to be anything except what your crowd calls 'liberal'?"

He strode up and down, arguing as though in court.

"You think I have been swallowing everything contentedly all these years? Some of those teen-age friends! I remember when you used to have parties. Gertrude came in one day in a red suit, when you were having your little friends in, and I can still hear you saying, 'Mummy'—then it was mummy—'that suit is so loud. You know we don't like our mummys to be—well—conspicuous. We like you to look nice but not noticeable.' That suit wasn't loud. It was the first decent thing your mother had had in years, because in those days you were using up the clothes budget. Your mother looks lovely in light red. You couldn't wear it," he said unkindly. "Your hair's too red, your color is too high—you'd look vulgar—but up marches your mother like a lamb and puts on some shabby black things, just to fade out. And, 'Mummy, it's wonderful of you to prepare the food—but we like to be with ourselves.' So your mother mustn't intrude in her own living room."

"But all teen-agers are like that," Ginny protested. "When I look back I know I was impossible then. But it's just the age."

"Right," said her father. "But what's wrong with teen-agers' pretending good manners if they haven't got them? 'Assume a virtue, if you have it not,' unquote. Hamlet."

"They'd probably get neuroses," countered Ginny smartly.

"Now the parents get the neuroses," he said gloomily. "I remember when that college friend of yours, what's her name, Ellen—Ellen Waters, that was it—when she came here for Easter vacation. Sneered at your mother, 'I see you go in for gracious living,' as though it were a crime or at least 'undemocratic,' a word they now seem to attach to everything gentle and fastidious. What do they want? Ungracious living?"

Henry, who had uttered this tirade in an unpunctuated stream, paused for breath, and his daughter, who was growing increasingly astonished, got in a word.

"She had a very fine mind, she was Phi Beta Kappa ——"

"And what has that got to do with it?" bellowed her father. "One of the best minds I ever encountered—as pure intellect—was an embezzler; and ——"

"You think everyone who disagrees with your notions of society is a crook," yelled his daughter, now as angry as her father, who, while glaring at her, thought to himself, She is like Aunt Hat—and then with horrid realization—and so am I. Ginny takes after me, and that's what makes me so mad at her.

This made him quiet down, smile at her, and say, "Pet, what's this fight about?"

"That's what I want to know," cried Ginny, unappeased. "Why are you suddenly dragging up all these old things? And all because there was a mix-up in dates tonight. I know I can't ask mom—ma to sit with the baby tonight, and I'm disappointed, but I appreciate her rights. I think you are simply being cruel to me, very cruel—and it's all because you and mother were angry when Jack and I left this house for one of our own, which we certainly had our right to do." And Ginny's eyes filled with angry tears.

"Ginny, dear child," said her father, "that's just where you are wrong, and perhaps that gets us to the heart of the matter. Your mother was upset because she didn't think the apartment in the barracks was good enough for you; she thought if you kept on looking, you would eventually find something better. That was all. But I disagreed, because I knew exactly why you and Jack wanted to get away. You wanted to have privacy, because you and Jack quarrel sometimes, and you didn't want your father to see how he behaves, and take your side—nor your mother to see how you behave sometimes, and give you good advice. Isn't that the truth?"

Ginny looked at the floor, and said sulkily, "We don't quarrel—not often, I mean—and how did you know, anyway?"

"I knew, honey, because all young couples quarrel. It's part of learning how to be married. And it's a very private affair. I know, because I used to quarrel with your mother and make her dreadfully unhappy, when we were first married, and even afterward, when you came. And all because I loved her, so very . . . terribly."

"You did, father!" cried Ginny, and a shine came into her eyes. "You did, really? Over what?"

"In the first place, I was insanely jealous," said her father, his face humorous with remembrance. "I suppose I couldn't believe

(Continued on Page 184)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Cat

By Elizabeth Coatsworth

The cat wore a coat
The color of the sun,
The cat had paws
Which he kept white as milk,
His tail was like a train
Surpassed by none,
His nose was raspberry
And his whiskers silk.

The cat had pride
(His own and racial),
He moved with soft disdain,
He sat with grace,
His sharing of a room
Was purely spatial,
He emphasized a code,
Washing his face.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

We take everything lightly but you

We know you don't want to simmer this summer. so we dreamed up the lightest, filmiest nylon girdles and bras you've ever worn. They wash in a wink, never need ironing and mmm . . . what they do for you under your sheers and suntanners. And we didn't forget you want to feel as heavenly as you look, so we made them fit like a dream. too, the way all Warner's 3-Way-Sized girdles and bras do. Here are just a few of Warner's nylon lovelies. Pick the price to please your purse.

Le Gant girdle #594, $5. Alphabet Bra #2314, $2.50

1 Choose your length

If your girdle's too long you have to pull to keep it in place. Too short, it pulls at precious nylons. Warner's come in short, medium, long and extra long lengths. Step-in above comes in a matching pantie girdle. Bra is nylon marquisette.

Sta-Up-Top Le Gant #623, $10. Alphabet Bra #2299, $3.50

2 Choose your hip size

A too-wide girdle wrinkles at the sides. A too-narrow girdle binds your thighs. Warner's fit perfectly because they're hip-sized: straight, average and full. Girdle above has nylon taffeta front and back. Bra is nylon taffeta and exquisitely embroidered marquisette.

Sta-Up-Top Le Gant #844, $7.50. Alphabet Bra #2287, $2.50

3 Choose your control

Warner's do it with the light touch, whether you want a little control or a lot. Step-in above comes in a matching pantie girdle and both feature that famous waist-whittling band that won't roll over. Bra is nylon marquisette and nylon taffeta.

WARNER'S*

3-Way-Sized

Foundations and Bras

WORLD FAMOUS FOR LE GANT* • WARNERETTE* • STA-UP-TOP* • ABC* ALPHABET* "FREE-LIFT" • A'LURE* • REDFERN*

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off., The Warner Brothers Company, New York 16, Chicago 6, San Francisco 8

Singing Bathroom for a Bride—

WITH CRAFTSPUN SHOWER CURTAINS

"GARLAND" Design

- WON'T MILDEW, CRACK OR PEEL
- FADEPROOF DESIGNS
- SEAMS ELECTRO-HEAT WELDED FOR PERMANENCE
- 6 STUNNING BACKGROUND COLORS

IT COSTS SO LITTLE to give a bride this charming Craftspun* Shower ensemble of genuine Vinylite*. It's gay as a song, and designed by Lurelle Guild, famous decorator. Comes in color combinations to harmonize with any bathroom scheme. Craftspun Shower Curtains are so sturdy, the designs so permanent, any bride will bless you for such a lovely and practical gift. Shower and Window Curtains about $3.95 each.

*Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

CRAFTSPUN Shower Curtains

ALSO CRAFTSPUN LACE DINNER CLOTHS • WINDOW CURTAINS • KITCHENAIRES*

SEND FOR "FLOWER ARRANGEMENTS FOR LACE" 25¢

Beautifully illustrated book on Flower Arrangements by Mrs. M. Cochrane Cole, nationally known authority. Full-color pictures, easy directions for creating beautiful table arrangements the year 'round.

SCRANTON LACE COMPANY, Dept. L-4, Scranton, Pa.
Please send me "Flower Arrangements for Lace"; I enclose 25¢ in coin.

Name_____
(please print)

Street_____

City_____ Zone_____ State_____

(Continued from Page 182)

that such an angel could really be in love with such an oaf as I felt myself to be. If she talked animatedly with a man at a party, I saw the beginning of a love affair. Once, at a party in a crowded room, she sat down on the arm of a chair in which one of our men friends was sitting, and he put his arm across her back and—you won't believe it—afterward, at home, I made the most dreadful scene. She threw an ash tray at me."

Ginny cried, "Father! Mother did? Mother?"

Her father said, "Yes. It's incredible, but she did. It didn't hit me, though," he remembered, smiling. "I was even jealous of you, after you were born. She seemed to have no time for me, and I worked it out in my mind that I wasn't necessary any longer to her happiness."

"It's the baby Jack is jealous of," Ginny confessed. "And that's why I try to . . . get out with Jack—and—leave Jerry to mother."

"I understand that; I was like that," said her father tenderly. "But tell me, did Jack ever object to your bringing the baby over here, now and then, and leaving him with us?"

"No. We had a fight about it," Ginny murmured. "He said he'd like to be alone with me sometimes—not even the baby there—and he said it was wonderful you and mother would take him away sometimes; Jack said I cared more for the baby than for him, and I said he didn't love his own child, and so he didn't love me either—and that night it was pretty bad."

Ginny began to cry again, silently, tears running down her cheeks.

Her father put his arm around her. "Sweet," he said, "all this will pass, if you

If one advances confidently in the direction of his dreams, and endeavors to live the life which he has imagined, he will meet with a success unexpected in common hours.
—THOREAU.

are as good—and as clever—as your mother. Married love, Ginny—when it's right—it's the most wonderful thing in the world. The passion doesn't go, but the ugly passions that are first mixed up in it, they go, and it becomes compounded of tenderness, memories, shared tastes, pride, and the faith that is solider than any material security. I know now that your mother will never, never leave me, and she knows it of me too. Well, it took years to achieve that. Now we don't have to quarrel in order to kiss."

Ginny did not comment. She was thinking, They seem to me so old, but then she recalled that they had always seemed old—anyhow, from the time she was thirteen. Her father went on:

"So I was glad, when you went away to college, and glad when you married—once I saw that Jack is a fine fellow—and glad when you set up housekeeping on your own. Do you know why?"

Ginny was making rings in the carpet with her toe. She said nothing.

"I was glad because at last I had my wife back. Glad because now, at last, we could do the things together we hadn't been able to do all those years, either because we were too poor or your mother was too occupied with you. I was glad because we could be alone together, or with old friends, and with the pictures, the books, the music, the household arrangements, the conversations in which we, together, feel at home. I was glad that I could rush into the house and behave like the fool I sometimes am, without having to 'set an example' to you and your friends. Gin, you talk about inhibitions and frustrations, but the inhibitions kids impose on their parents are something never written about! And this baby sitting is part of it all. Darn it, Ginny, you and your family have been breaking up my marriage for the last three months! Even tonight, you almost pulled it off. How would you like to have to sit with our baby on your wedding night!"

Choose the creme shampoo beauticians use most . . . For glowing hair, mist-soft . . . dazzling clean, obedient . . . dandruff-free, film-free

Helene Curtis
creme shampoo
rich in emulsified lanolin

Why pay a dollar for 4 ounces? Get this giant 8 ounce jar!

twice as much for . . . $1

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping (Large Reg. Size, 60c)

AT BEAUTY SALONS, DRUG, DEPT. STORES

Ginny's voice pealed laughter. "Oh, father," she spluttered. "That's . . . boundless—surrealist—but I understand."

Gertrude's voice sounded clearly from the stairs. "I feared you were quarreling, but I'm glad I was wrong."

She came into sight, tall and white, her fair hair making little tendrils on her brow, her throat rising long and slim out of the V of her dress, the orchid perched near her cheek like an exotic bird, a silver glitter sparkling from her shoulders and her wrist, and the gray-brown softness of the fur nestled over one arm. Her scent entered the room with her.

"Do I look nice, Ginny," she asked, with shy expectancy, "in your extravagant father's presents?"

Ginny, who saw, for the first time in her life, her mother as a man might see her—a man in love with her—saw also, for the first time, her mother's magical, delicate desirability. She stared as at an apparition.

"Mother," she finally said, "you look . . . ravishing."

Henry, regarding his wife through his keen, observant eyes, saw that under the brush of eye shadow her lids were faintly crepey; that where her chin met her neck, there was the shadow of a hollow; and that on the slim arm outstretched toward Ginny the flesh drooped, almost imperceptibly, from the bone. The notice of these suffused his heart with poignant tenderness, enhancing his confirmation of her beauty by the melancholy knowledge of the passing of all loveliness. Ginny—no, not even Gertrude would understand that these autumnal signals moved him far more profoundly than the summer that still bloomed in the shine of her eyes, the sprightliness of her step, the thickness of her hair. His pulse quickened to drink in, utterly to absorb, this fleeting, tender, wonderful moment of her time.

He bowed, and the mockery was gone out of his courtly manner. "You are ravishing," he confirmed, kissing her brow.

Ginny sensed something beyond her comprehension. But suddenly she pulled both her parents to her, in a strong, youthful hug. "I think you are the two most beautiful people in the world," she cried, and a pang of apprehension passed briefly through her, that it might not be like that with her and Jack, twenty-five years from now. The apprehension sent tears into her eyes. Then, with something of her father's serious mockery, she said, "I wish you all possible happiness in your future life together."

"The same to you, my dear," said her father solemnly. The dimple broke in his cheek.

The baby was blowing noisy bubbles and Gertrude picked him up, murmuring warm, womanly responses.

"Don't, mom, don't," Ginny cried, grabbing him away. "Goodness, he's probably wet! He could ruin your dress!" She bundled him into his carriage. "Jack will wonder what's become of me. I must get home before he begins to dress. If he phones, you might break the news, and tell him I'm on my way. When he knows about the silver wedding, he won't mind." At the door she turned. "Good night," she called, "you love-mad pair. I wish I'd brought rice!"

THE PINK OF PERFECTION

(Continued from Page 61)

plans for the house that Jack will build one day. The bride of seasons past may now see her dreams come true.

This kitchen was designed for a one-story house with a combination living-dining room. The eating area is roomy enough to be comfortable for an extra couple, and set off from the work centers by the use of washable but dramatic flowered wall covering. There is just an echo of the paper in the work side of the kitchen to keep the room a harmonious unit. And what glamorous roses bloom fadelessly on that paper! They catch the whole spirit of June for the kitchen—surely it will be June in January here.

The working area is U shaped, with a corner sink set under a big picture window overlooking the garden terrace. The gas range is at the left of the sink, and the gas refrigerator at the right, with the door opening toward the spacious work counter for easy unloading. These units are in the traditional white, but the newest note in this kitchen is the dreamy color of the cabinets.

For now steel cabinets may be had in color with a baked-on enamel finish in clear, soft pastels. I couldn't imagine anything more lovely, for when you step in and look, the whole room has the color and enchantment of a garden in June. Rosy pink are the cabinets in the working area and sea-foam green are the serving-unit cabinets. The pink cabinets have green plastic counter tops and the green cabinets are topped with the rosy pink! And the glass doors of the wall cabinets open on a pink lining, like the inside of a shell.

Now these cabinets are fully as practical as the traditional white steel, but they lift the prose of kitchen work into lyric loveliness. They cost 10 per cent more than the standard white, but for those who respond to color they are worth the difference. They come in four colors, the pink and the green, a soft spring yellow and a misty gray. And they may be combined according to your own ideas if you feel an all-pink kitchen is too much perfection.

A new kind of soft green linoleum covers the floor with a tilelike design, and the ceiling echoes the green in a softer tone. The dark green background of the wallpaper is repeated in the painted surfaces, and the curtains framing the wide window are washable pink cotton.

In daytime this kitchen is a symphony of color and at night it is every bit as attractive. Recessed ceiling lights diffuse a clear glow over the main counters and a lamp which is part of the range gives a special light on the cooking.

Aside from being bemused with the beauty of color in the kitchen, I like especially the glass-fronted wall cabinet, for it gives an accent of depth to the room and shows the pretty china and glass to advantage as well. The rounded corners of the serving counter are a joy, for there will be no bumping into a sharp corner by the housewife en route to the living room.

So many houses have no cleaning closet, but in this kitchen a tall one fits in by the refrigerator and holds all the supplies in an accessible spot for the one-story house.

The cabinets themselves have been built with the user's convenience in mind. They do more than enclose space; they offer planned places to put the many supplies and tools dear to the heart of homemakers. Ventilated drawers for vegetables, sliding shelves for utensils, divided cutlery drawers for small things, small bins for sugar and flour, and bread in convenient drawers—all these add up to making work quick and easy.

Another unusual feature which interested me is the way the storage space under the counter near the back door is managed. Two wall cabinets set back to back are used under the counter instead of above, give space for garden tools or packages beside the service door, and cupboard room toward the kitchen besides.

This kitchen is planned to be equally satisfying to the woman who cooks like a cordon bleu graduate and the bride who furrows her brow over the book wondering what it means to baste the roast. It's an inspiration to the novice and an efficiency center for the adept, and a wonderful place for the man of the house to come home to after his bout in the business world.

There is good food and good fun ahead in this kitchen which is to my notion the pink of perfection. When the dishes and utensils are unpacked and the first market order is delivered the adventure in living will begin. This will be the place where the gang will gather while the coffee bubbles and the summer nights deepen outside. THE END

Is it any wonder more women cook on Magic Chef than on any other range only Magic Chef has the one-piece top burner that can be washed like a plate

Lift Out

Wash

This new burner makes good cooking easier for you in many ways. Its porcelain finish inside and out makes a clean, hot, fast flame. There is perfect heat distribution and instant touch control for easy adjustment to your exact cooking needs. The burner tray will hold a cup of spillovers without affecting the automatic lighting. Before you buy, compare Magic Chef feature for feature with any other range and then you'll know why more women cook on Magic Chef than on any other range.

Only Magic Chef has an automatic gas range for every purse and purpose SERIES 600—30" WIDE. Specially priced for small budgets, specially made for small kitchens. Full size oven and broiler. Exclusive Magic Chef features.

SERIES 2900—39" WIDE. Brings you modern cooking plus winter kitchen heat. Right side is complete Magic Chef Gas Range. Left side heats kitchen with gas, oil or coal and wood.

SERIES 1000—62" WIDE. The range of individuality for homes of distinction. Six top burners, two big ovens, griddle, broiler. Tailored in stainless steel. Cooks for two or two hundred.

Did You Know . . .

All burners, oven and broiler, too, light automatically on "CP" models. Magic Chef Automatic Gas Ranges operate equally well on city, "Pyrofax" or other bottled or tank gases. See your Magic Chef dealer or local gas company. American Stove Company, Dept. L-4, St. Louis.

© 1949, American Stove Company

At Stillmeadow we do not need to worry about being too modern. Milk glass and cranberry glass and the old handmade sea-green goblets from Maine—these are friends, whether they are in fashion or not.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

NEW peas cooked with a sprig of mint bubble in the pan. Picking peas on a June morning is pleasant; it is a mild form of treasure hunting. For after you go clean down the row, you turn back for a last look, and a hundred more pods are visible, caught in a new slant of light. How cool and smooth the small green pearls come from the secret pods too!

For supper a big bowl of those first peas with plenty of freshly grated pepper and a nugget of gold butter, bread warm from the oven, coffee that means what it says, and for dessert another slice of bread with wild sweet-clover honey: good fare.

The strawberry man has his big sweet ruby berries ready. We gave up raising our own, because Jill says she would rather feed the birds something else than berries. Something she doesn't have to hoe and weed and transplant all the time. The strawberry man lives just a piece down the road anyway; and his berries are perfect. He lives alone in a tiny one-room shack, and his whole world is spread around him in a small sloping acre or two. He is thin and dark, with very bright dark eyes, and he never changes. We have known him for sixteen years and he is as he was the first day we stopped for berries.

We freeze as many berries as we can, and have strawberry shortcake every other day. Fresh strawberry jam for tea is a delight, and a nice change from winter's cinnamon toast.

Mamma used to make sun preserves, but I never get around to it. I can remember running out to look at the trays of big ripe berries that were outside the back door covered with clean muslin.

The smell of the juice was rich and sweet, and almost any little girl would have to eat some around the edges. The plump Wisconsin bees were there, too, making pleasant hums. The sun preserves were dark as old garnets and spicy sweet, but I know they were time-consuming to make. In those days, women made whatever was good and never minded how tedious the process, but now we live in a short-cut age.

But housekeeping is fun, and I think the women who hate it lack imagination. It is one job where you enjoy the results right along as you work. You may work all day washing and ironing, but at night you have the delicious feeling of sunny clean sheets and airy pillows to lie on. If you clean, you sit down at nightfall with the house shining and smelling faintly of wax, all yours to enjoy right then and there.

And if you cook—ah, if you cook—that creation you lift from the oven goes right to the table.

One way to look at it, of course, is that women's work is never ended, and I have heard housekeepers say they hate to make cakes because they get eaten right up anyway. You can make it drudgery if you want to, but it isn't. And it is not monotonous either, for no day is ever really the same. Lucky the woman who has a home and can live in what she is creating!

Thinking about what home means, I really got angry with a hot and violent anger when I read a newspaper headline some time ago. It read: Development Bans

AMAZING SELF-POLISHING SIMONIZ FOR FLOORS

OUTSHINES THEM ALL!

Costs less to use because it lasts longer!

Millions of housewives are switching to Self-Polishing Simoniz. They find it gives longer wearing beauty and keeps their floors brighter. For the same lasting loveliness that makes Simoniz so famous for cars—insist on Self-Polishing Simoniz for your floors.

Sold by grocery, hardware, variety, drug, paint, 5 cents to $1, auto accessory, department stores—linoleum dealers everywhere. THE SIMONIZ COMPANY, CHICAGO 16, ILL.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

SELF-POLISHING SIMONIZ FOR FLOORS

FOR LINOLEUM, FINISHED WOOD, ASPHALT OR RUBBER TILE AND TERRAZZO FLOORS

*T. M. REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Who's Calling?

It might be Daddy, telephoning from his office downtown. Or Aunt Betty, to ask them over for a visit. Or a friend of Mother's, about a party.

When the telephone rings, the whole family comes to attention—and a tingle of expectation runs through everyone. That's half the pleasure of having a telephone. Not only can you make calls but other people can call you!

And more people can call each other today than ever before because there are 40% more telephones—about 9,000,000 more—than three years ago. In that short time, your telephone has grown in value—yet its cost is still low.

As a matter of fact the increases in telephone rates average only a penny or so a call.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

Outdoor Washline! A subdivision in Chicago, planned for ten thousand people, was being built, it said, and new owners must agree to hang their washing in the basement, summer and winter, so the flapping clothes would not spoil the natural beauty of the area. High-voltage lines, dogs and cats are also barred.

Take those flapping clothes. I wonder what could be lovelier than a line of pink and jonquil rompers, gay little socks, pastel baby blankets. And snowy sheets, bright bath towels, flowered luncheon cloths blowing on a line have as much beauty as a modern painting, for the eye that can see beauty. Basement indeed—who wants clothes dried in the basement when the dazzle of sun and the sweet fragrance of fresh air are wasting outside?

All the cockers have been digging for moles. Linda is also a bird girl, and she runs around and around under the apple tree, in a frenzy of excitement. Maeve, the setter, feels the same way, and the two of them prance on their hind toes, leaping wildly, high in the air. The birds pay no attention. Little Sister runs closer to the ground in her interest. Rabbits or squirrels are fine, but no birds.

Sometimes Maeve is too bouncy for the little folks, and the other day she was jumping on Linda. I ran to the door and shouted, "No, Maeve, no!" She ran hastily behind the big maple by the kennel and hid. I waited in the doorway and Linda went on about her bird chasing. In a moment Maeve poked her head around the trunk of the tree, peeking. She had thought I would be back at my typewriter and she could pounce freely on Linda again. I would forget her if she were hidden. I looked sternly at her, and her head popped out of sight. In a moment she peeked again, and the look of amazement on her face was wonderful to see. I was still there, still looking! We played hide-and-seek for ten minutes, and then she gave up the idea of teasing Linda and started after birds herself.

The young man who has not wept is a savage, and the old man who will not laugh is a fool.

—GEORGE SANTAYANA.

June is really the perfect month in New England, for the temperature is most equable. It is the month of flowering, with the white picket fences drifted with rambler roses, the purple and gold and ivory iris following hard on the tall and elegant tulips and the sweet narcissus. The white pansies wintered over this year, and in the Quiet Garden they make a border of loveliness.

I like all little flowers; in fact, most little things. The miniature viola and the portulaca and sweet alyssum are old favorites of mine because, perhaps, it is a special mystery to see how things so tiny can be so complete and perfectly formed. Lily of the valley is another, with every tiny pearl-colored bell so carefully wrought. I was brought up to believe the fairies rang them at night, and for all I know, they still do.

THERE is much to do during the days, for all the dogs need grooming and trimming and the garden furniture did not all get fixed last autumn when it should have been. The weeds grow with terrible, deadly speed, and the grass needs mowing. It is the time, too, to reorganize and defrost the freezer, and tuck in the first of the new crops.

But there is always time to carry trays for lunch to the garden and eat without too much rush. Because in June one feels the security that summer has just begun, there is time enough for dreaming. Over coffee, we watch the melodic flight of the butterflies, brief lyrics of summer. Decide the iris must be separated, but not for a long time. Wonder if the fence needs painting—it can go until fall. Feel the asparagus bed is a dreadful mess, but August is soon enough to worry about that.

Actually, there is nothing of the lotus eater about anyone native to New England. Idleness is as scarce as maple sirup out of season. You will look hard to find a lazy yard around even the poorest little house in our valley. But in mid-June we may just nibble one lotus petal, and spend a few idle hours.

Housework is at a minimum because we are outdoors all the time anyway. Summer country clothes are easy to do up, thanks to the imagination of the manufacturers and designers of today. I can remember the days of endless starching and ironing of lace trimmings, and how we never went out without polishing those white shoes!

Now a handful of nylon makes a complete costume, or a few ounces of silk, or a wisp of cotton. Half the summer clothes don't need ironing at all. And the slacks and play suits iron as easily as a handkerchief.

WHEN plastics really come into their own, the whole house will be furnished with curtains that can be hosed off and hung back. Upholstery will be wiped off once in a while with a careless rag. Wallpaper will all be washable, woodwork stainproof, furniture finished in such stuff as makes pouring boiling water on table tops a good sport for Junior on rainy days. It is all very wonderful and rather appalling.

It sometimes frightens me when I read of some new wonder material; I get the feeling that it is just too much. When we get ourselves mechanized and modernized to the nth degree, will we put our energies to work on world affairs, on great studies, on the arts? Freed from the ordinary restrictions of daily living, shall we be free and happy? Well, I hope so, but I doubt it. The chances are we shall still be just too busy to use all that gift of time properly.

As far as Stillmeadow is concerned, I don't need to worry about its being too modern. There are limits to what a pre-Revolutionary house will endure from this generation. We shall go on the rest of our days jacking things up here and there, scrubbing the woodwork, painting old handmade clapboards. And waxing the antique furniture.

Many of the modern things are exquisitely beautiful—the glass, the silver, the linens, the plastics—and the colors are used so expertly. But the heritage of the past is lovely too. Milk glass and cranberry glass and the old handmade sea-green goblets from that attic in Maine, and the pair of old French scent bottles with the delicate blue and pink flowers and the gold leaves—these are things to cherish.

The old maple four-poster with the holes where the ropes once tied, the chest with one pull missing, the pine comb-back chair—these are my friends whether they are in fashion or out.

And I feel the same way about other heritages from the past. Such as integrity and honor and faith in God and love. Getting ahead, ambition, intelligence about material gains, these are nice and modern, but the old-fashioned virtues are good foundations to build the new world on.

After the day is over, the cockers lie on the warm stones of the terrace, just enjoying being alive. Even Maeve's wild Irish spirit is calm as she thoughtfully chews a piece of kindling picked from the basket. ("No, Maeve, you'll get splinters.")

The house guests—and in June there are always house guests—drift out to the garden to talk, or sit inside by the applewood fire and read whatever they want to finish today. It may be anything from Winston Churchill's book to the newest murder mystery. Somebody else is always playing records in the front room.

Later on, everyone will gather around the fire for cucumber sandwiches, just to try the last of the frozen-cucumber mix, or cheese and crackers, but in the twilight hours life at Stillmeadow is various and scattered.

Honey and I always walk around the house, trying to take into ourselves the loveliness of June. Little Sister skips out, too, and heels along like a proper Obedience dog.

The valley is silent, the air is sweet. And I think again of Masefield and his own June twilight:

Dusky it grows. The moon!
The dews descend.
Love, can this beauty in our hearts end?

THE END

Printed in U. S. A.